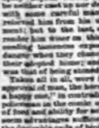
Taken all in all, were it not for the disapproval of man, the heron's "lot would be a happy one," in contradiction to that of the policeman in the comic opera. Abundance of food and ability for self-protection would seem advantages sufficient to compass all the desirable ends of bird life. Their range is quite extensive, going beyond the United States. They are resident south of the frost line, far into Central America. Many attitudes of these herons are extremely graceful, and their carriage and near appearance is always most pleasing. They are described as "above, dark green with bronzy iridescence, and below, mostly dark brownish ash or wine color, varied with white." The eyes are brilliantly golden, while the lores, or naked skin about the face, as well as the legs, are greenish yellow. A well-developed crest of dark metallic green crowns the head and is always erected when the bird is excited.

The lesser herons, though common enough in tropical countries, are quite peculiar to North America in the temperate zone. Conspicuous birds, as a feature of our rural life, are now entirely too scarce. It is devoutly to be hoped that thoughtless people, at no distant day, will find reason to give up the senseless persecution of them.

JUDGE MERRICK.

The Eminent Washington Jurist Recently Deceased.

Judge William Merrick, who died recently in Washington, was one of the ablest jurists Maryland has ever produced. President Cleveland appointed him to the Supreme bench of the District of Columbia as a vindication from the [illegible] disgrace visited upon him twenty years ago, when he also occupied the district bench. He had been appointed Judge by President Pierce in 1854, and his record as a judge on all questions apart from those affecting slavery was excellent. The court of which he was judge was, however, legislated out of existence in 1863. An interesting incident that occurred during the early months of the war had Judge Merrick for its central figure.



JUDGE MERRICK.

A boy had enlisted in the army, and his parents objected. They applied to Judge Merrick for a writ of habeas corpus. He issued it. The man who attempted to serve it was arrested by Fitz John Porter. On the day the writ was returnable a sentinel was placed at Justice Merrick's door by Secretary Seward, and he stayed there five weeks. During all that time Judge Merrick remained indoors. On his retirement from the bench in 1863 he went back to Baltimore to practice law. In 1871 and 1873 Judge Merrick represented the Fifth Maryland district in Congress. His father was a United States Senator from Maryland, and his brother, R. T. Merrick, was famous as one of the defense in the Andrew Johnson impeachment trial, as one of the counsel before the Electoral Commission, and afterwards in the Star Route cases.

NEGROES AS SOLDIERS.

General Lord Wolseley Pays the Africans a High Compliment.

I do not think Europeans learn drill so quickly as the Bantu or the Zulu. It is astonishing to see the zeal, the undaunted interest and application these savages bring to bear upon all military lessons given to them, writes Lord Wolseley in the Fortnightly Review. They take the utmost pride in being soldiers and in acquiring any art or drill or exercise connected with the management and handling of arms, or the movement of armed bodies. There seems to be something in the disposition and genius of the common stock from which they come, some hereditary bias in their brain, in their very blood, which fits them for the easy acquisition of a soldier's duties. And yet many of these races who thus quickly acquire an excellence in drill, etc., can not be taught any mechanical handicraft; indeed, many can never even learn to draw a straight line.

The African in our West India regiments has always displayed the child-like affection for and implicit reliance upon the officers who treated him well, which is so marked a feature in the character of the negro slave. His obedience to orders, especially as a sentry, was remarkable. Many amusing stories on this point were current at Government House when I was at Cape Coast Castle. A previous Governor, finding that his native servants were given to robbing him by daily carrying away bundles of things from his kitchen, had orders given to the sentry before his door that no one was to be allowed out carrying any parcel with him. Very shortly afterward the Governor, in a hurry to consult his Chief Justice, put some papers into a dispatch-box to take with him to the judge's house. He reckoned without his host, however, for the sentry, standing in front of him with bayonet at the charge, would not allow him to pass with the offending dispatch-box. The Governor remonstrated, and urged that it was he himself who had given the order, but all to no purpose, for in the quaint and amusing gibberish which these men speak, and emphasizing his words in a very determined fashion with his bayonet, the sentry said that his "copral" had told him not to allow any one with a bundle to pass, and the "copral's" order was his law.

"Look here, captain," began the prisoner who had passed a couple of days in a cell at headquarters, "I want some information!"

"About what?"

"Why don't you provide these cells with beds, carpets, rocking-chairs and other comfortable things, so as to make a prisoner's stay pleasant?"

"Why didn't you go to a first-class hotel instead of coming here?" queried the captain brusquely.

"Ah! I see. I tumble. Nuff sed. It all depended on me, and I skipped the tra-la-la."—Detroit Free Press.

Wanted His Share Guaranteed.

Uncle John—You know, my boy, that every one of these advances is charged against the amount I intend willing you. At the rate you're going on, there soon will be nothing left.

Nephew—Well, uncle, you can't blame me for wanting to have a little of it myself before the lawyers get hold of it.—Puck.

A Valuable Suggestion.

Mrs. Smith—When John and I were married he stayed at home every night during the first year, but since that time he is never at home except for his meals. Can you suggest any plan by which I can induce him to stay at home?

Mrs. Jones—Employ a pretty servant girl.—Arcola Record.

There is a great deal of power attached to Sullivan's left, but if John L. keeps on drinking prior to his fight with Kilrain, Sullivan's left for certain.

SECRETARY COLMAN.

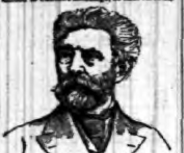
Commissioner Colman is the first Secretary of the Department of Agriculture. This new Cabinet seat, which seems now rather ridiculous, will undoubtedly be justified as time goes on and the new department takes within its scope a number of bureaus which are now excrescences on other departments. For instance, the Land Office might just as well be connected with the Department of Agriculture as with the Department of the Interior. The Signal Service might be taken from the War Department and be put under the Secretary of Agriculture. The Inter-State Commerce Commission would do as good work under the Agricultural Department as under the Interior Department.

There is abundance of work and a decided need for a new department. It will seem a little strange for a time to have eight instead of seven Government officials, but there was a time when there were but six, and the Secretary of War was also the Secretary of the Navy; and it was several years before the Attorney-General was admitted to Cabinet meetings, so that virtually Washington had in his Cabinet but five Ministers. General Harrison will have eight—a fact which may be lucky for him in the distribution of party favors.



SECRETARY COLMAN.

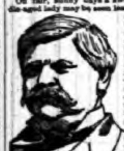
General Colman was born in Richfield Springs, N. Y., in 1824. He went to Louisville, Ky., and began to study law, supporting himself teaching school. It was while there that he fell in with Michael C. Kerr, afterwards Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The two came to be like brothers, keeping bachelor quarters together. They practiced several years together at New Albany, Ind., and prospered. Governor Colman was elected district attorney at New Albany, in 1851, and two years later moved to St. Louis, where he established Colman's Rural World, one of the prominent agricultural papers in the country. He was the Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor in 1868, but was defeated. In 1874 he was again nominated, and elected, and served a full term. He has been prominent in agricultural matters for many years. President Cleveland appointed him Commissioner of Agriculture to succeed George B. Loring in April, 1885.

SENATOR VANCE.

His Affliction with His Eyes—Brief Sketch of His Public Life.

On fair, sunny days a sweet-faced, middle-aged lady may be seen leading about the streets in the western part of Washington a stout, white-haired old gentleman, whose eyes are closely bandaged with a green silk handkerchief. This pair is Senator Zeb Vance and his wife. A few days ago he had an operation performed on his left eye and it was removed. Necessarily he suffers much pain, but in most respects he is making a rapid recovery. Vance is one of the remarkable men from the South. He has gained experience from almost all walks of life. He was in his early years a hotel clerk at Warm Springs, Tenn. He afterward studied for both law and the ministry. During the war he was Governor of North Carolina, and an independent one, too; he quarreled with the rabid theoretical politicians of the State and maintained himself successfully against them. At the close of the war he was arrested, and for several months he was an inmate of the Old Capitol prison in Washington. While there he spent his time in reading theological books and teaching the Lord's Prayer to the little son of the warden.

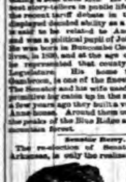


SENATOR VANCE.

He was several times elected to the Senate after the war, but did not succeed in taking a seat until 1879. He was one of the best story-tellers in public life, and during the recent tariff debate in the Senate he displayed decided ability as a debater. He is said to be related to Andrew Jackson and was a political pupil of John C. Calhoun. He was born in Buncombe County, where he lives, in 1830, and at the age of twenty-two he represented that county in the State Legislature. His home there, named Gombroon, is one of the finest in the South. The Senator and his wife used to live in a primitive log cabin up in the mountains, but a few years ago they built a very fine Queen Anne house. Around them on all sides are the peaks of the Blue Ridge and a beautiful mountain forest.

Senator Berry.

The re-election of Senator Berry, of Arkansas, is only the realization of a foregone conclusion. The prediction has been made for a year past that he would be his own successor. He comes of one of the old families of the South, and is a splendid-looking man, standing six feet tall in his stocking feet. He was Mr. Garland's successor four years ago when that gentleman went into Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet. Senator Berry was born in Alabama and went with his parents to Arkansas while yet a boy. He grew up to manhood in the little village of Berryville, there acquiring his legal education and beginning his professional labors. He served through the war in the Confederate army, and at the battle of Corinth lost a leg, so that he walks on a crutch. He was for a number of years a member of the Arkansas Legislature, and circuit judge for a time, and in 1882 was elected Governor. He is an accomplished billiard player and a very companionable man in private life.



SENATOR BERRY.

DECREPIT HEN FRUIT.

How Rotten Eggs Are Utilized by the Confectioners of the Hub.

They must utilize pretty nearly every thing in Boston, according to the following anecdote by the correspondent from that city to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. He says:

Every thing in this world, they say, has some use. Even rotten eggs are sold here at three or four cents a dozen to Hebrews of the lowest class, who appreciate their gamey flavor. This is not the only employment, however, that has been found in Boston for back-number products of the barn-yard. Only a few days ago a friend of the writer chanced to see a greengrocer in the act of dumping a barrelful of eggs from a city wharf into Massachusetts Bay. While in the very act the tradesman was hastily interrupted by a well-dressed passer-by who exclaimed:

"My dear sir, what are you doing?"

"Dumping bad eggs," responded the greengrocer, briefly.

"Are they hopelessly bad?"

"Awful."

"Chirp?"

"Past that."

"Give you a dollar for the lot."

"Done," said the greengrocer. "But may I ask you what you want them for?"

"Cream puffs," answered the stranger. "Bad eggs are as good as fresh ones for making them, with a few chemicals thrown in. Pay you a dollar a barrel for all you'll send me. I'm a confectioner."

There are great cold-storage houses in Boston, by the way, which are filled every summer with millions of eggs, to be taken out at this season and sold for "strictly fresh" at fabulous prices. They taste very well, too, notwithstanding so many months of keeping, but get bad almost immediately. People generally are not aware that many of the eggs they buy are brought all the way from China, where a whole nation has been in the poultry business for seven thousand years.

Before the Court.

Police Judge—What is the charge against the prisoner?

Policeman—Stealing a rope.

Judge (to prisoner)—If I were as ugly as you are, I'd hang myself with a rope.

Prisoner—That shows, judge, that you haven't as much sense as I have, even if I ain't as pretty as you are?

Judge (angrily)—Do you have the impudence to assert that I'm a fool?

Prisoner—No, your honor, I never asserted that you are a fool. What's the use? You can't conceal it.—Arcola Record.

ALONE AMONG THE SHADOWS.

I'm alone among the shadows,
And I'm waiting for the light
To chase away the visions
Of the dreary, weary night.
Like a sightless child deserted
My uncertain way I grope—
I'm alone among the shadows,
But my soul is full of hope.

I'm alone among the shadows,
But my doubts and fears are past,
For I feel the sweet assurance
That the light will come at last;
A ray from hope's bright beacon
Comes through the gloom to me—
I'm alone among the shadows,
But my heart is light and free.

I'm alone among the shadows,
But I hear a sweet voice say:
"You would not prize the daylight
If it were always day."
And so I'll strive in earnest
To keep from error free,
And He who strengtheneth the weak
Will surely comfort me.

A FORECASTLE YARN.

Terrible Experience with Yellow Fever Aboard Ship.

The long, hot day was over, and with the setting sun had come a breeze, before which the good ship Bristol was steadily slipping through the oily-looking water. Six bells had just been struck; the saloon was almost deserted, and the poop was peopled with weary passengers, reveling in the soft, cool wind and the departure of our enemy, the sun. The main deck was alive with the midship passengers, and the watch on deck, who, mixing indiscriminately, lounged and chatted and smoked and slept as their inclination moved them.

I had come up on the forecastle-head to enjoy a quiet cigar and to delight my soul with the wondrous beauty of the night. Up here, every thing was quiet, and I was alone, save for the man on the lookout, who leaned on the opposite rail as motionless as a statue, and evidently occupied with his own thoughts. Looking aft, the ship was almost in darkness, being shadowed with the mountains of canvas which rose dim and mysterious toward the sky. The murmur of voices was hushed into a kind of lullaby, under whose drowsy music both ship and ocean seemed to be dreaming. Overhead, the tropical stars hung out their white lamps against the violet sky, and set long trails of light glittering across the dark water until they broke in crystal shivers on the hull. The light from the open ports of the saloon looked hot and yellow, and only enticed a dull reflection from the sea. Some one who was playing on the piano in the music room had drifted into the loved strain of "Home, Sweet Home," and was sending it stealing out over the sea like a benediction. Round the sharp cut-water the spray was rising in a fairy fountain, whose drops rang like a chime of tiny silver bells as they met the waves again. Down in the cool depths a shoal of fish were playing round the ship's head, looking, as they moved through the phosphorus-laden water, like fish-shaped fragments of solid rainbow gone mad.

Thus I rested and was at peace until my reverie was broken by the sound of footsteps ascending the forecastle ladder. I turned and was face to face with my cabin companion, Mr. Ralph Stevenson. "Glorious night, isn't it?" he said.

"Magnificent," I answered, and then added: "It's not only the present delight that I am thankful for, but for the memory it will be in days to come, for you know 'a thing of beauty is a joy forever.'"

"I don't know about that," he rejoined; "it depends wholly on the circumstances under which one has seen it. Do you know this lovely night has called to my mind one of the most unpleasant incidents in my life?"

"Indeed; what was that?"

"Sit down here on this coil of rope, and if you care to hear it, I will tell you as we smoke."

I gladly accepted his offer, and Stevenson began:

When I was a young fellow, years ago in London, I was in the employ of an uncle of mine who was at the head of a large firm of ship-owners. My health had broken down owing to hard work and a severe season, and the doctor ordered me a long rest and a sea voyage. The firm at once gave me the required leave, and shipped me off as sole passenger in one of their best trading clippers. We had a fine passage, and arrived safely in the magnificent harbor of Rio de Janeiro. The port was crowded, and we had to anchor outside and wait our turn to be berthed. We lay for some days, during which the heat was intense, when, all unannounced, there burst over the city and the shipping one of those terrible outbreaks of yellow fever so common there. The disease spread with fearful rapidity, and soon our ship was one among the crowd lying at the quarantine anchorage and flying the hateful yellow flag.

It was terrible to lie day after day on the glassy sea and watch the doomed city through the haze and the ships nearer at hand. Constantly the yellow flags were fluttering down to half-mast, as a signal to the shore boats to come off and take away the bodies for interment. All our crew had deserted at the first, with the exception of the captain, the carpenter, a tall, thin Scotchman from the Clyde, and a black cook named Jacob. These, with myself, formed the whole ship's company. Suddenly the captain was struck down, and by influence we managed to get him taken off to one of the hospitals ashore. Next day Chips—as they always call the carpenter at sea—was laid low. Jacob came and told me that Chips was in his bunk, very bad, so I went on the main-deck and visited him. I found him raving in fever. We flew the signal for the doctor. After awhile he came off, said it was a bad case, prescribed, gave some directions as to medicine and disinfectants and departed. Jacob and I took turns in watching poor Chips. On the evening of the next day I was pacing the poop, utterly weary and sick at heart. The red-hot sun went down at last, and the stars came out. The night was brilliantly calm and still. The lights on the esplanade of Rio began to twinkle out into the darkness. Far above them on the overhanging terraces, clusters of light—marking the position of countless villas—hung on the blackness of the steep back-ground like diamonds set in jet. The dim outlines of the huge mountains which rise behind the harbor loomed through the darkness in the faint starlight. The Corcovado and the Gavea could be seen head and shoulders above the rest. Towards the open sea the black form of the Pao de Assucar, which guards the entrance of the harbor, stood like a solemn sentinel. Near it could be descried the glimmering of the lighthouses far away at the heads. I paced the deck trying to fight against a feeling of utter lassitude and depression. I had a terrible headache, a taste like blood in my mouth, and felt aching and feverish all over.

Presently the black cook Jacob came on to the quarter-deck, and, touching his cap, said: "Please, sir, won't you come down and have some tea? It has been ready for half an hour."

"Thanks, Jacob—but how is Chips?"

His black face became grave at once as he replied: "Please, sir, he died nearly two hours ago; but I did not like to disturb you, so I laid him straight and still, tied a handkerchief round his poor thin face, and came away softly and shut the door." Here the poor fellow's voice broke into a sob.

"Make the flag half-mast Jacob."

"No good now, sir; they won't come off till daylight."

"Oh yes, you are right; I forgot it was dark."

"But come and have something to eat, sir," persisted the faithful fellow; "you must be ready to drop."

"All right, Jacob; I will," I answered; and then, as I turned to go, I said: "Jacob, come aft and have your tea in the saloon. To-night we may as well keep each other's spirits up."

"Thank you, sir," he said and disappeared.

After a little while, I went down into the saloon; and had the circumstances been different, I would have roared with laughter at the scene which met my eyes. Jacob had undergone quite a transformation, and how it was managed in the time I was at a loss to guess. He was rigged out in his best suit, and in all the glory of a dress shirt of startling whiteness decorated with diamond studs. He had not seated himself until I arrived, and stood contemplating himself and his surroundings in the mirror over the sideboard, his ebony countenance shining with ineffable satisfaction. All through the meal his look of self-satisfied importance amused me greatly; but when tea was over the old feeling of depression returned with renewed force. King Death reigned over the ship, and the majesty and terror of his presence were all around.

"Come into my cabin, Jacob," said I, "when you have cleared up, and we will have a smoke together."

He agreed, cheerfully, and I left the saloon. My cabin was under the break of the poop, and had a window looking right on the main-deck, as well as the usual door-ward portholes. Before lighting my lamp I looked out at the quiet ship. The full tropical moon had risen while we were at our meal, and filled the deck and the rigging with her white radiance. About ten yards from the window stood the deck-house where the dead man was lying, and the moonlight glittered on its window and the brass-work of the door. While I looked, I wondered: "Shall I die, too, during this awful visitation?" Then I thought I will just write directions as to what is to be done with my clothes and letters, now while I can.

I sat down at a small table at the other side of the cabin, lit the little brass swing lamp, and began to write. I had hardly begun when Jacob knocked at the door, and when I called entered the room pipe in hand. Asking him to sit down, I told him I would finish writing soon. He went over and, sitting at the open window, commenced to smoke. The night was so utterly still that the scratching of my pen seemed loud and aggressive. Suddenly I was startled by Jacob's pipe going crash on the floor of the cabin; and looking at him I saw that his black face had become a light gray color, and that his eyes were starting out of his head. Before I could move or speak I heard the squeak of a door-handle softly turned. I crossed beside the negro, and gazed at the door of the house which contained the dead carpenter. As I looked my heart seemed to burst and my hair stood up. The door slowly opened, and out into the bright moonlight came the tall figure of the dead man! It seemed to pause and hesitate for a moment, and then advanced with muffled tread straight to the saloon entrance and my cabin. The moon shone full on the ghastly face, bound about with an old red handkerchief, from which the unclosed dead eyes shone as from under a cowl. On it came, nearer and nearer, while I remained frozen with horror. We heard the soft footstep approach the passage-door, and then a heavy fall and all was still.

At that moment Jacob gave a fearful shriek and fainted. This brought me to my senses; and stepping over the prostrate black I seized the lamp and hurried out. There lay the ghastly figure across the doorway. I had not been dreaming then, and it was no fancy. I almost dropped the lamp in my renewed terror. But I braced myself together, and stooping over the body turned it on its back. As I did so a faint sigh came from the white lips. I was a man again, and roared: "Jacob, you idiot, come here; the carpenter is not dead at all."

"Well, my story is out. We carried him back to bed and nursed him tenderly, and in the morning the doctor came, but we said nothing to him about the performance of the night before. The fact was, Jacob had mistaken the deadly trance of the yellow fever for actual death, and I, being so broken down with watching, had never questioned his statement.

Poor Chips had revived a little, and in the strength of delirium had wandered on deck; and so it all came about as I have told you. Would you believe it! That carpenter afterward recovered and is alive at the present day. The captain, too, got better. Neither Jacob nor I caught the fever, and not many weeks later we left that accursed place and were bowling along for dear old England. A soft, still night at sea like this, always makes me think of that adventure, and I do not relish it even yet.

One—two, three—four, five—six, seven—rang out from the poop. The watch suddenly drops his musings and answers on the deep-toned forecastle bell. I hop off the coil of rope, and remark:

"I say, Stevenson, your wretched story has given me cold shivers all down my back, and I shall have the nightmare every night for the next month. Let us go to the ladies on the quarter-deck and try to forget it."

He laughingly assents, and we throw down our cigars into the sea and join the merry crowd.—Chambers' Journal.

BLACKSTONE JUNIOR.

How Rising Young Lawyers Overwork Their Gigantic Brains.

Nobody can possibly have any idea how young lawyers, particularly young lawyers in the city courts, overwork their brains, unless he goes to the cross-examination of a witness by a young member of the bar. It is worth paying admission to hear.

The witness, says the Detroit Commercial Advertiser, has given in his testimony, and is turned over like a lamb to the slaughter, or a rabbit to the tender mercies of an anaconda. There is a hushed stillness as the anaconda prepares to throw its voluminous folds around the trembling victim, crush its bones, and then swallow the shapeless mass. It is perfectly awful. The brow becomes corrugated with deep thought; the glittering eye is bent on the guilty wretch of a witness who seems conscious of his approaching doom. Slowly and solemnly, like the supreme head of the church promulgating officially some entirely new dogma, the words reverberating like minute guns at sea, the coming Blackstone says:

"Did—you—not—swear—on—your—direct examination—that—your—name—was—Pete Snooks?"

The witness said he did.

Then the lawyer buries his massive brow in his hands and thinks, and thinks. Suddenly running his fingers through his hair, he fixes his glittering orbs as if they could see the buckle on the back of the witness's vest, and asks:

"Now, sir, I will ask you on your oath to tell this court and jury, without any hemming or hawing, giving a categorical answer to a categorical question—I ask you now whether your name is not Peter Snooks instead of Pete Snooks, as you swore it was a moment ago?"

Witness—"My name—"

"Halt! May it please your honor, the witness is trifling with this court and jury. He is evidently trying to lug in hearsay evidence. According to second Greenleaf, page 299—"

"The witness will proceed," said the court, yawning.

"Your honor, during the whole course of my long and extensive practice—"

"The witness will proceed."

"Your honor will please note my exception. I intend that the Supreme Court shall pass on this case."

Witness—"Yes."

"Are you a resident of this city?"

Witness—"Yes."

"The city of Detroit?"

Witness—"Yes."

Then Blackstone, Jr., walks backward and forward, his brow as hunky with thought as an old washboard. The anaconda is about to spring again.

"County of Wayne?"

"Yes."

"State of Michigan?"

"Yes."

"We rest the case, may it please your honor."

And the planets keep right on around the sun as if nothing had happened.

TRADE IN PEANUTS.

A Branch of Commerce Very Important to Southern Farmers.

When we pass a peanut stand, or see a bag of peanuts in the grocery store, we do not think of peanuts as forming any important share in our commerce. We do not think that the peanut trade is a branch of trade very important to the people in a certain section of our country; that if the crop should fail it would cause suffering and ruin to many people. Peanuts grow in Virginia, Tennessee and Eastern North Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi. The best grade comes from Virginia, and they are known as "goubers;" in Alabama and Mississippi as "pinders." Dealers say that no improvements have been made in the peanut farms; they are just what they were thirty years ago; although the peanut trade has doubled in nine years. The farms are small, and the crops are cared for by negroes. The nuts are planted in hills about a foot apart, in rows about two and one-half feet apart, and are harvested by plowing and turning over with long-handled forks; this shakes off the dirt, when the vines are gathered and shocked about a pole, where they are left to dry, the vines being so placed as to protect the nuts from the rain; mildewed nuts turn black, and are less salable though the nuts may be as sweet. A dealer says, in the New York Evening Post, that "the shocks, after they have been built up, are left standing for several weeks, until the nuts are quite dried and cured. They are then stripped from the vines by hand, packed in bags, and carried to the middleman who handles them for the farmer. By the middleman the nuts are taken to the top floor of a factory, and are scoured and polished by rubbing against each other in a long revolving iron cylinder. Spouts carry them, after cleaning, to the second floor, where they are run through a fanning-mill. From the mill they are delivered on to an endless apron, made of slats hinged together, and as they travel along on this girls sitting on each side sort them into grades. The nuts are then put into sacks and are ready for shipping. They are brought to New York mostly by steamers, although some come by rail. They are sold here as 'Wilmingtons,' 'Virginians,' 'Tennessee' and 'Spanish.' The last variety was formerly grown in Spain, but is now raised in Virginia to good advantage. The grades are known as 'fancy handpicked,' 'extra handpicked,' and 'choice.' The screenings are the poorest nuts, and these are bought by vendors at county fairs and mixed in with a better grade."

Peanuts are shipped to all parts of this country and to the West Indies, but no trade has been developed with Europe. This localized trade, however, amounts to five millions dollars per year.

Colliwobble's [illegible]

"I can't imagine what's the matter with Colliwobble," said Busket, stalking into the office.

"Oh, he's all right," said Butts.

"Naw, he ain't all right," said Busket, picking our cast-off paper collar out of the waste-basket. "Colliwobble is dead off this time, completely lost his perch."

"Did the line break or did the bait 'go off the hooks?'" asked Butts, trying to be funny.

"Naw, and he didn't get too much of a jag on and make bait of himself, either." And Busket rolled up the collar and put it in his pocket.

"But Colliwobble must be crazy. He is acting in a very peculiar manner, if Tom Holt's word can be taken. Why, Colliwobble is getting ready to enter the Brighton races like a horse. That is, rigged up like a horse. Too bad he should take such a freak—nice man Colliwobble, too."

"What do you mean?" demanded Butts. "I don't believe such stuff. What else did Tom say?"

"Well, I can't swear to the truth of it, but Tom Holt said he met Colliwobble on the street and that 'he had a sulky fit on him,' and—"

But Busket finished his sentence on the other side of the door.—N. Y. World.

Like an Old Roman.

The Emperor of Russia has just decorated and rewarded a private soldier whose fidelity to his duty recalls the stories of the Roman sentinels who perished in the destruction of Pompeii. When the recent earthquake destroyed a small Russian town in Central Asia this soldier was on duty in the Military Treasury. Although the houses were crashing around him this faithful fellow stood motionless, waiting death. The only sign which showed that he appreciated his situation was the fact that he raised his hands as soldiers do in prayer. Fortunately a Sergeant in the street saw him amid the ruins and instantly ordered him to quit his post, which he did right willingly.

Rheumatism and Neuralgia

These two diseases cause untold suffering. Doctors admit that they are difficult to cure—so do their patients. Paine's Celery Compound has permanently cured the worst cases of rheumatism and neuralgia—so say those who have used it.

"Having been troubled with rheumatism at the knee and foot for five years, I was almost unable to get around, and was very often confined to my bed for weeks at a time. I used only one bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and was perfectly cured. I can now jump around and feel as lively as a boy." FRANK CAROTE, Eureka, Nevada.

FOR SALE. NO USE TO OWNER.

"Paine's Celery Compound has been a God-send to me. For the past two years I have suffered with neuralgia of the heart, doctor after doctor failing to cure me. I have now taken nearly four bottles of the Compound, and am free from the complaint. I feel very grateful to you." CHAS. H. LEWIS, Central Village, Ct.

HIS ONE LOVE.

An Old Man's Unexpected but Happy Disappointment.

An old gentleman, leaning forward with his hands clasped over a gold-headed cane, was seated in a summer-house situated upon the grounds of a hotel at a fashionable watering-place. He was in a corner, hidden by drooping vines, and his face expressed deep and apparently painful thought. The refrain of his sad musing was:

"Only one person in the whole world to love me, and I shall lose even that love now!"

On the other side of the summer-house, divided from the side the old man occupied by a rustic partition, two ladies, young and fair, rushed in, and taking out some fancy work, settled down for a chat.

One was tall, and dressed in a pretty costume that was at once youthful and matronly; the other was petite, blonde, and not more than eighteen. Mrs. Courtland spoke first.

"Embroidery, Alice?" she said. "A handsome handkerchief corner. For your trousseau?"

"Yes," and the sweet voice faltered, while a burning blush crimsoned the fair cheek. "Is it not pretty?"

"Very. I want to talk about your prospects, child. Your Aunt Marcia tells me you are making a splendid match."

"Did she? I think so, Blanche. Malcolm is so noble and good, and a true Christian!"

"But your aunt tells me he is the favorite nephew of the great oil merchant, Hiram Bates, whose wealth is something enormous. You have only to help him play his cards well, and he will probably be heir to a magnificent fortune. But what ails you? You look as if I was telling you a piece of news."

"I think Aunt Marcia has been misinformed, that is all."

"Then he is not Hiram Bates' nephew?"

"I never heard him speak of a rich uncle, and I am quite sure he has no hope of inheriting money. He has a good salary, and my little fortune will buy and furnish a small house, so we can make a comfortable, and, I hope, a happy home."

"Did he never speak to you of his uncle?"

"Never of a rich uncle. He has told me of a lame uncle, his mother's brother, who has been very kind to him, given him an education and a start in business. He always talks of him with the deepest love and pity."

"Pity?"

"He suffers torture from the effects of a fall that has lamed him for life and often causes him weeks of agonizing pain. Malcolm tells me with tears in his eyes of his fear of losing this dearest friend and kind uncle, and I think he hopes I may be useful sometimes in nursing him."

"I wonder if she is the same?"

"Can it be true? Does Malcolm think so little of my money, that will be his, that he has never even mentioned it to his promised wife? Can it be that I shall gain a loving, tender niece instead of losing my nephew, when Malcolm marries?"

Loving his nephew so deeply, Hiram Bates had felt a keen pain at the news of his betrothal. He had never seen Alice Hunter, but he knew she had been brought up in a circle of fashion, and was the orphan niece of one of society's gayest votaries, Mrs. Marcia Haydon.

He ascertained by inquiry that the young girl had inherited ten thousand dollars from her father and that her winters were spent with her Aunt Marcia, her summers with a maiden sister of her father. She was quite a belle, although only in society one season, pretty and accomplished, and the old man groaned in spirit over his nephew's choice.

*A belle, and with a head full of fashion*able frivolity, he was convinced that the girl had been won by the prospect of Malcolm's heirship to his own fortune. He had seen in the future his nephew estranged from him by the influence of a dressy, empty-headed woman, or, still more appalling, his niece-to-be making false protestations of affection, with a hope of winning golden favors.

While he mused upon the conversation he had overheard, the silvery voices of his young neighbors still sounding beside him, there was a sudden crash, something struck him upon the head and he lost consciousness.

Cries from the summer-house, from groups of people collected in the grounds, brought a party of men speedily to the spot. The rotten posts supporting the roof upon one side had given way and the side and roof had fallen in. Mrs. Courtland and Miss Hunter were buried under the fallen timbers, but were uninjured. Not so the old gentleman, who had been their unsuspected listener. He was taken out pallid and senseless.

Nobody knew him. He had come by the morning train, had taken breakfast, but no room, and asked the hour for the return train. A surgeon, summoned as speedily as possible, announced a broken arm and an injury to the head, making a likelihood of a long, tedious illness. There was some amused discussion, some suggestions of hospital, a search through the pockets of the unconscious victim, resulting in the discovery of a small sum of money, but no letters, papers or cards, and finally a desertion of one and another, each going his or her way, with the comforting reflection:

"It's none of my business."

But when they had all deserted the injured man the surgeon, still busy binding up his arm as he lay upon a bench brought from the ruined summer-house, felt a light touch on his hand, and looked up to see a little figure in mourning, with a sweet face, very pale.

"Can I help you?" Alice Hunter asked.

"No, child, not now."

"What will they do with him?"

"I suppose he must go to a New York hospital."

"But the ride—the journey?"

"Will cause great additional suffering, perhaps result in death."

"Doctor, will they keep him here if he is paid for?"

"Certainly; but there is not money enough about him to pay his board a week."

"I will pay it."

"You."

"Yes; I will not let him die for want of money I have. He"—and her lip quivered—"he looks like my dear father who is dead."

"H'm—yes. Here come the fellows to take him to the station. I think I will take him to the little cottage where I board. It will cost less and be more quiet."

Mrs. Courtland declared Alice was outraging the proprieties most dreadfully when the young girl went to the cottage and offered her services as nurse to the doctor; but Aunt Sophie silenced comment by moving her belongings from the hotel to the quiet boarding-house, and the doctor found he had a valuable assistant.

Alice explained, in her quiet, low voice, that her father was ill for nine months before he died, and she was his nurse. This accounted for the noiseless woolen dresses, the velvet-shod feet, the quick eye and ready hand, and, when the sufferer recovered consciousness, the gentle voice and tact that quieted him in paroxysms of pain and fever. Aunt Sophie was too much of an invalid herself to help, but she sat beside the bed while Alice moved to and fro, made dainty soups and tempting dishes, and performed all nursing duties.

The invalid had one long talk with the doctor and then submitted to the gentle ministrations of the two women, only insisting upon a man the doctor provided being with him at night and within call.

The season was over, and only these three remained of the summer boarders at the little cottage, when one cool October day the sick man, now fast recovering, called Alice to him.

"I shall soon be well again," he said, regretfully.

"Yes," she answered, cheerily; "very soon."

"I shall miss my nurse."

"And I my patient; but I am glad you are recovering. We were afraid at one time there would be a more painful parting."

"You mean I was in danger of dying. Why should that be painful. I am old."

She made no answer, looking sorrowfully into his uplifted eyes.

"And a burden upon you, the doctor tells me. Why did you make yourself responsible for a stranger?"

The fair face flushed, the soft eyes were dewy with feeling as Alice said, softly:

"Because you are old and seemed poor and friendless. I was glad it was in my power to aid you. Do not think it was at any great cost," she added, with a generous desire to lighten the burden of obligation, "I have some money lying idle."

"For the wedding day, perhaps. Well, child, you might have poorer jewels to deck your bridal than an old man's tears of gratitude and love. I am getting well and shall soon leave you; will you give me a keepsake?"

The girl loosened a little locket from a chain round her throat, cut off one of her golden curls and put it in the place of some she took out, and laid the trinket in the old man's hand.

"With my love," she said, softly.

"Ah, child," he sighed, "an old man, sick and feeble, wins little love."

"Yes," she said, earnestly, "you must believe that I have nursed you, since you were conscious, with affection. My own father is gone, but if ever you want a daughter's care or affection, believe me, I will gladly come to you, if possible."

Three days later the little cottage was deserted. Aunt Sophy and she returned to their home to make up for their lost time in dress-making and sewing, and Alice cheerfully paid out of her small patrimony for the board and expense of her venerable patient.

She little guessed how deep an impression her care and tenderness had made upon the heart so long closed against human affection, so distrustful of any advances from his fellow-creatures. It was a revelation to him, this active charity of an utter stranger. He had gone to the hotel merely to see Malcolm's choice and had purposely left all clew to his identity behind him. He had intended meeting Alice, if possible, unknown, and watching her unobserved, but accident had thrown them together in a way he little anticipated. The first use he made of his recovery was to write to his nephew, and Malcolm met him at the depot when he returned home.

"You have been ill?" he cried.

"Very ill."

"Why did you not send for me?"

"I had even better nursing than yours, Malcolm. Don't ask me any questions now, but tell me about your marriage preparations."

"Alice has gone home and will remain until November. Then she comes to Mrs. Haydon's and will buy her house and furniture."

"In November?"

"Yes."

Late in November she came. Her trunks full of Aunt Sophy's daintiest stitching, and Aunt Marcia gave her cordial greeting. A grand wedding was the display upon which this lady had set her heart, and Alice shrank a little at the comments upon the rich uncle and her own good fortune in the "first-rate match."

But just before the wedding day a little note was brought to Alice by a gorgeous footman, who was driving to her aunt's behind a private carriage. The note was from Malcolm, and begged her to come to him in the carriage.

Wondering, but obedient, Alice was speedily ready, and was driven to a handsome brown stone house, where the door was opened to usher her into a stylish drawing-room, where a gentleman awaited her, and Malcolm, advancing, said:

"My Uncle Hiram, Alice."

Kindly blue eyes looked into her own, withered hands were extended, and a voice she knew well said:

"We are old friends, Malcolm. Are we not, Alice?"

Then, before she could answer, the old man continued:

"I have thought, Alice, that it was unkind to have my nephew wait for my death before sharing my wealth. I have borne a curse of distrust in my heart for many years, thinking my money won me all the affection, save Malcolm's, that was offered me. But though you are well content to wed the young clerk, and put your own patrimony into his home, you must not refuse my heir, who has accepted from me an income that makes him independent, and this home."

"My love for Malcolm can bear riches or poverty," was the answer; "but, sir, our home needs you. You will come, will you not, to the children, who will try to make your life happy by loving care? Long before I knew you, Malcolm told me he hoped, when he had a house, to win you to live in it. Will you let me, too, beg of you to come to us?"

"Gladly, child! Gladly!" the old man said.

So, where the rich lonely man had feared to lose the one love of his life, he gained another tenderer, sweeter love, to brighten his declining years by a daughter's devotion and affection.—Boston Traveller.

TIME-TABLE VACATIONS.

Some Points from a Man Who Believes That the Pleasures of Anticipation Are Greater Than Those of Participation —Joys of the Mental Tourist.

I wonder if any body but myself ever took a time-table vacation, asks Luke Sharp in the Detroit Free Press. It is such a cheap and delightful way of getting round about this little world of ours, that those who have never indulged in one have missed a great deal of inexpensive pleasure.

I have knocked about quite a bit in my time and have seen several places besides Detroit, yet those actual journeys are nothing to my time-table trips.

For instance, the first part of this winter I thought I would like to go down to the City of Mexico. I at once went to a passenger ticket office in Detroit and began to make inquiries and load up with time-tables. One of the great advantages of living in America is that you get your time-tables for nothing. Now, in England they make you pay a penny for even the smallest time-table of a railway. It is true that some of the larger railways give you quite a book for the money. You get all particulars of how much it will cost to ship a horse from one part of the country to another; what the tariff on dogs is; what the rules and regulations of the company happen to be: what the law is if you sass a station-master, and what various things you will be fined forty shillings for, but all this knowledge is useless to the ordinary man. He prefers to have his penny.

The railroads of America, on the other hand, flood the country with time-tables as free as the waters of the Detroit river—that is, unless you get the water through the pipes of the Water Board.

The men in the Detroit ticket offices are beginning to know me pretty well by this time, and they do not rush away from a cash customer in order to attend to my wants. They know that I am a person who asks a great many questions, but who seldom buys a ticket. I think they believe that I am something of a fraud, but my intentions are honorable. For the time being I really believe that I am going to all those places that I inquire about. Take the brief course of the City of Mexico fever, for instance. I got the time tables of the Wabash railroad to St. Louis; then the Iron Mountain road to the borders of Mexico and the Mexican Central railroad through to the City of Mexico. Then I got another time-table by way of Cincinnati; then the Queen & Crescent route to New Orleans, then the Southern Pacific and so on to Mexico. After that I found that I could go to Galveston and take a steamer there to Vera Cruz and go over the New Mexican National road to the capital. Or I could go on to San Antonio by rail and down that way to the National road.

I then set to work to compare the different advantages of the different routes. I had great difficulty in making up my mind which I would take or whether I would go one way and come back the other. There were the delights of visiting the ancient and historical city of New Orleans. Galveston had many attractions, and at San Antonio I could see the ruins of the Alamo. How I did revel in all those places! I got books about them and posted up. Then I read all I could lay my hands on regarding Mexico and what was to be seen there. I found out how much it would cost to go up the big mountain and learned that the guides expected five dollars a day and thought they would be disappointed in their expectations when they struck the undersigned. I got many points on what the cost of living would be and figured up how much time I could spend on the trip.

After that I did what most people of a sensible nature would have done at the first. I figured up the cost.

Then I gave up the trip.

I don't expect that the aforementioned sensible persons will enter into my enthusiasm on the time-table trip business, but these thoroughly sensible people miss a lot of fun in this world. Anyhow, they don't amass as many time-tables as I do.

Although, as I said before, they charge for their time-tables in Europe, there are many advantages there in the way of taking a time-table trip that are not to be had in America. For a shilling or two a man can get a book containing every time-table in Europe. Then by a further expenditure of cash he gets, one by one, the valuable guide books of every country there, neat and compact and with red cover. All this makes a time-table vacation easier and more instructive in Europe than in America. There is another great advantage there for the mythical tourist. The railway time books and guide books in Europe are made for the people; in America they are made for the railroad companies. For instance, you can't get the rates of fare in an American time-table or railroad guide. I never could understand why it is that the railroads of America are so anxious to conceal their fares from the people. Bradshaw's very complete book gives every railroad fare in Britain and costs only 6d. Appleton's railroad guide gives no fare at all, and I imagine doesn't give a map unless the railroad pays for it. I wanted to find out about the steamers of a large steamship line on my trip to Mexico. There was no mention of the line in Appleton's, so I suppose that line refuses to advertise and so the traveler gets left. Baedecker's guide book gives the names of almost every hotel in Europe and tells honestly whether it is good or bad. It gives the prices by the meal or by the day. The guide book will accept no advertisement of any kind at any price. It is a book made for the people and it can be depended on.

There is nothing of that kind in America. However, to the mental tourist all this makes no difference. It is as cheap to stop "in your mind," at a first-class hotel as at a poor one.

The philosopher says that the pleasures of anticipation are greater than those of participation. If that is the case I commend my plan of traveling. A time table tourist has all the fun and has no bills to pay.

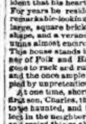
CHARLES J. HULL.

A Prominent Chicago Citizen, Recently Deceased.

In the death of this estimable gentleman, which occurred Tuesday, February 12, at Houston, Tex., Chicago loses one of her most philanthropic citizens, and one to whom is due a large share of the credit for the foremost position to which the city has been brought among the large and prosperous cities of the United States.

Mr. Hull was born sixty-eight years ago in Manchester, then a small village in Connecticut, and his earlier years gave nothing of promise of the honor and fame which he finally achieved through honesty of purpose and persistence of effort.

He began his career in Chicago nearly fifty years ago as a law student, and after a few years of hard study commenced dealing in real estate, in which business he won his good name and great wealth. To enlarge upon the many large deals he made in Chicago property would consume much time and space; suffice it to say that, notwithstanding the frequent financial reverses to which he was subjected, among them the panic of 1857, he rose to the top round of success in his business and carried with him the admiration and respect of all with whom he came in contact either in business or social circles.



CHARLES J. HULL.

To the memory of this man is due the undying gratitude of the freedmen and work*ing class of the South, for through his ef*forts were they enabled, just after the war, to procure comfortable homes on easy terms. His sole object was to provide for the poor and place within reach of the needy a means of securing by the labor of their hands a roof-tree and vine.

Among his greatest achievements in Chicago was the founding of the Washingtonian Home, an institution in which inebriates are cared and provided for and weaned from the evil of their ways.

He was an earnest and tireless worker in the cause of temperance and contributed largely to the educational institutions of the city of his adoption. A branch of his work to which he was particularly devoted was the reformation of criminals, and it was evident that his heart was wholly in the work. For years he resided in one of the most remarkable-looking buildings in Chicago, a large, square brick with cupola of the same shape, and a veranda with large white columns almost encircling the entire building. This house stands in a large lot on the corner of Polk and Halsted streets, but has gone to rack and ruin in the hands of others, and the once ample grounds are now occupied by unpretentious shops and sheds.

At one time, shortly after the death of his first son, Charles, the old house was reputed to be haunted, and the lower order of intellect in the neighborhood conceived strange and weird things about the place.

One of Mr. Hull's weaknesses was for children. Often has he been seen to pause in the street and raise from the sidewalk some poor, dirty little urchin of a child, and while holding it in his arms kiss and fondle it on his big, warm heart. There are no near relatives to mourn his departure from this life, and his vast wealth, some four million dollars, will undoubtedly go to friends and benevolent institutions.

THE CRAFTY SPIDER.

Some Strange Stories About an Ugly-Looking Animal.

Spiders That Came Down from Their Webs to Listen to a Violinist—The Weather Prophesying Power of the Queer Things—Popular Superstitions.

Spiders are the most curious and interesting of the small animals, says the Pittsburgh Dispatch. Its ingenuity, industry, patience, avariciousness and cunning have furnished texts for scores of essays and homilies, while naturalists have written volumes descriptive of its habits and peculiarities. Its body has been used for medicine, and even for food, and numerous unsuccessful attempts have been made to turn its industry to account in the manufacture of silk fabrics from its web. It is a very knowing creature and not particularly friendly towards man. Yet cases are on record of ugly spiders that were trained and domesticated until they would come at their master's call and take food from his hands.

Spiders are said to be peculiarly susceptible to the charms of music. It is related of a French prisoner of war who was allowed to play upon the lute during his confinement in the Bastile that he was much astonished, after having had his instrument for a few days, to see the spiders descend from their webs and gather around him in a circle as he was playing. A number of mice also came out of their holes to enjoy the music. When he ceased to play the spiders returned to their webs and the mice to their nests, but ever afterwards, while engaged in whiling away the tedious hours by music, he had the same curious audience. Moreover, the number of mice and spiders that came to gaze and listen grew greater each day, until at last he begged a cat of his jailer, kept it in a cage, and amused himself by letting it loose whenever he wished to create a panic among his strange companions.

Another Frenchman tells of spiders that came down from their webs and gathered around a skillful violinist who was practicing alone in his room. Many other instances are cited by various writers to prove that these creatures are fond of music.

As a weather prophet the spider is regarded by many as the superior of Wiggins, or even the groundhog. If the day is to be windy or rainy they come out of their holes and shorten the filaments on which their webs are suspended, drawing them up tightly. When they are indolent good weather may be expected; whenever they are unusually active look out for a storm.

It is thought to be unlucky to kill a spider, but to have one crawl over your clothes is a sure sign of coming good fortune—the general superstition being that the person so favored will soon receive a sum of money. If a spider approaches you, either by descending from the ceiling or crawling toward you, it is a sign of good luck; but if the creature runs the other way some evil is about to befall you. Killing a spider that crosses your path will bring bad luck, and if you are to kill one at all never on any account do so in your house. Should a spider drop from a tree directly in front of you before night you will be visited by a dear friend. In some parts of England there is a common belief that spiders will not hang their webs on Irish oak because all sorts of vermin were banished from every thing Irish by St. Patrick's decree.

The strength of the spider is so great that it should entitle him to rank as a Sampson of the smaller animals. An eminent legal gentleman of New York State related, many years ago, a curious story of what he himself had witnessed. A striped snake that was fully nine inches long was discovered suspended alive in a spider's web in a wine cellar. The web hung between two shelves two feet apart in such a position that the snake could not possibly have fallen into it. Three spiders, each smaller than a fly, were found feasting on the body of the still living reptile. On examination of the snake by means of a magnifying glass it was seen that its mouth was firmly tied up by a great number of threads so tightly that it could not run out its tongue. The tail was tied in a knot, leaving a small loop through which a cord was fastened. A little above the tail was noticed a small round ball, which upon inspection proved to be a small green fly. The fly had served as a windlass to haul the snake up, the cords being wound around it. Many threads were fastened to the cord above and to the ball, containing the fly to keep it from unwinding, and letting the snake fall. The snake had evidently been caught napping and strung up by his ingenious little captors before he had time to make a struggle for freedom.

Probably every person who has spent a summer in the country has been surprised, while talking a morning walk, to note the immense number of gossamer-like webs, glistening with dew, that have been spread upon trees, shrubs, grass, fences and hedges during the preceding night.

There is a common belief, by no means confined to the ignorant, that those webs fall from the sky in showers; but wherever they come from, there is little doubt they are woven by the gossamer spider. It was an ancient notion that the gossamer was made by dew that had burned in the sun, and one learned man of olden time even went so far as to advance the theory that it was not unlikely that the white clouds, so frequent in summer, were of the same material.

Certain kind of spiders, according to the travelers, are regarded as dainty food by the natives of Australia and by certain African tribes. The use of spider and spiders' webs as a remedy for fevers and other diseases is by no means confined to savages. In some parts of this country it is still held that pills compounded of spider webs are a certain cure for the ague, and the round bodies of spiders themselves, minus the legs, have been administered for the same complaint. Spiders confined in a goose-quill or sewn up in a rag and worn about the neck were long believed to be an infallible preventive of the ague. The Indians, it is said, have great faith in the efficacy of the spiders' web for curing this disease.

Original Forest in New Jersey.

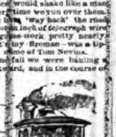
There is not much really original or primeval forest left standing in New Jersey. That is, there are few, if any, large tracts of forest that have not been cut off at some time since the settlement of the State by white men. There is a small piece of white oak woods on the farm of Mr. Thomas Lawrence, near Hamburg, in Sussex County, which has never been cut. These trees cover a remarkable hill, or long, narrow ridge, which rises eighty or one hundred feet above the fertile valley of the Wallkill river, and one would have to travel far to find a more interesting or attractive grove. Though they stand very near to the busy haunts of men, the great trees are populous with gray squirrels, who appear to have learned to feel entirely comfortable and secure among them.

Society in Chicago.

Our highest society circles, says the Chicago News, have become so deeply enamored of the French language that it is fashionable now to superscribe all notes of invitation "R. s. v. p. p. d. q."

A QUESTION OF DUTY.

A Story of a Railroad Engineer's Thrilling Experience.



DURING a journey over the Baltimore & Ohio railway a few days since the writer's traveling companion in the same seat was a fine-looking, white-haired old veteran of the throttle. He was just the man from whom many a good, exciting story of adventure might reasonably be expected, and it was not long before an opportunity arrived for "tapping" the old gentleman with a view to conversation. The train was rattling over an unusually rough portion of the road, and at such an enormously high rate of speed that it was with the utmost difficulty the passengers retained dignified positions in the car seats.

"Kinder."

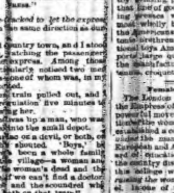
"Still," I persisted, "it is surprising that there are not more serious accidents occasioned by men falling from the cars, for it seems to me that the best and oldest railroaders are liable to be caught napping."

"That's so—that's so," said my companion, and for a moment fell to musing. From past experience I judged that a story, or at least a reminiscence, was brewing. My surmise proved correct.

"That's so," again said the old man, although several moments had now elapsed since I made the assertion to which he was assenting. "One of the toughest times in my life came about on account of a nasty tumble. I think I may say, though forty years of railroading have passed since then, that I never suffered so much mental agony as at the time to which I refer. Forty years ago I was young and had just took charge of my first engine, for which reason I was feeling mighty big I assure you.

"I was running over a road in the East that has since become a part of the Pennsylvania system and is now one of the very neatest pieces of track in the country. In them days, however, it was nothing of the kind. It was a track and that was all, laid about as cheap as a track could be laid over a road-bed that wasn't as good as an old plank road in Kentucky to-day. The ties were rough and the trestles rougher, and them same trestles would shake like a man with the ager every time we run over them. Well, I'll tell you how 'way back' the road was: It hadn't got an inch of telegraph wire and we ran on guess-work pretty nearly. My partner—that's my fireman—was a tip-top fellow by the name of Tom Nevins.

"One day in the fall we were hauling a freight train eastward, and in the course of the morning side-tracked to let the express pass us—going in the same direction as ourselves.



"JUST AHEAD OF ME I COULD SEE THE EXPRESS."

"It was a small country town, and I stood on the platform, watching the passengers get off and on the express. Among those that got on I particularly noticed two men—not companions—one of whom was, in my opinion, much excited.

"The passenger train pulled out, and I waited for the regulation five minutes to pass before following her.

"Before my time was up a man, who was the sheriff, rushed into the small depot.

"'There's a madman or a devil, or both, on that express,' he shouted. 'Boys,' he continued, 'there's been a whole family poisoned up in the village—a woman and four children. The woman's dead and the children will die if we can't find a doctor. Our village doctor and the scoundrel who did this thing are both on that train!'

"Understand, there was no telegraph.

"'That's all right,' I says to the sheriff, while I shouted to Nevins to uncouple the locomotive and pull out. 'Jump aboard, sheriff.'

"But he wouldn't go with us. He said he must go back to the victims, and giving me a description of the man, whom I recognized as the fellow I had seen so excited in boarding the express, me and Nevins pulled out.

"It was a new line of business for me to be chasing murderers, but I knew I could do it; besides, I felt that what was of most importance was to get the doctor.

"I just piled on the pressure of steam and we 'humped' over that old track pretty lively, I assure you! We must have been going fifty-five miles an hour, and that with an old-style freight-engine of forty years ago, mind you, when we struck a nasty place in the road. Nevins was on the top of the tender kicking down some wood when the engine jumped and rocked like every thing. The first thing I knew Nevins fell over, head first, and was lying on the side of the track.

"That, sir, was a ticklish moment for me. I could not stop my engine in much less than half a mile—for we had no air-brakes them days—and if I should back up to get my fireman I should lose altogether ten or fifteen minutes. And I hated to leave poor Tom, not knowing whether he was dead or alive. And then, right ahead of me, I could see the express; and I remembered those four poor children who needed the doctor about as bad as could be, and I recollected my promise to the sheriff to catch the brute, who would get away if I failed to make the passenger train before her next stop.

"All these thoughts and calculations flashed through my brain in a second. I thought in that moment I would go crazy myself. I wanted to pick up my fireman—wanted just as badly to catch the train. My hand was on the throttle, but I took it off, and with my own hands piled into the furnace the wood which poor Tom had thrown down.

"In five minutes I was up with the express. The murderer was secured and I carried the doctor back with me. We slowed up where poor Tom Nevins lay, but we left him there, because he was dead.

"When we got back to the village depot it seemed as if I had gone through days of horrible mental anguish and misery. But when I looked at my watch I discovered that I had actually been away exactly thirty-six minutes.

"But the experience was a tough one, young man, very tough. W. H. S. ATKINSON.

WHERE TOYS COME FROM

Most of Them the Product of Cheap German Labor.

Why the United States Can Not Make the Cheaper Kinds of Playthings—All About Dolls, Toy Locomotives, Ten-Cent Watches and Other Trifles.

"Of the dolls sold in America," said a prominent wholesale dealer in toys to a New-York Times man, "nine-tenths come from Germany. Of these a large proportion are made in one little place, Sonneberg, a town of about ten thousand inhabitants in Thuringen. Almost the entire industry of this place is confined to the manufacture of dolls. The inhabitants are very poor people and are brought up to doll-making.

"Before it is completed a doll passes through many hands. The heads, hands and feet are made by one person, the body by another, the hair is fixed on by another, and the face is painted by two other different people, one doing the rough work and the second the finishing touches. The clothing is made by another person and the dresses are put on by still another. All this labor is done at such starvation prices that Americans can not compete in the manufacture, although the duty for importation is thirty-five per cent.

"To this town of Sonneberg there come every year a large number of buyers from all over the world. I go there myself and never fail to meet at least a score of Americans engaged in the same business. There are at least 500 different kinds of dolls, and the variety is remarkable. The French invent many of the most attractive, but the Germans copy them so cheaply that the world's buyers go to the latter for their stock. For the manufacture of fine dresses dolls the French still hold the lead by long odds. It is only in the cheaper goods that the Germans outspeed them. England furnishes very few dolls, and I can now recall only one kind that is distinctly English—the English rag doll, which is made wholly of rags, even to the face, the eyes being sewed on. There are French walking dolls, smoking men and other automatic figures, but these do not really belong to the family of dolls. They are mechanical figures, too intricate in their mechanism to be classed as mere dolls. Of the rubber dolls fully one-half are made in America, where anything that is machine made prospers to the exclusion of imported stuffs.

"The price of dolls ranges from 1 cent to $50, but the most popular are those that sell for 25 cents, 50 cents and $1, although there has been a great run recently on 5-cent and 10-cent dolls.

"As with dolls, so it is with other toys. The most of them come from Germany, where they are made very cheaply. This same town of Sonneberg furnishes many of them, but more come from Nuremberg and small towns in its vicinity. It is in this district that magnetic toys, swords, guns, trumpets, horns, woolly sheep, jumping-jacks, monkeys on sticks, jacks in the box and ingenious mechanical toys are made. The carved wooden toys come principally from the Bavarian highlands, but they are brought to Nuremberg to be sold. The cheaper grades of wooden toys are made in poorer Saxony and comprise cheap arks and sets of furniture.

"How cheaply they make these things you can judge from this instance. Here is a toy of furniture consisting of three chairs, a bureau, a table, a sofa and a mirror, carefully done up in a substantial pasteboard box. Now, after having paid 35 per cent. duty and having allowed 20 per cent. for freight and other expenses, we sell such furniture sets at 75 cents per dozen and make a reasonable profit. You can figure out the original cost if you choose.

"Porcelain toys—tea sets and things of that sort—are also made very cheaply, the waste places in the potteries being filled up with their molds without much additional cost. Toy horses, cows, elephants, cats, dogs, lions, tigers and all kinds of animals are made largely in the German prisons. Many of these are ingenious novelties, being so constructed as to be able to move heads and emit a noise resembling more or less the natural cries of each animal. The retail price of these toys runs from 50 cents to $50, according to size and perfection. We sold a toy horse the other day for $50 about the same time a real racer was disposed of at auction up-town for a much less sum.

"Of the wooden toys fully one-half are made in America. They include A-B-C blocks, building blocks and games, and are easily turned out by machinery. Iron toys are also made largely here, and so are tin toys. The tin for the latter is imported from Europe, and when the toys are finished they are exported for the European market. The majority of the rubber toys come from France, chiefly from Paris, although the manufacture of this line of playthings is constantly increasing in America, and the American rubber toys are really the best to be had. The reason that America has not taken the lead in the manufacture of rubber toys is found in the fact that the demand for other rubber goods is so great as to shut out toys. Toy watches are largely made in France and are remarkably cheap. We sell watches with chains, charms and movable hands for 35 cents per dozen, after having allowed for duty and freight.

"Of the standard games the best chessmen come from England; backgammon and checkers are made almost altogether in America; bone dominos, dice and the cheaper grades of chess come from France; toy printing presses, locomotives and all that line of goods are domestic. Toy printing presses were furnished formerly almost wholly by the Germans, but latterly the Americans have superseded their Teutonic brethren in this industry. In educational toys America leads the world, and exports large quantities. So it does also in the manufacture of out-door games, lawn tennis, croquet, base-ball, etc."

Female Progress in Japan.

The London Mode of Fashion says that the Empress of Japan is at the head of a powerful movement for bettering the condition of the women of that country. She has established a college for women at Tokio, under the management of a committee of European and American women. The standard of education is very low, especially in the country districts, and it is hoped that this college will prove a valuable aid in raising the women of Japan to a higher level. In one of the London hospitals there are now three Japanese ladies who are going through their training as nurses with the intention of returning to their own country when qualified and teaching their countrywomen.

A Dog That Was a Joker.

There is a dog in Orlando, Fla., with a fine sense of humor, if this story be true as told by a local newspaper: His owner frequently gives him a piece of coin to carry along to market. A day or two ago he gave him a dollar, and the dog was trotting along when he saw a colored man approaching. He stopped a little distance in front of the darkey, dropped the dollar from his mouth to the sidewalk, and then walked to the edge of the pavement, apparently as if he cared nothing for the money. Mr. Darkey walked briskly up and was in the act of stooping to pick up the money, when the dog flew at him as if to bite, quickly seized the money, and trotted off with an air of "No, you don't," and overtook his owner.

WEAKNESS AND STRENGTH.

It is a prevalent idea that the strength of a political party abides in the amount of office-holding patronage at its disposal. That is a great mistake.

Official patronage instead of [illegible] strength is the source of [illegible]. The jealousies, heartburnings and bad political blood it surely engenders, are as revengeful sappers undermining the foundation of the fortress.

A Republican Administration has just been inaugurated into power at Washington, and what is the spectacle it presents?

A horde of determined seekers after places in the public service. An army of partisan claimants for the spoils of patronage, each man in the Yankee [illegible] ably for self first, last and all the time, and self-confident that he is the most worthy to wear the badge of [illegible].

Consequently to each successful applicant there will be a score of disappointed and soured rivals, whom no force of argument can convince that they have not been cruelly [illegible].

Patronage ever has been and remains to be partisan weakness.

For political strength, permanent and reliable, we must turn from spoils to principles.

Principles are the mighty levers of partisan power, and they today make the Democratic party far stronger before the people than the Republican, even though President Harrison had at his command a stock of spoils-patronage fourfold greater than it is.

That individual rights, and the industrial interests of all the people, of every name and kind, shall be truthfully and equitably protected, and as effectually against monopolistic sharks at home as against ravenous hyenas abroad.

That labor is the architect of real wealth, and no bulwarks should ever be erected to curtail its field of operation, and no cunning devices framed to lessen its honest reward.

That all taxation over and above the legitimate needs of justly administered government is a perpetuated fraud upon the taxpayers.

There stands the Democratic party, pledged ever to PRINCIPLES and the PEOPLE.

It is strong because honest.

The New Local Option Law.

A New York paper thus speaks of the Werts' bill that is to be the New Jersey law governing the sale of liquors:

Whatever may be the immediate effect on the Democratic party, in a broader sense the result is eminently satisfactory. The new law is founded upon the true Democratic principles of local self-government.

Under it townships cannot rule cities or cities townships. Each can speak for itself, and practically the option, instead of being repealed, is only made more distinctively local. Prohibition is possible in the country, where it is wanted, but impossible in the cities, where high license is undoubtedly more restrictive. Sensible men, who detest not only rum rule, but also the fanaticism which attends the other extreme, will indorse this measure. It is both just and conservative, and a plain and sufficient recognition, for the time being, of the rapidly growing temperance sentiment in both parties.

And the Trenton True American says truly: The Werts' bills as passed by the Senate goes further in the direction of a wise and safe regulation of the liquor traffic than any law ever [illegible] submitted to the State Legislature. It stops short of prohibition only because prohibition does not prevent, however much it may prohibit.

Under the proposed law there must be an orderly, decent management of hotels, saloons and places where liquor is sold, and it is made the interest of the liquor seller to prevent the illicit sale and use of liquor which marks every community wherein prohibition is attempted.

Actual prohibition is an impossibility; pretended prohibition is as great a curse as is the unrestricted sale of liquor. The Werts' bill steps in between the two extremes, and taking the good from either, establishes a system which can be enforced because public opinion will sustain it.

The [illegible] Further Action.

The Senate at Trenton last Friday passed the Werts bill, that repeals the so-called "local" option law of last year, by a strict party vote. It will now be hurried on its way to the statute books.

In place of the [illegible] local option scheme which, with one hand, gave to the public the jug-beggar and with the other the saloon, the Democratic bill brings the whole business of liquor selling, whether by the measure or by the glass, under the wholesome restrictions of a common law aimed at the regulation rather than the spasmodic abolition of the liquor traffic.

Senator Baker, (Dem.,) of Cumberland, explained that he voted with the Republicans last year in favor of local option, while this year he was ready to vote for its repeal. Mr. Baker said he voted for last year's bill because it was the best thing possible at that time. That bill did nothing towards restricting "jug shops," the worst curse of the rum business, while the present bill gives the courts absolute control over them, and allows the fixing of a fee as high as possible. Under this bill, too, townships can practically close up every saloon within their boundaries. The transfer of the right of revocation to local boards was intended to give the people a voice.

The Central's New Station.

Within very short time the big terminal depot of the New Jersey Central Railroad at Communipaw will be completed and the great waiting rooms thrown open to the public.

Almost all of the tracks within the depot have been laid, and all trains are accommodated within its great brick walls. Clusters of electric lights have been suspended from a hundred [illegible] in the great roof. When these are ready for use the interior will present a beautiful appearance at night. The work on the waiting rooms and the other rooms of the depot building is being pushed with all possible speed, and the improvements made each day are rapidly bringing the structure to perfection.

The Ballot Boxes.

The Union County Freeholders, at their last meeting, authorized the clerk to open the combination of the ballot boxes for the township elections, he to receive $5 per day for the time actually employed in the work and all necessary expenses.

Mr. [illegible] said the boxes did not afford any more protection than the old style boxes, but were continually becoming an expense to the county, and the Board should rise up to protest against them.

Almost Broke His Skull.

James Foden, one of the [illegible] Messenger boys, met with a painful accident while at work on Seventh street, Monday afternoon. The lad stood alongside of a telegraph pole, while a lineman was making some repairs to the wires on top. A heavy iron [illegible] dropped from the lineman's belt, striking the boy on the head, and inflicting a deep scalp wound. Dr. T. S. Davis dressed the wound, and later the boy was taken to his home on East Sixth street.

Sampling Plainfield's Food.

Mr. Geo. W. McGuire, Dr. W. K. Newton's assistant, of the State Board of Health, is in the city getting samples of food products and drugs from among the merchants here. Mr. McGuire was interviewed by a Press reporter Monday night, who was informed that the work of collecting samples from the grocers and druggists is being done throughout the State, under direction of the State Board of Health. Mr. McGuire says that many adulterations are found, principally in groceries and drugs. Out of 100 samples of cream tartar, collected near Trenton, recently, not one sample was found to be pure. French peas, Mr. McGuire says, are adulterated with copper. Lard is also adulterated with cotton seed oil, mutton fat, etc. Spices, olive oil, cocoa, chocolate, coffee and honey are the other principal articles which the health officers find are largely adulterated. About 100 samples were collected by the officers in this city, yesterday, and the work is going on today.

Mr. McGuire informed the reporter that in most of the towns he has visited he had discovered some very loose business in the drug stores. These samples will be analyzed and if found to be impure the merchants will be notified to desist from selling the goods. In case they do not heed the warning, then prosecution will follow. The inspector told the reporter that Plainfield was remarkably free from adulterated food products and drugs, as compared with other cities.

"JOE" ENGLISH AT REFORM HALL.

The announcement that Mr. Joseph English, the temperance advocate, who with Albert G. Mabee, organized the Plainfield Reform Club on February 23d, five years ago, would be present and deliver an address in Reform Hall, Sunday night, was the cause of attracting an unusually large attendance to the hall. The main auditorium was comfortably filled, and the overflow found seats in the gallery.

President French presided, and beside him were seated on the platform, the speaker to be announced, Judge Nathan Harper, Rev. W. E. Honeyman, Judge L. F. Wadsworth, and Mr. Geo. F. Opdyke. The usual Reform Club choir furnished the music.

After the preliminary opening exercises, President French spoke a few words. He said among other things, that he was glad to welcome Mr. English back to the city. The scenes of to-night, he compared with the enthusiasm of five years ago, when Mabee and English first began this work here. He eulogized Mr. English's work during that time, and stated that he had done more for the cause than any man in New Jersey. The Plainfield club, he continued, is the only club that survives their ministrations.

The sympathy and support of the question in this city, the speaker said, was about dead, and an effort would now be made to revive it. President French said that when Mabee and English completed their work here, five years ago, 5,000 signers were on the total abstinence pledge; 4,000 of that number of names he had home. Mr. English was then introduced.

The speaker began by stating that if he had been a total stranger, and had received such an eulogistical introduction, one-half of the audience would have left. He said that in certain places where he had spoken, he had been introduced as "Rev." Joseph English; he preferred to be called "simple Joe English," under which title he was announced to speak, by posters, in a distant town, recently.

Mr. English claimed to be a failure in everything, except Christianity; but the grace of God, he added, had made him a Christian for the past eighteen years. Once, he said, he was considered smart, by the boys in Poughkeepsie, when he called all hands up to drink; now they say his wife leads him around by the nose. The speaker said that although his hair had turned white in the cause, he was yet a boy, happy, light and free. He considered that if it was right to lead a horse to water on Sunday, it was equally right and just to do likewise with mankind. What is needed, he argued, is for Christians and temperance men to join hands, in elevating the work to a higher plane. Such a state of affairs exists at Madison, N. J., with the christians and temperance people combined, the dram shops will soon pass away; the churches must take up the question; they are like the salt of the earth.

Here the speaker eulogized the W. C. T. U. He said that Mabee and himself had organized 32 district organizations in this State; in Madison and Herkimer counties alone, in New York State, Mr. English said, he had "put in" 15 societies himself.

Mr. English said he intended to explode two alleged falsehoods; First, that "men will drink in spite of all the laws of the World." He declared that men will not drink until educated up to it; children of drunken parents oftentimes turn out to be the strongest and most radical advocates of temperance, and vice versa; most of the drunkards of today commenced as moderate drinkers; they claim they don't like the stuff, but touch glasses and say: "Here's another nail in your coffin." The speaker said he had often passed the open doors of saloons, and felt a longing in his heart to go in, but by the Grace of God, he was strengthened and permitted to pass. Men will not drink, he declared, if the right laws are enacted.

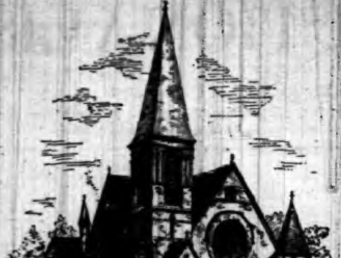
Vice and the demon, were considered at length, by Mr. English; he spoke of the Hoffman House in New York City, where paintings and works of art worth $80,000 adorn the walls of the barroom; the attractive places he said are the most dangerous, and are fitted up to catch the better class of trade, such as dudes, whom he compared with stuffed sausages; moderate drinkers work their way up on mint julip, brandy smash and other fancy drinks but when they can drink their whiskey clear, then they are on the decline.

Mr. English told a touching story of a man named John Hock, who with his wife and one child settled in a small town in the far West. The town commenced to grow, and it was considered necessary to have a hotel. The building was erected, and one of the most influential men in the place was put in charge. The hotel was opened with a "house warming," and that night for the first time, John Hock returned home beastly intoxicated; in a short time he had squandered $20,000 over the bar, and one day in a drunken rage he murdered his daughter. Retribution came to the father while he was locked up in a cell, where he died.

In conclusion, Mr. English said, the thirst for alcohol, is like a tiger's thirst for blood—once tasted it is hard to resist. No one but Jesus, the lion of the tribe of Judah, was able to wrestle with it.

President French made a few closing remarks, after which a hymn was sung, the usual collection was taken up and Mr. English made a strong appeal for signers to the total abstinence pledge, and several names were added thereto.

—The Raritan canal was opened for navigation Monday morning.



The New First Presbyterian Church, Plainfield, N. J.

(From the Westfield Standard.)

As one drives into Plainfield from Scotch Plains the first prominent feature in the way of a public building is the First Presbyterian church, now in the course of construction; this handsome edifice is in style of architecture, a modified type of the Romanesque, but with the modification, the purity, grace, symetry and chastity of the more elaborate types of this beautiful style of architecture have not been sacrificed.

The modification was the outgrowth of economy and was resorted to that the best results might be reached at a minimum of cost.

The interior is imposing with its capacity for some nine hundred persons, high vaulted ceilings composed of a combination of groins, converging at and resting on the graceful iron columns which form the interior support to the roof. A gallery extends across the entire front of the auditorium, the curved front of which comports fully with the graceful lines of the pews on the main floor below.

The main floor is in the amphitheatre form, with considerable descent so that the lines of vision are unobstructed even from the more remote parts of the room and all gallery seats because of similar arrangement are equally desirable. The pews are of a neat, simple character and are distinguished from other forms of pews by the name of "true curve" because of the compound curve employed in the construction of the backs giving grace and comfort. These pews will be upholstered in a damask of a rich but quiet tone of copper, the wood work of the interior being red birch except the entrance ways which will be in oak.

The organ front, pulpit furniture, chandelier and other gas and electric fixtures have all been designed by the architect so as to preserve a perfect harmony throughout. The interior decorations of walls and ceilings are being done by the Sterne Relief Decoration Co., of which our fellow townsman, Albert A. Drake is President, under the direction of the architect. The organ will be one of the finest instruments in the State; it will be a three manual instrument costing about $7,000, and is being built by Midmer, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The lighting by night will be by electricity, though all lighting fixtures will be of the combination construction, arranged for either electricity or gas.

One of the principal features of the decorations and perhaps the most prominent will be a beautifully wrought memorial window representing the woman in the house of Simon the leper annointing the head of Christ with the precious ointment; this beautiful work of art which was conceived and which is being executed under the direction of the architect is to perpetuate the memory of Mrs. Sarah M. Latimer, through whose generosity this monument now stands.

The history of this church building is an exceedingly interesting one starting as it did with a modest donation by this philanthropic lady whose interest and ambition in the good work seemed to develop and ripen into golden fruit as the project unfolded itself and the various details were worked out. She seemed guided by a divine hand as her chief aim in the latter days of her life seemed to be the advancement and completion of this one work, oft time betraying an eagerness bordering on impatience for the consumation of all matters pertaining to the probable cost, that the same might be fully provided for; this certainly seemed like an act of Providence inasmuch as her last contribution of $7,000 was made only a few days previous to her sad ending on this earth. It seems almost a pity that such a one could not have lived but a little longer to have witnessed the finished work. The total amount given by Mrs. Latimer was about $37,000, with an additional $5,000 provided for in her will, now being contested.

The architect of this beautiful building is Oscar S. Teale of Plainfield, and 247 Broadway, New York City, whose fame is now becoming fixed, having done many buildings that are now attracting attention. In an interview with him our reporter discovers that his works are not confined to the immediate locality of his home, as he is now engaged on works at Helena, Montana, Paducah, Kentucky and other remote parts of this country, while his fame and works have already reached across the ocean.

Quoting from an article describing one of his buildings printed in the Ocean Grove Palladium (which is now on the desk before us,) "Mr. Teale is an artist and his works are his witnesses. There is every where apparent in this building the hand of a master originality of conception, grace and purity of style as well as breadth and grandure of effect. Mr. Teale has genious and he is building to it. He has placed one of them in Oswego."

We congratulate Westfield people that they have selected Mr. Teale as the architect of the new school building in their Town.

Presenting Their Past Worthy Patriarch.

Howell Division, Sons of Temperance, No. 97, of this city, were favored with a fraternal visit, Tuesday, that was the occasion of much gratification on all sides, and great enjoyment.

A delegation, numbering about twenty, from Columbia Division, of New Brunswick, and American Division of Metuchen, drove over to Plainfield in stages. There were also present as guests of Howell Division, Grand Worthy Patriarch of New Jersey, the Rev. Mr. VanAcken, P. G. W. [illegible] P. of N. J., Hoagland, and Messrs Joseph English and John H. French, all of whom made pleasing addresses.

Past Worthy Patriarch W. R. Mattox was presented with an elegant grand division regalia, in a speech by G. W. P. VanAcken. Mr. Mattox was completely taken by surprise and entirely unprepared, but in a few modest remarks he accepted the gift and expressed his appreciation of the honor.

There were recitations, singing and a supper besides the other entertainments of the evening, and the visitors did not start for home until midnight.

A MYSTERIOUS DEATH

[From THE PRESS of March 13.]

Laura Bell, a young colored woman, aged about twenty years, died at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Elwood Reasoner, No. 46 East Third street, at 9:40 o'clock last evening, under very suspicious circumstances. County Physician Westcott was notified this morning, and a post-mortem examination will be held over the body possibly this afternoon.

The particulars and the mystery which surrounds the sudden death are these: About three weeks ago Henry Lee, a hackman, was summoned to a house on Franklin place and from there transferred Laura Bell to the home of one Betsy Jones, at No. 33 Cottage place, where she obtained board and remained until Thursday of last week. On that day she left the Jones house and applied for lodging at Mrs. Reasoner's. A room was provided for her, and she paid $2 in advance for two weeks lodging.

The woman told Mrs. Reasoner that her name was "Mrs. Belton," and that she was a widow, having lost her husband in South Carolina about six months ago. She said she came from New York about four months ago, and secured employment with a Mrs. Hall at Netherwood, where she remained in service until recently. Later she found employment with a family on Franklin place.

On Sunday the woman complained of great distress in her head, and on the following day she was taken dangerously ill. Dr. Murray was called in and prescribed for the patient. Yesterday her condition became alarmingly worse, and Drs. Hedges, Jenkins, Manning and Penfield were summoned. Dr. Jenkins reports having found the patient suffering from convulsions, and showing other evidences of poisoning. She continued to sink, however, rapidly, and died in great agony, at 9:40 o'clock last evening, as above stated.

A Press reporter interviewed City Physician Manning this afternoon. The doctor said that the circumstances surrounding the death were certainly very suspicious, and that the evidences of poisoning are very strong. He said he would not issue a burial permit until the County Physician viewed the remains.

The woman it appears was a domestic in Mr. S. A. Potter's family in North Plainfield about a year ago, but she left there and went to New York, where she has a sister living at No. 494 Seventh avenue, and since then but little is known concerning her, until recently when she returned to Plainfield. The sister was notified and is expected to arrive in Plainfield this afternoon.

THE WERTS BILL ALL RIGHT.

What Senator Baker Says.

(From the Trenton True American.)

The Werts bill was not reported to the House last night, as was generally anticipated. Messrs Donnelly and Bigelow were absent, and it was thought not advisable to bring the matter up. Neither will it come up today, as many of the members will be absent attending the township elections, and an agreement was entered into whereby neither party was to bring forth any partisan measures. The Australian election bill was made a special order for this morning, but it will very likely be laid over until a full House is present, though it is not looked upon as a party measure.

Senator Baker feels very easy about the unconstitutionality of his amendments. He thinks the effort being made by the Republican press to frighten the people by such a ghost scare will amount to nothing. He said last night that he had several talks with Attorney General Stockton before he voted on the measure as to its constitutionality, and that gentleman said that it was just as constitutional as the local option law passed last year. He did not consider that in consonance with the Constitution, but the courts so declared it, and if that was constitutional, says the attorney General, then the present bill, with the Baker amendments, is surely so. Gov. Green has expressed the same opinion to the Senator, and he feels sure that it is all right.

May Be Possible.

Who can tell how German carp have got in the South Branch. Last Summer numbers of them were caught. On Saturday last Henry W. Yorks, of Stanton, caught a fine one which weighed five pounds and seven ounces.

There is every reason to believe that the fish spoken of are the progeny of a fine lot of German carp which escaped from Col. John Dietrich's stocked pond on Arlington avenue, during a freshet which washed away many of the bridges in this locality, a few years ago.

Col. Dietrich's pond is located along Cedar Brook at its intersection with Arlington avenue. The brook empties into the Raritan river, and the South Branch is a tributary of the Raritan river. This seems to be conclusive proof that the fish caught may at least be related to those which escaped from Col. Dietrich's pond.

The writer paid a visit to the Colonel's residence, one pleasant Sunday afternoon just previous to the time his fish escaped. He was surprised to find a beautifully laid-out artificial pond, fed by the waters in Cedar Brook, and containing German carp and other rare fish furnished by the Government. After several years' growth the fish exceeded in size any shad found in the fish markets. The Colonel spent many an hour on the brink of his fish pond, and the writer will vouch for the assertion that German carp, as large as a good-sized blue fish would actually come to the surface and eat from the Colonel's hand. This was a daily occurrence.

The DeBaun Will Contest.

The matter of contesting the will of the late Antonio DeBaun drags along slowly in the courts. Mr. W. L. Hetfield, counsel in support of the will, is drawing up a petition which will soon be presented to the court, asking for citations to enable the legatees to be present at a hearing, on a date not yet announced.

Four New Laws.

The following bills were signed by Governor Green last Thursday:

Senate 45, provides that any married woman living in a state of separation from her husband who refuses to support her can convey mortgages and any interests she has in real estate.

Senate 62, act to settle disputed boundaries between adjoining cities, prescribing the method of procedure therefor.

House 92, amends the law relating to divorce so that parties actually residents of the State, when any desertion or adultery complained of took place, may apply; also if either party was a resident at such time and continued a resident thereafter.

Westfield Politics and Township Appropriations.

At the Democratic Primary held at the Town Rooms, Westfield, last Thursday, the following township officers were nominated:

For Town Clerk—Charles R. Clark; For Assessor—John M. C. Marsh; For Collector—Ira C. Lambert; Township Committee—William S. Welch.

A Conference Committee of three were appointed to confer with a like Committee appointed at the Republican Primary. The Joint Committee agreed on the following township appropriations:

Support of Poor	$500
Repair of Roads	1,500
Crushed Stone	1,500
Fire Department	300
Street Lamps	800

Incidental expenses $1,800 including $200 for a lock-up.

Beware of the Dogs.

A large and handsome mastiff dog, belonging to Mr. Geo. Frazee of Peace street, has been acting strangely for several days past, and on Tuesday the animal showed signs of the rabbies. The dog growled and snapped and became vicious, so Mr. Frazee determined to put an end to his dogship's career, which feat was accomplished with the aid of a revolver. The dog was bitten on the hind leg about three weeks ago by a black mongrel dog. It is said that two of Mr. Evan Jones' dogs were bitten by the mastiff a few days since.

There is a city ordinance which bears upon the dog question. It provides that the owners of dogs must have the brutes muzzled at all seasons of the year, when running at large on the streets, but the ordinance is evidently a dead letter.

(From the Somerville Messenger.)

The following transfers of real estate have recently been made in North Plainfield, and deeds for the same have been recorded with the County Clerk:

THE NEW MARRIAGE LAW.

The now famous marriage license bill, introduced by Mr. Feeney, passed the House at Trenton, March 6, and in its discussion the Camden clergy were severely dealt with by some of the members.

Assemblyman Ulrich of this city, made an earnest appeal for the bill. He said it would throw a most necessary safeguard about the ministry and society as well. In support of his remarks Judge Ulrich presented a number of petitions signed by ministers of nearly all the religious denominations, bishops, rectors, President Patton and nearly every member of the faculty of Princeton College. Mr. Ulrich was on his feet several times, and declared that if the bill was a political measure, as Mr. Riker asserted, then he would gladly vote with the Democrats for the first time since he became a member of the House.

The bill was passed by a vote of 38 to 20. It provides that no person shall be joined in marriage until a license shall have been obtained from the County Clerk, for which he must pay $1; fifty cents of which the Clerk can keep for himself and the other fifty cents goes to the county.

The license obtained shall have appended to it two certificates, numbered to correspond with said license, setting forth the names of the contracting parties and the date of marriage, and signed by the person solemnizing the marriage. One of the certificates is to be taken by the persons married and the other to be returned to the County Clerk by the person who solemnizes the marriage.

HE REHEARSED IN PLAINFIELD.

A few weeks ago, as told in these columns, a Press reporter got on the track of a false pretending stranger about town here, followed him into the office of the United States Express Co., heard him coax a dollar out of Agent Andrew Kenney, and then sent for Officer Lynch. Mr. Jessee Hatfield, who had also been a victim, followed the man to the station, however, and arrived before the officer and in time to prevent the swindler's escape on a train.

The suspect was arrested by Officer Lynch, but Chief Corey released him and now Inspector Byrnes' detectives of New York, are looking for the same man who has been going about that city for some time past swindling the dry goods and hardware men out of small sums of money.

He has been representing himself as a clerk in the employ of Ladd & Co., a well-known firm of Providence, R. I., and gives various names, the usual one being Albert Morris.

He gets money by telling the people whom he visits that he is short of funds and wants enough to get him home. He claims that he has been traveling for the firm and unexpectedly ran out of coin.

The police of New York say that his real name is Albert Meyerheim, and that he is a man formerly employed by Ladd & Co., who was discharged for dishonesty.

Frequently, when he could not see a member of the firm, he would give the bookkeeper or the cashier the grand razzle-dazzle by borrowing a small sum for current expenses and not returning it. He would always promise to bring back the amount of the loan next day.

He would also, in order to strengthen his case, always ask the bookkeeper or member of the firm to telegraph to Ladd & Co., Providence, and make inquiries about him if they doubted his story. This they occasionally did—after he had gone out.

The case was put in the hands of Inspector Byrnes by Ladd & Co., who were annoyed by the numerous complaints which they received from all over.

The Jury Commission Repealer Signed.

Governor Green, March 6, placed his official signature to Senate bill 43, the Jury Commission repealer, and it is now on the statute books of the State.

Grace Church Lenten Services.

Every afternoon at 5 P. M. except Wednesday and Friday—on those days there will be the Litany service at 12 M. On Thursdays the address will be delivered by rectors of neighboring parishes.

Those Who Care for the Borough's Health.

The Borough Board of health met on March 6 at the residence of Dr. J. H. Carman. There was only one complaint brought to the notice of the Board, and it received their usual prompt attention.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy was re-elected President of the Board, and Dr. J. H. Carman as Secretary for another term. The other members are Messrs P. M. French, Isaac Brokaw and Chas. Wann.

Chauncey Ripley's Clever Wins.

In January THE PRESS published an account of the case of Mr. John Libbey, surviving husband of the late Mrs. Lurade Heath of Scotch Plains, against the daughter of Mrs. Heath by her first husband, Mrs. Dr. Emma T. Mason.

Wednesday Mch 6 was rendered the decision of the N. Y. Court of Appeals in favor of Mr. Libbey whose counsel in the case was Chauncey B. Ripley, Esq., of Westfield.

A Law Long Needed.

President Percy C. Ohl, and other members of the New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society, were present at an Assembly Committee meeting in the State House, March 6, for conference on a proposed bill modifying and codifying the New Jersey game laws in relation to open seasons, etc.

The bill was prepared by the above society, and introduced by Judge Ulrich. Delegates interested in the matter from all over the State were present yesterday, and the provisions were found to suit all sections.

Chris Becker Struck in the Flesh.

Chris Becker, the West Front street dyer, was struck by the pilot on the engine of an East-bound coal train, about one hundred yards East of the Washington street crossing, at half-past six o'clock morning Mch 7, and hurled twenty feet down an embankment, striking on his head. The old man was picking coal from the East siding, nearly opposite to his home on East Fourth street, and evidently was not aware of the fact that all East-bound coal and freight trains now pass over the third track or siding between Bound Brook and Elizabeth.

Although the train men tried to warn him of his danger, Mr. Becker evidently did not hear them, and he was struck and thrown down the embankment as described above. When picked up his face was found to be terribly cut and bruised, and he was also badly bruised about the body and legs.

The injured man was carried home, and medical aid was immediately summoned.

Mr. Bennett Makes an Assignment.

Mr. Peter H. Bennett, the grocer and butcher of 42 Park avenue, last Thursday made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, to Wm. R. Codington, of the firm of Jackson & Codington.

Mr. Bennett has carried on the business of grocer and butcher there for about one year and ahalf, having bought out the business of B. H. Sachman. He is well thought of in the community, and felt it his duty to take the course he has in order that all his unsecured creditors may share equally according to the assets. His failure is chiefly due to selling goods on credit and not being able to collect what is due him. Mr. Bennett's liabilities are somewhat over $4,000; his assets about $3,500; the latter made up of over $2,000, due him on book accounts, and $1,500 of stock and fixtures.

He has made a wise choice of assignee, and gives an assurance to his creditors that they will be fairly and honestly dealt with, and get all out of the assets that can be realized therefrom.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER
THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food. It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.
Sold only in cans, full weight.

—Just at present the sidewalk question is being agitated in North Plainfield. If those persons, residents, and property owners in the borough, who promised to put down sidewalks a year ago, will just turn the leaves in their Bible to the 10th and 11th verses of the 9th chapter of Second Corinthians, they may be instructed accordingly. Off On a Lark.

A party of young thoroughbreds from this city, four in number, hired turnouts from Mr. D. S. Roberts and Richard Day on Monday, ostensibly to "drive to Netherwood and collect some bills." From later developments it is evident that the party "braced up" before leaving town, and they first went to Scotch Plains, thence to New Providence and Madison, where they abandoned the two rigs, leaving them in a livery stable, and boarded a train for Morristown.

Meanwhile the owners of the rigs becoming anxious started out to recover their property, which they traced to Madison and took possession of, after paying expenses.

The young men it is said, went over to Morristown, had a wine supper, and returned to Madison Tuesday morning only to find that the two horses and buggies had disappeared. They were without funds, and it is alleged, they walked to Newark, where three of them succeeded in obtaining funds and arrived home during the day. The fourth one has not yet shown up.

Miss Susan Gilbert, an experienced and most accomplished teacher, will be placed in charge of the new public school building to be opened on April 22. The funeral will take place from the house on Sunday at 2 P. M.

The Rev. E. P. Miller of Perth Amboy, will preach next Friday evening at this church, and the rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy, will conduct the services, commencing at 7:30.

Sued for $200, but Got Nothing.

An interesting dog case was tried before Justice Nodyne and a jury, March 7, which occupied almost the entire day. The case was brought by Mr. Pennington on behalf of a lad named Isaac Searles, against Mr. John Schorb, Sr., to recover $200 damages alleged to be due the boy on account of a dog bite received on Dec. 1, last. Mr. W. A. Coddington appeared for the plaintiff and Corporation Counsel Marsh conducted the defence. Over twenty witnesses were examined for and against the defence.

Justice Nodyne charged the jury on a recent decision given in the Supreme Court by Judges Dixon, Parker and Reed. The jury retired at at 5:15 P. M., and in three-quarters of an hour returned a verdict of "no cause of action." Testimony was taken by Stenographer H. C. Dingee.

Dr. Charles F. Stillman is now an Important Professor.

For the first time in the history of medicine a chair of Physical Examination for Life Insurance has been created, and the ambitious, well-conducted University of Vermont has been the first to take this important step.

The three largest companies—the Mutual, Equitable and New York—alone invested in human life during the last year about $400,000,000. As every dollar of insurance in the one hundred active companies has to be placed upon the recommendation of physicians, it will be seen that they occupy a position, as examiners, which requires the utmost care and skill upon their part in order to protect the interests of the public and of the companies with which they are connected. The three companies already cited have upon their books the names of between seven and ten thousand examining physicians.

Dr. Chas. F. Stillman of New York, son of the late Dr. Charles Stillman of this city, who has been a local medical examiner for the Mutual Life Ins. Co., for the last eight years, has been chosen by the faculty of the College to be the pioneer in this important work.

THE PLAINFIELD BOWLING CLUB.

At a meeting held at the residence of Mr. J. A. Haines, Wednesday, Mch 6, as mentioned in THE PRESS of next day, the following gentlemen, Messrs E. C. Kleb, J. A. Haines, J. W. Davis, A. V. Kline, C. C. Burnett, C. E. Teel, A. C. Horton, G. E. Sanders, S. H. Andrews, G. A. Hallock, J. A. Smith, H. S. Teel, J. B. Kline, Mortimer Day and W. W. Martin, organized the Plainfield Bowling Club, by electing the following officers:

PRESIDENT—E. C. Kleb.
VICE PRESIDENT—C. C. Burnett.
SECRETARY—H. S. Teel.
TREASURER—J. A. Haines.

Some of the above gentlemen were until very recently members of the Fanwood Club, and its bowling team, and, as it was the sense of the meeting to form a team, Mr. J. W. Davis was duly elected Captain with instructions to make his selection for a team to open on or about March 18, the Olympia Alleys, now in course of construction, on Sycamore street, this city. With this object in view a challenge was sent to the Monday Night Club of Westfield for a friendly game, which was promptly accepted, and it is expected that Mr. Asa Collier, the proprietor of the new alleys, and the friends whom he and the members of the Club may invite for the occasion, will have the pleasure of seeing a well contested game.

The team selected by Mr. Davis met at The Crescent on Saturday evening next, to begin its practice by bowling against the other members of the club who are not on the team.

A number of gentlemen, who were unable to attend the meeting Wednesday night, sent communications to the effect that they wished to be enrolled as members. Their names were placed on the roll, and due notice of the adjourned meeting will be sent them by the Secretary.

A Committee of three, consisting of Messrs A. V. Kline, J. W. Davis and C. C. Burnett, was appointed by the chair to negotiate with Mr. Collier for the permanent use of the alleys and Club House on Monday evenings during the entire season.

Printed applications for membership will be placed in the hands of Mr. J. B. Kline, ticket agent, at the Plainfield station, where those desiring to join the Club may obtain them.

There was a large number present at the entertainment given in Hope Chapel, under the auspices of the Hope Chapel Temperance Club, Friday night. An interesting programme, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, etc., was announced by Mr. Samuel Smith, who presided, and each and every part was acceptably rendered. They Dined on Luxuries.

The guests of Force's Hotel were on Monday regaled with the luxury of fine, fresh frost fish, captured in the Raritan river on Saturday, and presented to the proprietor by Mr. R. S. Leverich, manager of the well-known White Hall Hotel, of New Brunswick, corner of Albany and Peace streets, of which R. A. Rue is proprietor. "Bob" knew this treat would be acceptable to his friends, and hence his kindness.

Lenten Services Begun.

There was a large congregation at the Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, Friday, it being the first of the Friday evening Lenten services. It was conducted by the Rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy.

A most interesting and instructive sermon was preached by the Rev. W. S. Langford of New York. The singing by the new choir was particularly fine, and the selections appropriate for the season.

Sociable at Warren Mission Chapel.

An unusually large number of persons were present at the sociable given in Warren Mission chapel, on Thursday evening. The programme included two recitations by Miss Gaddis of Orange, violin and organ selections by Mr. Andrew Carpenter, a recitation by Mr. Herbert Thatcher, readings by Miss Stella Van-Middlesworth, and singing by the Misses Lottie and Daisy Morse and Miss Minnie Martin. Mr. Walter Dobbins acted as master of ceremonies.

The Blizzard Eclipsed.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—For the past few days the mud hole in Plainfield avenue, which has extended from Seventh street to the city line, has made that thoroughfare more impassable than did the blizzard of a year ago. The utter neglect of this important highway gives it quite the appearance of an abandoned canal.

Only experts in handling the ribbons, familiar with the land-marks, and having good courage, with well-drilled teams, would dare venture on this perilous voyage across an abyss. Those who travel up and down that way will be happy when the city makes a roadway where the road should be.

EYE WITNESS.

[This is no exaggeration.—ED.]

TRINITY CHURCH SOCIABLE.

The members and congregation of Trinity Reformed church, held their regular monthly church sociable in the parlors of the church, March 7. The attendance was large, and general sociability prevailed. The programme was of an informal nature, and opened by a skillfully executed piano solo, by Miss Carrie Dewey.

Following was a dumb-bell and wand drill by these young ladies: Miss Lulu Snediker, Miss Etta Krymer, Miss Julia Johnson, Miss Lizzie Dunn, Miss Lizzie Harford, Miss Lillian Force. The young ladies performed some very difficult evolutions with the wands and dumb-bells, and showed proficiency in marching, accompanied on the piano by Miss Flora Randolph. Miss Lulu Snediker, who acted as leader or captain, is to be congratulated upon the able and efficient manner in which she conducted the drill.

Other literary and musical features of the entertainment were a piano solo by Miss Lilian Force, and a recitation by Master George Snediker.

During the evening, the venerable Mr. William Swaim called the gathering to order and in a few well chosen and appropriate words presented Mrs. Schenck, the wife of the pastor, with a handsome bed spread. The surprise was complete, but Mrs. Schenck was equal to the occasion, and accepted the gift with appreciative words of thanks. The spread is a handsome piece of workmanship and contains over 300 names of members and friends of the church, solicited by Mrs. D. Snediker and Miss M. Berkaw, who were also the originators of the novel scheme to collect money for the church debt fund. $56.81 was collected on the spread in sums ranging from fifteen cents up.

Mr. F. S. Dunn, President of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, acted as Master of Ceremonies.

The ladies feel that their great work has prospered during the year. Their meetings have been well attended, their membership has increased to 135, and the Auxiliary has [illegible] life members. Two public meetings have been held, addressed respectively by Miss Muggridge, direct from Paris, and by Rev. Mr. Bracq, the General Secretary of the American Auxiliary. At both of these meetings Plainfield clergymen cordially officiated. At a parlor meeting in the Autumn, Mrs. Robert Miller of London, related some personal experiences in the work as carried on in that city. Fresh news from the field has been regularly sent in the form of interesting letters from Paris and articles from the French press. These with other interesting selections form a feature of the regular meetings.

The Treasurer reports that over $4[illegible] has been raised during the year. The Auxiliary desires to express their grateful appreciation to the clergymen who have rendered so much valuable assistance, and also to acknowledge their indebtedness for the use of the Crescent Avenue church and chapel on the occasion of the two public meetings, and for the very generous donation of $[illegible] from that church.

Chickens Thieves About.

Some mean thief or thieves entered the henery of Mr. Thomas H. Pittis on Central avenue, during Sunday night, and stole eighty-five of his finest chickens. Forty fowls were left Mr. Pittis for breeding purposes.

Harbingers of Spring.

A large flock of black birds arrived in this city Monday. They went direct to their fashionable and favorite abode, among the pines on the property of the late Judge Roome, on Washington avenue.

Worse and Worse.

The changes in the railroad schedule are all to Plainfield's disadvantage. The 12:32 and 2:57 P. M., express trains to New York—the very trains of which more are needed—are taken off entirely and no others substituted, and the 11 A. M., from New York doesn't stop anymore.

On Sundays, visitors from New York in the morning cannot get here any time between 6:12 and 10:42 o'clock.

A Plainfielder to the Rescue.

Mr. John Kelly a member of Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company of this city, was in Elizabeth Monday A. M., when a fire broke out in a lumber yard on Bond street. He ran to Lafayette truck house, and finding no one there but the driver, volunteered his services at the wheel. The truck drew up to the fire soon after the alarm was sounded. Four engines were called out, and by noon the fire was under control.

Rev Mr. Mitchell's Sermon to Women.

Rev. C. E. Mitchell, pastor of the M. E. church in this city, preached the first in a series of sermons to women, Sunday, a large and appreciative audience being in attendance. The reverend gentleman clearly and forcibly illustrated the superiority of women over men, and showed to what extent they have been elevated since the fall of mankind. He also alluded to some of the greatest women in ancient times. Rev. Mr. Mitchell will continue his series on Sunday evening next.

A Fraternal Surprise.

Friday night seven gentlemen of high standing, and dignified representatives of the Ancient and Accepted Rite of F. & A. M., paid their ex-City Councilman of Philadelphia, W. H. Warner now of West Front street, this city, a fraternal surprise. The visitors were all members of Mr. Warner's Masonic lodge, and friends from boyhood days. They were cordially received and entertained by the hostess, Mrs. Warner, who did the honors of the house.

After a friendly and social talk a luncheon was served, the brethren being seated as follows: Jos. A. George, Com. in Chief Consistories of S. P. R. S., No. 32, of Philadelphia; M. Nesbit, P. S. C. C. and Grand Secretary of the G. L., of Penn.; Jos. C. Emery, P. M. W. and P. M., of Rose Croix, No. 18, of Penn.; T. A. Woodbury, P. M. W. and P. M., of Rose Croix, No. 18, of Penn.; Geo. F. Knight, P. M. E. Sov. P. G. M., Prince of Jerusalem, No. 16, of Philadelphia; W. F. Hirst, P. M. E. Sov. P. G. M., Prince of Jerusalem, No. 16, of Philadelphia; T. B. Barber, P. T. G. M., Perfection, No. 14, of Philadelphia.

Mr. M. Nesbit, Past Grand Master of Pennsylvania, now Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge, occupied the head of the table in the East. Past Eminent Commander T. B. Barber, M. D., offered grace. Labor upon this degree occupied one hour, after which Past Grand Master Nesbit, made an extended speech on the rise and progress of Masonry. Toasts were offered and responded to by all present. The occasion was a very enjoyable one, and all were pleased with their visit. The company adjourned in the wee small hours of the morning.

After a life of over half-a-century on the seas—the last twenty years of which have been spent in the service of William P. Clyde & Co.—Captain Benjamin Doane has urged upon those gentlemen his resignation, and has turned his back upon his good ship "Cherokee."

At the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. Hervey Doane, on La Grande avenue, the bronzed and rugged Captain is now enjoying his first hours' absence from duty, in a score of years; and the voice that night after night heard above the fury of the ocean storm has brought a feeling of security to every soul aboard, now charms the little grandchild that nestles tenderly in those sturdy arms that oft have clung like cables to the mast aloft from whence through the inky blackness of many nights the Captain has directed the only course that could save the ship.

Every member of the crew and every employee aboard the "Cherokee"—one of the most elegant of the coastwise steamships of the Clyde line—feels the retirement of Captain Doane as they would the loss of their dearest friend; and just as fully do the owners realize their loss, also. Years of such faithful service as that rendered by Captain Doane in the care of his employers' property and the safety of their patrons, have caused them to thoroughly recognize the fact that he is one of a thousand and that probably his place in their interest can never again be filled as fully.

Messrs Clyde & Co., have therefore time and time again begged a postponement of the Captain's resignation when he has urged that his three-score years and ten of active life deserved a rest at last. They even now retain the faithful officer in the post of honor at the very top of their list, and say they will not accept his resignation. He may go where he pleases and do as he likes, but the Clyde Steamship Company has attained its reputation for thorough efficiency, and record of absolute safety, by the service of just such capable and careful men, and it proposes to keep their names upon its roll—an honor to them and an assurance of the Company's appreciation of those who are loyal to the Line and faithful to its passengers.

Killed at Westfield.

Henry R. Slingermann, a resident of Bound Brook, fell from the West bound Philadelphia fast freight train which passes through this city about one A. M., at the Westfield station, Wednesday, and was instantly killed, the body being cut entirely in two. It is supposed that the man was on his way home, when he met his fate.

The train with engine No. 430 is the same one upon which brakeman Geo. M. Parks of Philadelphia was instantly killed by being struck by the overhead bridge at Fanwood, a few days ago.

NEW MARKET NOTES.

The Road master was busily engaged laying stone to a small portion of the road between here and Dunellen, on Saturday, indicative of a reminder to the working man that election day is near at hand.

The Republicans believe in many terms of office by the nomination of all the outgoing officers who seem to look upon their positions as life terms.

The notice for election of School Trustee is up for Tuesday, the 19th inst.

The appropriation for roads is $5,000 both on the Republican and Democratic tickets, ½ to be used in stone, gravel and draining, which promises better results than the foolish way the money has been wasted for years.

BROAD BRIM.

Saved by Mr. Dewey.

About 11 o'clock Tuesday morning an accident which might have been fatal in its results was prevented from happening by the presence of mind and prompt action of Mr. Charles E. Dewey, a clerk in the law office of Messrs Jackson & Codington.

A little boy was playing in the shaft just under the elevator of Laire's hardware store. The boy's attention was otherwise engaged, when unexpectedly and without his knowing it, the elevator with a man on it commenced to rapidly descend.

Mr. Dewey, who was passing at the time, at a glance took in the danger of the situation and shouted to the man on the elevator to stop its descent. He did so just in time to save the boy from being crushed to death—the elevator being only a few inches above the boy when it stopped.

A Plainfielder Hurt in a Runaway Accident.

A report was circulated on the streets Monday to the effect that Mr. Jeremiah Rowe, a resident of North Plainfield, had been so seriously injured in a runaway accident, somewhere in the Southern part of the State, recently, that it had become necessary to amputate one of his legs. In order to get the true facts in the matter, a PRESS reporter called at Mr. Rowe's residence on Grove street, during the forenoon, and found Mrs. Rowe and the children at home.

The reporter learned from Mrs. Rowe that her husband was employed by the Chicago Dressed Beef company, at the company's agency in Long Branch. On the first of the present month, Mr. Rowe was at work delivering his orders when his team of horses ran away, throwing him out. The flesh on one of his legs was literally torn from the bone, and he was badly bruised about the head and body.

The wounds, although of a serious nature are by no means as bad as reported, and the physician in charge has hopes of saving the limb. Mrs. Rowe's only information concerning the accident was by letter.

KITCHEN ECONOMY.

Some Official Tests of Baking Powders, Showing their Comparative Strength and which is Most Economical.

The below tabulated statements are extracts from public tests of baking powders, made to ascertain their relative value in practical use in baking. The powder containing the largest amount of available leavening gas (excluding the alum and phosphate powders) not only produces the finest, most delicious and wholesome food, but is the most economical in use.

Name.	Cubic in Gas per oz. Powder.
Royal	127.4
Patapsco (alum powder)	125.2
Horsford's (fresh)	121.6
Horsford's (not fresh)	84.35
Charm (alum powder)	116.9
Cleveland's	110.8
Sea Foam	107.9
Dr. Price's	102.6

Massachusetts State Analysts found the strength of several baking powders, as follows:

Name.	Cu. in. gas per oz.
Royal	130.15
Cleveland's	107.7
Congress	91.2
Horsford's	96.1

Prof. C. W. Parsons, New York College of Pharmacy, in tests made for the Grocers Association of New York, found the strength of six brands as follows:

Name.	Cu. in. gas per oz.
Royal	136.16
Cleveland's	119.97
Sea Foam	113.33
Dr. Price's	109.27
Horsford's	102.84
Congress	96.86

Tests by Prof. McMurtrie, late Chemist in Chief, U. S. Agricultural Department, Washington D. C.:

Name.	Cu. in. gas per oz.
Royal	127.06
Cleveland's	104.10
Dr. Price's	96.50
None Such	77.34
Horsford's (phosphate)	71.00

It will be noticed that the Royal produces from 17 to 40 per cent. more leavening gas than any other cream of tartar powder, and is consequently that much more economical.

Prof. Henry Morton, of the Stevens Institute of Technology, New Jersey, says: "I have examined the Royal Baking Powder and find it entirely free from alum, terra alba or other injurious substances."

A Difficulty Surmounted.

It is often very difficult to tell what kind of a laxative to give a very young child who is suffering from pain. The only medicine which is at the same time perfectly safe, effective, and pleasant to take, is HAMBURG FIGS. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. Mack Drug Co., N. Y. J. G. Miller, Agent, Plainfield.

My boy (three years old) was recently taken with cold in the head. It seemed finally to settle in his nose, which was stopped up for days and nights so that it was difficult for him to breathe and sleep. I called a physician, who prescribed, but did him no good. Finally I went to the drug store and got a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. It seemed to work like magic. The boy's nose was clear in two days, and he has been all right ever since.—E. J. ONE DOLLAR A MINUTE!

That's big pay isn't it? Well, that's about what you'll save if you trade with us. For five minutes spent amid our stock will demonstrate that you can save at least five dollars on a suit comparing our prices with what they ask for similar goods elsewhere. Hardly anybody's time is worth a dollar a minute if we except, perhaps, lawyers and plumbers. And this rule applies with equal force to Overcoats, to single garments and to children's clothing.

Perhaps you think that Winter goods will not be needed now. If we supposed the weather of the past week or so was to continue, we would offer a line of Pongees and Seersuckers. But Overcoat weather is near and the tardiness of the season favors the buyer. Come in and see if it isn't so.

Some Interesting Phases of New York Society.

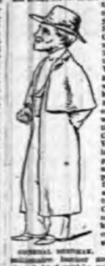
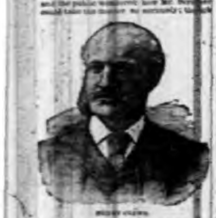
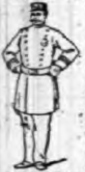
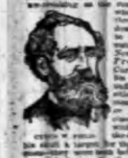
Special New York Correspondence.

THE New York [illegible]









[illegible] The carelessness or superficiality concerning local history and places of interest is paralleled by the general ignorance of prominent people who walk in our midst. General Grant used to pass the Fifth Avenue Hotel at about four o'clock every pleasant afternoon on his way up-town, yet not one in a hundred of the crowd on Broadway paused to give the quiet little man a second glance. Carl Schurz's tall, lank figure and thoughtful face does not attract the slightest attention from the Broadway promenader. Not one New Yorker in a hundred knows Jay Gould, or Russell Sage, or John Jacob Astor by sight, and yet they are on the streets almost every day. I met General Sherman in Daly's foyer the other evening and Mr. Daly addressed him as "General." "General what?" whispered my companion, an old New Yorker. You would think that the illustrated papers had made his features so familiar to the public that there would be no mistaking him.

It is not remarkable, then, that some of New York's most active citizens whose names are household words wherever newspapers are read should be utterly unknown by sight.

Walk with me on Broadway for an hour and I will point out a dozen men whose reputations extend the length and breadth of the land, and yet who hardly attract a passing glance from the casual promenader.

William M. Evarts, with his hat pulled down over his ears and his eccentric shirt collar, nobody can mistake. His nose, his hat and his collar constitute a "make-up," as handsome Bob Hilliard, who follows close behind, would say, which nobody can mistake. That tall, soldierly-looking man with a bronzed face, his firm mouth shaded by a heavy brown mustache and his under lip set off by a tiny tuft, a l'Empereur, is Alexander Williams, the best of the many good men upon our much-abused police force, a giant in stature, an athlete in physique, a man devoid of fear and with a heart as big as his body, as those who know him best have discovered.

Following him comes a man muffled in a great fur-lined coat, his strongly-marked features, his straggling hair and beard and his broad forehead are familiar enough to us through the crayons of the caricaturist, yet comparatively few recognize him as Cyrus W. Field, the man who laid the Atlantic cable and built the elevated railroad. With him is a gentleman whose fine face with its grave beard and mustache, his erect figure and energetic appearance would attract attention anywhere. It is Colonel F. Shepard, Vanderbilt's son-in-law [illegible] of no avail. After two hours' effort the body continued lifeless; hope had fled. The negro continued, however, while the doctor paused. The desire to save his friend, if possible, and the scientific aspect of the question that had been raised caused a renewed attempt; more injections were given and more hot bottles were applied.

More than three hours had elapsed and again was the attempt abandoned, and again made vigorously made. After nearly four hours of hard work, and when about to desist for the third time, Dr. Armor thought he detected a slight movement of the [illegible]. Soon again he was positive he saw it. Again he noticed it after a long interval, and was certain of returning life. The stethoscope discovered an occasional light, [illegible] sound over the heart. More injections were given and efforts at artificial respiration were redoubled. At last the gasp became pronounced, the heart-beats more frequent, the respiration deeper and more regular, until eventually respiration and circulation were established, but at a slow rate. Consciousness was not regained for hours, but eventually returned.

Dr. Armor's description of his own feelings and those of the family and the negro at the time may be better imagined than described. The patient was alive and well over a score of years afterward; in fact he was alive and well but a few years ago, and prominently known and interested in New England banking and financial circles.

A Few Pertinent Hints on the Education of Girls—Marriage a Sad Lottery and, at the Best, a State Full of Cares, Worry and Anxieties.

I have met with very few unmarried ladies who have not appeared to me to feel, after the age of thirty, that their existence was thoroughly comfortless and wretched, writes an "Old Maid" in the New York Ledger. Many have I heard express themselves thus openly; and that such is the fact can very easily be learned by an accurate observer of the human countenance. It is also certain that three out of every five of the young ladies of the present day must remain unmarried, because so many young men think they can not exist on less than two thousand a year when married; and how few men there are with two thousand a year compared with the number of young ladies in the country! There are sometimes five, six, eight girls in one family; generally all tolerably pretty, and most of them pleasing and accomplished women—many possessing talents of no ordinary stamp—yet, perhaps, in our drawing-rooms these lovely and accomplished beings are completely neglected by the other sex, "because" (I must repeat the sentiments I have heard from thousands of young men of fashion) "I never talk to girls. I dare not pay attention to unmarried women, because I am not a marrying man; my friend, —— flirted with so-and-so, and was accused of behaving improperly. I don't like to excite false hopes; I shall never marry, unless I can find a wife with at least two or three thousand a year, because I am much richer unmarried with the small fortune I have."

It is of no use to quarrel with the state of society as it is at present constituted, for we can not alter it; but I think it might be beneficial to give a few hints on the education of women, which might perhaps be useful in [illegible]

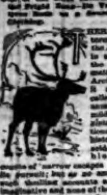
THE REINDEER.

One of the Most Interesting Animals of the Frigid Zone—Its Value to the Natives Both as a Source of Food and Clothing.



THERE is no more interesting animal in the Arctic regions, or in any other part of the world for that matter, than the Arctic deer. True, it can hardly be called a combative animal, except a few mild displays of resistance in exceptional cases, and its history is therefore seldom filled with blood-curdling accounts of "narrow escapes" by man while in its pursuit; but as an equal proportion of such thrilling accounts are more or less imaginative and none of them very instructive, this fact does not detract much from the interesting features of this animal of the frigid zone.

It is the most useful animal to the white explorer in those regions, for on the eastern continent it is his most reliable beast of burden, while on both continents it furnishes the finest meat his palate will encounter in the polar zone. The flesh of the only other herbivorous animal in that cold climate—the musk-ox—is oftentimes rank and tainted with the odor which gives it its name, while the seal, walrus and most other marine animals have very disagreeable fishy flavors that are repugnant to civilized taste.

I know that there is a general belief that reindeer are used by the northern nations on both continents for hauling their sledges and similar work, but this is one of the many popular polar fallacies extant, as the domesticated reindeer is known only in Siberia and Arctic Europe. When I spoke to the natives on our own side—the Eskimo—about tame reindeer pulling sledges the most of them were as much surprised and incredulous as if I had informed them that other Arctic people tamed the polar bear or the wolverine to drag sledges or the seal and walrus to pull boats. To them the reindeer is as wild an animal as any of those named, and probably if questioned just after they had failed to secure an unusually fat one, or with a fine robe that would have made a splendid coat for winter or blanket for their bedding, they would inform you that they were considerably wilder, and that they were not inclined to believe your story about such wary creatures ever being [illegible] reindeer were running in herds, but in the summer, when scattered over the country grazing, they were much more difficult of approach.

THE ARCTIC REINDEER.

It seems to be a general principle of all animals that run in herds or packs that they have a false idea of security resulting from the large numbers. It is such animals that are particularly prone to extermination by those who wantonly take advantage of this without regard to their wants and more for so-called sport than for the uses to which they can put the carcasses. The killing of myriads of buffaloes for sport and for their tongues or hides only, are the most striking examples in existence.

One of the most curious characteristics of the reindeer is the readiness with which they will take to the water, although, of course the only season they can do this is during the short summer when the lakes and arms of the sea are not covered with ice. They even "go in swimming," so to speak, apparently for the enjoyment of it, and I have often thought that their fondness for the water was to cool their bodies at that season caused by overheating from their thick hair. Here it is that some of the Eskimo methods of hunting them are based on this half aquatic habit that they seem to have. By mounds of stone made to represent men and running back a mile or so from the shores of the lake or river, the reindeer are frightened into the water by two or three hunters driving them against or towards these rock figures, and then they are pursued in canoes and killed with lances. It is an exciting hunt and was much used by the native hunters before they secured fire-arms, and even yet employed when practicable to save ammunition, and altogether, by those wild bands that have not yet secured guns from white men or adjoining tribes. Another method among these wild tribes is to build pit-falls by digging deep in the snow and covering the top with only a few inches of snow resting on a support, and through this the deer breaks and is afterwards captured and slain. Otherwise the natives without guns must approach their reindeer near enough to secure them with a bow and arrows, and this is very difficult, as the reindeer can hear their feet crunching on the snow, and also hear the "twang" of the bow-string before the arrow strikes them, unless the bowman is very close to his intended victim. As a consequence those Eskimo are the poorest clothed of any in the Arctic, and will not compare with those furnished with guns and ammunition.

FREDERICK SCHWATKA.

A LITTLE FORESIGHT.

Why It Is of More Use Than An Unlimited Quantity of Afterthought.

A little foresight is of more value than much afterthought, says the Sunday-School Times. Foresight is the planner, afterthought is the critic, of our deeds. What painful scenes, embarrassments, regrets, disappointments, self-accusations, the habit of looking ahead and planning to meet and to arrange the future will avoid! Time and money spent in designing a building perfectly, in definitely predetermining principles and rules of action, and marking off limits before embarking in any new project, in mapping out work, in arranging engagements, in avoiding conflicts of duty and the impossible demand to be in two places at one time, are well spent. But the forethought is more difficult than the afterthought. The one requires intense application to systematic consideration and search of the field of the possible; the other suggests itself instantly and naturally. Anybody can see that the door is in the wrong place after the house is built, or can say that the speech was a mistake after it had been delivered and its effect noticed. It is easier to criticise well than to construct well; but it is more useful to construct a plan perfectly beforehand, than to criticise it afterwards.

TROUBLESOME NEIGHBORS.

Oh, would there in this world be found
Some little spot of happy ground
Where village pleasure might go round
Without the village tattling!
How doubly blest that spot would be,
Where all might dwell in liberty,
Free from the bitter misery
Of gossips' endless prattling.

If such a spot were really known,
Fair Peace might claim it as her own,
And in it she might fix her throne
Forever and forever;
There like a queen to reign and live,
While every one would soon forgive
The little slights they might receive,
And be offended never.

'Tis mischief-makers that remove
Far from our hearts the warmth of love,
And lead us all to disapprove
What gives another pleasure.
They seem to take one's part, but when They've heard our cares, unkindly then
They soon retail them all again,
Mixed with their poisonous measure.

And then they've such a cunning way
Of telling ill-meant tales; they say:
"Don't mention what I've said, I pray;
I would not tell another!"
Straight to your neighbor's house they go,
Narrating every thing they know,
And break the peace of high and low,
Wife, husband, friend and brother.

Oh, that the mischief-making crew
Were all reduced to one or two,
And they were painted red or blue,
That every one might know them!
Then would our villagers forget
To rage and quarrel, fume and fret,
Or fall into an angry pet
With things so much below them.

For 'tis a sad, degrading part,
To make another's bosom smart,
And plant a dagger in some heart
We ought to love and cherish.
Then let us evermore be found
In harmony with all around,
While friendship, joy and peace abound,
And angry feelings perish.

JOSIE'S MARRIAGE.

A Chicago Heiress Weds an English Aristocrat

Supposing Him to Be a "Lord"—She Gets a Divorce—Suddenly Becoming Viscount She Desires a Rehitch, But He Cawn't, You Know.

From Hon. Frederick Galloway to his Elder Brother, Hon. Francis Galloway.

GRAND PACIFIC HOTEL, CHICAGO, April 12, 1888.—Dear Frank: It is ages since I heard from you, but I suppose every thing goes on as usual, and that you can find nothing to write about. When I wrote last I told you about my engagement to Miss Josie Fairfield, only daughter and heiress of Jeremiah Fairfield; and I think I gave you a fair description of your future sister-in-law. Old Jeremiah is behaving very handsomely, and is going to plank down a fair share of his dollars in hard cash. I am in excellent condition, and, to use a favorite expression of my fiancee's, "am just having a lovely time."

Every body here makes an awful fuss over me, and will insist on calling me "Lord Galloway." Titles here are held in the highest veneration; but the majority of the people I have met don't seem to know the difference between an honorable and a marquess. My future father-in-law took me over his pig-sticking establishment yesterday, and each time he came to a group of butchers at work he would stop them for an instant and say: "This is Lord Galloway, my future son-in-law."

There is one curious mistake that every one has made here, and that is that they have all taken it for granted that I am the elder son and heir to the title, although I have never done or said any thing to cause them to believe so. As old Fairfield has already told all his friends that I shall be Viscount Decatur, and consequently his daughter a Viscountess, I hardly dare now to undeceive him in case he should want to break off the match. My fair fiancee also has told all her girl friends that on the death of my father she will be Viscountess Decatur, so that I really see nothing for it but to leave them in ignorance of the true state of the case until after the wedding, which has been fixed for this day week. Consequently when you receive this my proverbial ill-luck will have deserted me and I shall be the happy possessor of a millionaire bride.

I am sincerely attached to Miss Fairfield; but, as I told you in my last letter, my father-in-law-elect, as they say over here, is the worst specimen of a low-bred Yankee that I have ever set eyes on. Your affectionate brother, FRED.

From Hon. Frederick Galloway to Hon. Francis Galloway.

NEW YORK, May 12, 1888.—Dear Frank: The affair went off splendidly and without a hitch. All the Chicago papers teemed with accounts of the brilliant ceremony and the magnificent presents made to the bride. Unfortunately, they all accepted it as a fact that I am the future Lord Decatur, and I have not yet had the courage to undeceive my bride. As we sail for England next week I shall not say any thing about the mistake, but will leave it until she meets you and finds out that you are the heir and not myself. One paper in Chicago asserted that I should soon be a Duke, as my father, the Duke of Decatur, was in a very precarious state of health. That was a good stretch of imagination for a Chicago journalist. Good-bye, old fellow. Your affectionate brother, FRED.

From Mrs. Frederick Galloway to her Father, Jeremiah Fairfield.

GRAND HOTEL, LONDON, June 10, 1888.—Dear Pa: I am writing you with a broken heart. I have been the victim of a most shameful imposture, and I am the miserable, unhappy wife of the vilest of scoundrels. My husband is not Lord Galloway! He will never be a Viscount! He will never own Decatur castle! He will never sit in the House of Lords! But he will always be a miserable, sneaking pauper younger son! How could you let me marry him without finding out all about him? Your carelessness—ignorance I may in charity call it—has ruined your daughter's life and wrecked her prospects forever. I am coming home immediately, for I will never live with the wretched impostor, who gained my affection under false pretenses. I dare not face the girls in Chicago; so meet me in New York and advise me what to do. I sail on the Umbria next Saturday. Your broken-hearted daughter, JOSIE.

Cablegram from Jeremiah Fairfield to Mrs. Frederick Galloway.

From Messrs. Rudge, Fudge, Budge, Twenty-pod & Rudge, Solicitors to Hon. Frederick Galloway.

80 LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS, July 30, 1888.—Dear Sir: We have received the copy of the Chicago paper forwarded to us by you and have made inquiries as to whether the advertisement to which you directed our attention is in America a legal service of notice of suit for divorce. We find as follows:

That in the State of Illinois, in which State Chicago is situated, in cases of non-residence, uncertainty of respondent's whereabouts, or living out of the jurisdiction of the United States, publication of notice of suit in a county newspaper for a period of four weeks is sufficient and good legal service. We have also ascertained that in the event of no notice of defense being put in judgment would go by default.

In regard to your other questions we are not sufficiently acquainted with the divorce laws of America to advise, but we have always heard that divorces could be obtained in Chicago on almost any plea. We would recommend you to write at once to a resident lawyer in the town where the suit has been instituted or go there yourself at once. Yours faithfully,

RUDGE, FUDGE & CO.

From Hon. Frederick Galloway to his Brother, Hon. Francis Galloway.

GRAND PACIFIC HOTEL, CHICAGO, Sept. 20, 1888.—Dear Frank: The agony is over. Yesterday the court, in response to the demand of my late bride, annulled the marriage which had taken place between us. The annulment was granted on the ground that the petitioner's consent to the marriage had been obtained by fraud and false representation on my part. Numerous witnesses swore that I called myself "Lord" Galloway and had stated that I was heir to Viscount Decatur. Of course my word was as good against all this. Old Fairfield, who gave evidence, described me as "damaged goods," and the judge paid no attention to me.

Indeed, I was told beforehand that the judge was sure to grant the plaintiff's petition. The fact is, this worthy is a candidate for a vacant judgeship in the Court of Appeal, and did not dare to run the risk of losing old Fairfield's influence. Judges over here are elected by popular vote, and old Fairfield, besides having the influence which is always attendant on great wealth, employs thousands of men in his pig-sticking establishments, and of course controls their votes. Thus it is that no judge who aspires to a higher office, or even to re-election, ever dares to say him nay. Moreover, I am told that this old hog-butcher's political influence is so great that he controls half the State Legislature and can get any bills he likes passed by it; and that if the judge had refused to annul my marriage with his daughter he would have had a special act declaring it null and void put through the Legislature.

Although unquestionably it was very wrong to allow these toadies and title-worshipers to continue in their self-created delusion that I was the eldest son, yet I certainly had nothing to do with originating that belief. That was simply the offspring of a combination of ignorance and sycophancy.

I am going to remain here for a few weeks, as I have gone into a little wheat speculation which I hope may prove remunerative. If it fails I shall be, as they say here, "dead broke." Your affectionate brother, FRED.

Cablegram from Rudge, Fudge & Co., to Hon. Frederick Galloway.

LONDON, Oct. 12, 1888.—Your father and elder brother were both drowned yesterday off Cowes while out yachting. Yacht capsized. We await instructions from you.

RUDGE, FUDGE & CO.

From Jeremiah Fairfield to Lord Decatur.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12, 1888.—My Lord: I red with the deapest regret of the teribble calamity wich has overtook you, and I hurry to offer you my condolations. My daughter is real sick with grief, and says as she just longs to be by your side in your trouble. Now, my lord, I am willing to say, "let bigones be bigones," and let us patch up this little matter. No one is to blame but I, for it was I who forced Josie to throw you up. I seperatted two loving harts, and I am real sorry. Shall Josie come to you? there is nothing like sympathy in trubble. If you and Josie will make it up, I will come down handsome. The ceremony could be performed quiet in my house or at your hotel; although so far as ceremony is consarned, I think marriages are made in Heaven, and no earthly judge has a right to unmake them. My daughter sends her love, and says as she and I will come round to see you this evening. I trust your Lordshipp will receive us with the same forgivvin speritt with wich we come. I remain, my lord, yours forever, JEREMIAH FAIRCHILD.

Letter from the Viscount Decatur to Jeremiah Fairfield.

GRAND PACIFIC HOTEL, CHICAGO, Oct. 12, 1888. Sir: I have just waded through your imbecile epistle, and am now thanking God that your daughter's ignorance and narrow-minded ambition has saved me from being cursed with a father-in-law who is capable of producing such a document. I regret that it is not convenient for me to agree with you in your newly-formed opinion that marriages are made in Heaven. I would also advise you that, as your daughter will henceforth be branded in the English matrimonial market as—using an expression which you once applied to me as well as to the pork with which you feed the public—"damaged goods," you will be wise to try to dispose of her elsewhere.

In conclusion, I notify you that I am wearing a pair of heavy shooting-boots, and that I think it would be as well for you not to come to see me. I leave for England to-night. Yours, etc., DECATUR.

THE SAVING HABIT.

Something About the Advantages of Honestly Conducted Building Societies.

A writer in New Haven Building News has the following to say upon the habit of saving something for a rainy day, or against the time of need: "The savings of the mechanic and laboring man are necessarily limited, and, in the ordinary way of laying by a little now and then they may get discouraged on account of the length of time necessary to accumulate sufficient to accomplish these desires and are very likely to give up in despair when year after year passes and they still see the object far off. But with the assistance rendered by the union of individuals exactly in the same condition of life with himself, he can command, in the beginning of practical life, the means which, without this union, would require years of toil and self-denial, and then he would arrive at the ideal of his mind when his capacity for its enjoyment would have passed the meridian, and his pathway, in consequence of years of toil, is necessarily downward. Here he begins at the end, as it were, and secures the benefits of years of saving before he has made any accumulation; and in liquidating his engagements with the association only returns thereto what he would have had to pay a landlord for a rental, while feeling that only for a short time is this necessary, and then his obligations are ended, renders it a comparatively easy task, for he is working to the end he wishes to attain, and there is positive moral certainty that he will and can reach it. How much better, then, for every man who is within reach of these great and good institutions to connect himself therewith and secure his own independence and thus feel conscious that his energies have not been expended in producing an income for the support of another, to the exclusion of his own person and family."

ANDY WAS ALL RIGHT.

How an Indiana Agriculturist Humiliated a Chicago Bunco-Man.

Old Andy Arbuckle, from Tipton County, Ind., came to Chicago one day last week with a car load of hogs. After he had sold them the purchaser, writes Ed. R. Pritchard in the Arkansaw Traveler, handed Andy a check on the bank for his money, saying, as he did so: "You can get that cashed now, or wait until you get home, Mr. Arbuckle, if you do not care to take the risk of carrying the currency with you."

"Guess I'll just git the money on it, if it's all the same to you, mister," replied old Andy, with a grin. "Besides, I kinder want ter look 'roun' a little, an' I might need it."

"All right," replied the stock dealer, "only it's not safe to carry so much money with you in a large city like Chicago."

"Yes, so I've heerd," assented Andy, "but I've bin hustlin' 'long for darned near forty years, an' the feller that gits a dollar from me has mighty near allus give me two for it 'fore he got it."

The dealer smiled and made no reply. He had seen such men before.

Old Andy went to the bank, drew his money and set out to see the sights. He took a cable car into the city and began his tour of inspecting Chicago's many fine business buildings, gazing in at the shop windows, etc. He had just halted in front of the Eden Museo, and was staring at the wax figure of a tramp which stands at the entrance, when a dapper looking little fellow seized him by the hand and exclaimed:

"Why, how are you, Uncle Andy, and when did you leave old Tipton?"

Uncle Andy looked the fellow a moment, and then said: "Kinder 'pears to me I'd orter know that mug o' yourn, but you've got it on me this time, I guess."

"You used to know Scott Hawkins, didn't you?"

"Thunder, yes; you're not his son Rafe, that run away from home—"

"Yes, I'm Rafe Hawkins, and I am mighty glad to see you, Uncle Andy."

"So'm I, Rafe. How yer makin' it—layin' up any dust these days?"

"Well, yes, a little; and that reminds me, I have just drawn a prize in a lottery down the street here and was going to get the money on it when I met you. Come on with me, and after I get it we'll go out and see the town."

"Say, Rafey," said the old man, as he laid his hand on the young fellow's shoulder, "I'm a Hoosier, an' I live down in the Tipton County slashes. I know my face looks like I didn't know enuff ter go in out of the wet, but I've got er pet calf down ter home, an' ef I thought that brute had n't more gump than ter be taken in by your little game, I'd trade it off for a yaller dog and then shoot the dog. Us Hoosiers, Rafey, don't put on no style, but we've got schoo's an' we read the papers; an' some of us don't take the trouble ter talk as well as we know how, but we ain't allus asleep when our eyes is shet."

Before he had finished his little speech the confidence man, seeing his mistake, was attempting to get away, but old Andy held him fast. Just then an officer happened along, and he turned "Rafey" over to him with a short explanation of the matter. The fellow who had tackled him was one of the slickest confidence men in the West, and as the policeman knew him he was soon behind the bars in a cell at the Central station.

That night the old fellow related the incident to me, and added, by way of explanation: "I was took in once in that confidence game 'bout fifteen year ago down in Cincinnaty, an' its been tried on me a hundred times since, I reckon, but I've allus kinder got the best of it."

GETTING INFORMATION.

A Reporter's Experience with the Patroness of a Philanthropical Institution.

It was the evening of the graduating exercises in a philanthropical institution. Said a New York Sun reporter to the lady in charge rustling around in the dignity of a new black silk:

"How many graduates have you?"

"Oh, dear me, are you a reporter. I just dread to see one come in. They never get any thing right. I never knew one to. I think they do it on purpose. It is too mean for any thing. I hate—"

"But will you tell me the number of graduates?"

"Oh, ever so many, and they are just the brightest girls. Oh, it is such a wonderful thing that this institution can educate them as it does. It is perfectly splendid. I don't suppose its any use to tell you about it, for you won't get it right any way."

"What do they graduate in?"

"Why, every thing. That's the idea of the institution, to make them so self-reliant and ready for emergencies and—"

"Who are the patrons of the institution?"

"Oh, nice people. Every body ought to be interested in it. They would be, too, if the papers took it up in the right way, but they won't. They never get any thing right, the reporters—oh, I can't tell how they twist things."

"How many instructors do you employ?"

"Oh, we have the loveliest teachers. I'll go and ask Miss B—— to come and tell you about them. She knows them personally—all the little family history, you know. But of course we don't want you to publish that. Papers are just filled with every one's private affairs now. It is just horrid, but I suppose the reporters don't care what they say if they just get their pay. Excuse me; I'll go and speak to Miss Smith," and she rustled away. The reporter waited while they hounseled together, and, approaching, heard: "Oh, I think she's lovely in that dress. You know I advised her to put those revers on—so much more becoming than a plain waist. Oh, there's that dreadful reporter. I'm tired to death telling him about things. You tell him about the teachers, won't you, dear, and put those violets up a little nearer your chin."

"I! Why, I don't know any thing about it, and I'm busy; I'm on the flower committee."

"Well, we might as well let it go. I've told him about it, but he'll get it all wrong any way. It is perfectly awful the way those reporters misconstrue things and never get any thing right."

DOLORES.

I AM a poor woman. I work hard for the little that keeps my body together, and body and soul both grow sick and tired very often of being kept together, or kept in any way.

It is not the story of my own struggles and sufferings I am going to tell, though I have enough of each to make a long story, God knows; but it is of another woman, or girl, rather, and in the right hands the little I know could make a sad romance or terrible tragedy for people to cry over in a book or on the stage, and then totally ignore the like in real life.

Forewoman in a factory where they make undergarments for the wholesale trade, that's what I am. I don't like it. I hate it! But I've seen so many women that were slave-drivers—worse, to the poor girls that work under them, that I took the place when it was offered me, for fear that one of these might secure it. I have to drive and look and speak sharp, but it's with no willing heart I do it, and I think the girls know it.

About the beginning of this last busy season we had to advertise for more hands, girls, and where we wanted one, fifty came; some of them almost old enough to be great-grandmothers, and some young enough to have been in their cradles yet almost; they came on the chance, the mere chance, that they might find something to do that would earn them a few cents. My head, heart and tongue were tired and sick to death with refusing, explaining and sending them away, tired and bowed down with disappointment of hope; they knew they had no reason to indulge in.

I was sitting at my table, worn out, when a low, sweet voice roused me. Another applicant. "Had she ever run a sewing machine?" "No, but she was sure she could." I looked at her, and I was sure also that she could, while her strength lasted. She was tall and slender, with thin hands and long, tapering fingers, a dark face, with great brown eyes, a mass of blue-black hair, and the saddest look I ever saw a young creature wear.

"Was she married?" "Oh no!" and her cheeks flushed, and she snatched away and hid under her wrap the one hand she had rested upon my table, but not before I noticed on the third finger a heavy gold band the back, evidently, of a ring.

"What have you been working at before this?"

"At ladies' braid dress trimmings—I learned all such work at the convent where I was educated."

"Why do you want to come here then and run a machine," I asked; and now just listen to what the poor creature said; she, a lady, a good girl, no one could look at her and doubt it. She said, in her terribly tired, quiet voice:

"I want to be sure of what I am to get, and that I will get it. I have been making braid trimmings for a woman on East Seventeenth street. Two large sample pieces I had to do for nothing, then I worked hard four days and made seven yards, for which I was to receive fourteen cents a yard. I took it to a dry-goods store and had it measured over that quantity. When I returned it to the contractor woman she said forty-six inches was her yard, and by this I had scarce five yards. I protested and then she found fault with the work, and finally asked me if I had change for a five-dollar-note, and finding I had not, she refused to let me get it changed, said she would not send out for it herself, and that I must come for my pay next week."

And I knew every word of it was true, and that she-devil has a hundred girls sewing for her, and she gets forty-five cents for every yard she pays them fourteen for, and the retail stores sell that trimming at from $1.50 to $2 per yard. I know it.

"WHAT HAVE YOU BEEN WORKING AT BEFORE THIS?"

"Have you any friends?" I asked.

"None here," she said, calm as death.

"Child, why don't you go to them, wherever they are?" I snapped, savage as could be, to keep the tears out of my eyes and voice.

"I can not, I can not; I only want work, to earn enough to live. Can you, will you, give it to me?"

"Yes, I will," I said, for I could ask her no more questions, there was something about her that kept her safe from questions.

I called Maria Simpson, a good-hearted, tough girl, and told her to take the new hand in charge and help her.

"What is your name?"

"Dolores."

"Last name?"

"Just let it be Dolores, if you please," and she moved to the cold corner by the draughty window, for we must have plenty of light for our work.

"Dolores," I said to myself. I lived South once. I know what that same means, and never did face or figure seem more entirely made to bear it.

Girls will talk, and Maria Simpson was one that would have made a plaster of paris praying Samuel unfold his hands and chatter, and from Maria I learned what little I could pick up, for Dolores was the closest that ever she had undertaken.

The poor stranger had no clothing but that on her back, and it was scant and worn to the last degree, her shoes were just ready to fall off her feet. She had other things, but they were in her trunk, and that she had not. Left it where she owed some board, Maria said she judged from scraps of what was let drop. Now she walked three miles, rain or shine, snow or mud, and brought no lunch but dry bread. A poor girl, lately married, she was stopping with, the young husband was sick and couldn't work, and Dolores, now she was earning, would not leave them and was giving all she made to help them as they had helped her.

So it ran on for nearly two months, and without any trying on her part, for she hardly spoke to any one, all in the room were interested in and respected the shy girl. Once, Maria Simpson, with the cheek good-natured, rough girls have, said to her:

"Ain't there a diamond in that ring that you keep the stone part turned in?"

"Yes," said Dolores, for she was one that couldn't lie, any body could see that.

"It's a gentleman's ring, too," said Maria. "I'd think you'd sell it and fix up," said she.

"It is the gift of a dear friend, I can never part with it," was all Dolores said, but she said it in a way that made Maria drop the subject.

Well, there came two days when Dolores did not come to work, then on Saturday came a pale young woman with a little note from her; she was very sick and would I please give bearer the money due her. I did so and then found out where she was living, though the woman knew no more of her family name than I did. On Sunday I went up to see her. I found her raging with delirium, in a little dark room in a tenement house, and all the host of other inhabitants howling to have the "crazy woman" taken away, and the scared young wife, with her sick husband and demented Dolores, pretty nigh crazy herself.

It was a sick heart I took to my own poor home that night and to my work the next morning. But I told Maria Simpson and she told the girls, and the poor souls, with not a cent to spare themselves, made up enough to have paid a woman to take care of Dolores for a week, and the moment work was done Maria and me hurried to the house.

Too late, the mob in the house had frightened that coward woman, though really I ought not to blame her, and she had sent for an ambulance, and Dolores had gone to the Island, the pauper hospital.

It was hard work for one to get off the next day, the firm granted it as a great favor, and I lost wages I could ill afford, but I went to the island and I found the poor dear raving, but still knowing me. Tied down to the bed she was, in a great canvas, shroud-like dress, her grand black hair about her thin face, like the night of misery her blazing eyes seemed looking into, on her one tight-shut hand, through the long canvas sleeve, I could feel that ring, and when I touched it her hand clenched closer and she muttered something I could not hear.

"This woman is assuming hysteria;" that's what the pert young doctor said when he came around; "if she don't stop this noise and nonsense I'll take means to bring her to that she won't like."

I didn't open my lips, I didn't dare to; I'd a said too much to that snip, and have gotten myself and her in trouble.

In about two hours Dolores became quiet. In ten minutes I said to the old woman:

"Can you find the doctor? Go, tell him to come here quick!"

He came just in time to have death throw the lie and his ignorance and brutality into his face, to see Dolores die.

I was able to get back before work closed; I told the girls. We were all of one mind; that poor stranger should not be thrown into Potter's Field or mangled on a dissecting-table. We could not bury her, but we could try to interest others. The organized charities wanted to know her name, to what church she belonged, who were her friends. To all these we could answer nothing. Church societies wanted to know the same; we could not satisfy them, and they could give us no help.

It was late at night; we were tired to death and in despair. Maria Simpson said: "Come with me." We went with her to a woman who has no church, has just enough to live on and a little to help others. She has a lot in —— Cemetery, too. She asked no questions, Maria told her all; she gave us the deed of her lot and an order for the burial of our dead, and told us where to go to get the coffin.

Her kindness seemed catching, the undertaker would only charge us cost for the coffin, his good wife said she wanted to help and would give us a shroud; and these were poor people, too, mind you.

The body was brought down next day; "acute meningitis," I copied it off the death certificate, is what the doctor called it then. And the ring was gone.

We buried the poor girl, each paid her share, and not one but went without some needed comfort to give the little we did.

Maria's brother made a wooden cross, and marked on it "Dolores," and the day of her death, and this we have upon her grave.

Who was Dolores, where did she belong, what was her story?

Invent a romance if you wish to or can, or may be this will be read by some one who knows the whole history.

I've told all I know.

ALEX. DUKE BAILIE.

How to Make a Will.

A duty which every man owes to his family is the making of a will. An instrument of this kind can be drawn by any intelligent person and will be admitted to probate in all courts provided the document is in writing, and signed at the end by the testator, or some person in his presence and by his direction, in the presence of two witnesses at least, who must subscribe and attest the will in his presence. The signature must be so placed at, after, following, under or beside or opposite the end of the will that it shall be apparent that the testator intended to give effect by the signature to the writing signed as his will. A provision of this kind will save annoyance and expense and prevent litigation after the demise of many fathers of families who had too much faith in the good nature of their offspring, forgetting the old saying that where money interests begin family interests end.

England's Asiatic Empire.

Vasco de Gama established the first European settlement in India at Cochin in 1502, and the Portuguese held undisputed sway for a long time. The Dutch obtained a foothold in India in 1602, the French in 1604. The English established factories at Surat and other places in 1612, and at the present time rule over the richest portions of the Asiatic continent.

A Tough Mountaineer.

One of the pluckiest fellows that ever lived in Montana is John Myers. He is twenty years old, and has just gone through a thrilling experience. He is a cowboy and was hunting for horses with a party on the Still Water river. He was missing the other night when the others came in. It was thought he had stopped at some "squaw man's" house and no fear was felt for his safety. Two days after the men in the camp noticed a dark object slowly sliding down the side of an opposite bluff. It was Myers. Both of his legs were broken and his head and face terribly lacerated. He was weak from loss of blood and the exposure he had undergone, dragging himself along for thirty hours in the snow. His horse stumbled and threw him on the rocks and ran away. He crawled up the side of steep bluffs, where few men could walk.

SNAILS AS FOOD.

A Wiltshire correspondent writes to in some amazement, says the London Standard, that only last week he found a man searching for snails, not as zoological specimens, but as articles of food. Still more extraordinary, he actually praised them. Simply roasted on the bars of the grate and eaten with pepper and vinegar they are declared to be toothsome. Soaked in salt and water and then cooked and served after the fashion of whelks and periwinkles they are still better. In winter the land shells, like snails, are hibernating in holes, under leaves, and in the hollows of trees. As all the species in a torpid state lay on a load of fat before retiring for the winter, the snail seeker, though possibly he did not quite understand the reason why, was of the opinion that it was only at this period of the year that the mollusca are fit for human consumption. Here, most likely, he was wrong. But at all events, in supping freely on such dainty bits, the Wiltshire gourmet has proved himself a great deal more sensible than many people who may be inclined to call him hard names, and then proceed to swallow a dozen raw oysters and a piece of cheese so swarming with parasites that if the latter were unanimous it would walk off the table.

Wiltshire is, however, not singular in possessing a man above the prejudices of his neighbors. In several parts of England snails are regularly eaten—not, it is true, as an ordinary article of diet, but at stated feasts. For instance, the Newcastle glass men were famous for their taste in that direction. Every year they held a sort of gastronomic festival, at which snails figured as the principal dish. Whether the custom has since fallen into decay is a question on which, no doubt, local information is to be had.

But we believe that the iron-puddlers in some parts of the Black country are wise enough to still indulge in the same dainty, and it is by no means uncommon to hear of snails boiled in milk being prescribed, like the viper broth of Carolinean times, for patients far gone in consumption. It is less agreeable to know that at one time they were employed in the manufacture of imitation cream and that in spite of analysis and acts of Parliament they are even yet bruised and stewed in milk to form one of the tolerably palatable articles which pass under that name.

In the neighborhood of Dixon a small farmer has been known to clear $1,500 per annum from snails, the vine-growers keeping them in dry cellars or in trenches under coverings of leaves and earth, and from certain "escargotieres" near Ulm, in Wurtemberg, no fewer than 10,000,000 of the vineyard snails are sent every year to other gardens to be fattened before they are dispatched for the use of the Austrian converts during Lent. From Troyes it has been calculated that snails to the value of $100,000—the wholesale price being 4s per 100—are forwarded to the Paris markets. Packed in casks they are also exported in a small way to the United States.

A WOMAN'S ADVICE.

She Tells Her Sisters How to Fascinate Their Husbands.

"Many women lose the love of their husbands because they are too ignorant or too indifferent to keep it, observes a female writer in the Louisville Courier-Journal. Ask any of your friends how they captured their other half, and they will tell you frankly: "I don't know." A man's heart is ensnared by a pretty hand, nice teeth, a round low voice, frank eyes, beautiful hair; by the way a girl walks, talks, plays, rides, sings; by her gifts, her smiles, her amiability, good taste, generosity, or the very manner in which she greets, fascinates or abuses him. She may not know how she won him, but if she doesn't know how to keep him, the first thing for her to do is to find out. There are many things we know by intuition; the rest have to be learned by experience. Conscious of her abilities and inabilities as a wife, a wise woman will learn how to keep a husband just as she learns how to keep house, to make chicken croquettes, chocolate cream, bread, beds or lemonade, and if she doesn't, why, some siren will for all time relieve her of the trophie. Men like to preach down extravagance, and style, and dress; but the woman who bangs her hair, hides a blotch or scar under a piece of court-plaster, who wants pretty gloves and stockings, trim slippers, perfumes, baths, cold creams, finger curls and fancy nothings to increase her charms, is the woman who is admired by them all. Common sense and ugliness may be morally wholesome, but they're not alluring, and are apt to triumph over nature unadorned. If a man is fond of flattery, let him have it. If he has ambitious or schemes, listen to him with open eyes of wonder, and, no matter what the occasion is, never permit your knowledge to exceed his. Men despise smart women, but have no fault to find when her talent is large enough to appreciate his greatness. Men like to be looked up at, depended on, quoted and referred to. An ugly temper is a trial that few women are able to endure. The only cure is silence. You can't kiss a furious man; it only makes him worse. The thing to do is to keep still, let him cool, and let the matter drop. He will respect your sense and come to terms of his own accord. To be born a woman is to be born a martyr, but the husband that is worth wedding is worth keeping; and if a little artifice, a pleasant smile, a contented heart, forbearance, devotion and tact will hold him, by all means let him be held. Men must be taken as they are, not as they should be; they improve under the refining influence of mutual interest and love, and he is a petty wretched specimen of humanity who can not be counted on to shield his wife from the buffets of the world and be an anchor for her when youth and beauty have proved unfaithful.

Successful Treatment of Croup.

A correspondent of Good Housekeeping gives the following account of the successful treatment of a case of croup: "Remembering a child of our own who was attacked in a similar manner, we procured a pail, filled it with hot water, and, quickly removing the little one's shoes and stockings, placed her feet in the pail. We lost no time in roasting three onions, then mashing them, spread them upon a folded napkin, pouring over the whole a tablespoonful of goose grease (lard or sweet oil will do as well). The poultice was applied as hot as could be borne to the throat and upper part of the neck. In ten minutes the quick short gasps ceased, and at the end of half an hour the child, warmly wrapped in a soft blanket, was sleeping soundly. The skin was moist and the breathing natural; all symptoms of the dreaded scourge had disappeared, as if by magic."

FASHION ITEMS.

Small waists are going out of fashion.

Broad hips are being cultivated by walking and riding.

Large hands are not considered unbecoming, but the fingers must not be long.

Sandals are much worn in-doors, and silk stockings are recommended for cold weather.

Patches are sometimes put upon the big toe joint of new shoes, to excuse the size of the soft corns located there.

Brass tips are not used for ladies' shoe heels this winter. They are dangerous and strain the legs to keep from slipping.

Garters suspended from the hips have been declared injurious, and the wire springs in them are considered dangerous in the case of sudden slips and falls. One lady was seriously injured by the breaking of one of those springs.

Little pug dogs have gone out of date. The only correct kind of dog for street wear is a mastiff or a full-blooded Newfoundland. Heavy chains of polished wooden rings are the latest novelty, but the dogs must be trained not to pull on them, for they are easily broken.

Paints and powders are not used by real ladies as much as formerly. Only the elderly and faded women use them. Girls who have any freshness of youth do not mark themselves as old maids by resorting to cosmetics. It is considered outre for a miss to appear in society with artificial complexion.

Ball dresses will be of the scantiest possible attire above the waist this season. It is not considered immodest for a woman to display her charms, and the cries of tabbies have been over-ridden by determined women who use their own discretion. Corsages will be very low, lower than ever.

Dresses of young ladies, younger than sweet sixteen, are short enough to show the tops of the boots and the swell of the calves. They are trimmed about the bottom with fur, or with plush imitation of seal skin. The sleeves are tight, except at the wrist, where they are comfortably loose. Loose knit jerseys are worn by the school-girls, and mittens to match are in market. They are very pretty, and are made well; but the prices are still quite high.

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE. | A. L. FORCE,
Editors and Proprietors.

THE ENSIGN OF DEMOCRACY.

The Democratic party is out of national executive power, but it [illegible] a mighty national influence.

Ways and means alien to equitable political action defeated, under the form of electoral law, its recent Presidential candidate, yet the popular vote of the whole country showed that he received a majority of about one hundred thousand.

By virtue of the voice of the people it stands approved.

For four-score years the party of Democracy has fought many a [illegible] battle. Securing victories and meeting reverses, its stalwart ranks never wavered, never retreated, never lowered their glorious ensign, and they never will.

As long as civil and religious liberty and popular sovereignty exist within the Republic of Washington and Jefferson, the ensign of Democracy will be held aloft and bravely defended.

Aristocratic [illegible] revile, [illegible] conspire, and unscrupulous intrigue against the supremacy of Democracy, and for a time seemingly succeed, but in the end they will be overwhelmed by public indignation and the triumph of right principles.

The ensign of Democracy is unconquerable.

Why that bold assertion?

Because American Democracy directly represents the vitality of the American Constitution, which grand compact guarantees to each and every American citizen, irrespective of birth, creed, condition or color, legal equality and equitable protection in regard to person, profession and property, and furthermore, just and equal recognition of all sections of a common country.

Such are the emblazoned words on the ensign of Democracy.

No quantity or quality of political hostility can blot them out.

They were born with the Constitution and will live, a conquering sign, until that charter of freedom is dead and buried.

Kicked by a Horse.

Morris Higgins, the driver of the Crescent Bus, was painfully injured by being kicked in the face by a horse, Tuesday a. m. The young man went into the stall alongside of the horse, when the animal dealt him a stunning blow on the right cheek, laying the flesh open to the bone. He was picked up unconscious and carried into an adjoining room, where Dr. Berg dressed the wounds. The doctor found it necessary to sew up the gash.

Private Musicale.

A private musicale was given at the residence of Mrs. M. A. Davis on West Front street, Monday, that was greatly enjoyed by the select few who were favored with an invitation. Mrs. Davis, whose delightful singing has frequently been heard in this city, admirably rendered several charming solos during the evening, which together with a number of quartettes and piano solos, made up the evening's entertainment. Dancing followed, after which the guests partook of a bounteous collation.

That White Flag Explained.

There is a small building situated near the top of the mountain back of Washington Park, from which a white flag has floated for some time. It is so conspicuous that many inquiries are made as to what the building is.

It was erected by Edward M. Allen, of North Plainfield, and is supposed to be an observatory for the use of persons visiting his pavilion, which is situated near the large stone building [illegible] of the mountain, and where picnic parties assemble in Summer.

A Chance for Amateur Detectives.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature authorizing Boards of Freeholders to offer $200 for the conviction of any person guilty of the larceny of poultry. There are lots of chicken thieves about this county, and if a right smart fellow were to turn his attention to ferreting them out and prosecuting them he would make big money. Only a few days ago a Central avenue resident was relieved of about eighty fine chickens, and several other small robberies have recently been reported.

A High School Concert.

The High School will give, Tuesday evening, March 26, a concert of solo and chorus singing, the proceeds to be devoted to the purchase of a new singing book to be used in morning exercises.

The old book has been in use about fourteen years. The desired new book has a choice selection, but is expensive.

Beside the new and choice selections from [illegible] for the school choruses, glees, and part songs, Miss Alice Holmes will sing and the Smith brothers' quartette will have a place on the programme. There will also be a double quartette of High school boys.

[illegible] Shooting Event.

Next Thursday, March 28, there will be an interesting pigeon shooting match at Erb's Park, Newark, N. J., between Charles Smith the crack shot of the Middlesex Gun Club, this city, and Gus Mantle of Orange Valley, N. J. The conditions of the match are 50 live birds each, $100 a side, Hurlingham rules. This match was to have been shot on the 15th but in consequence of the sickness of Mr. Smith, and the absence of his old reliable L. C. Smith gun, which is at the factory being repaired since he strained it shooting Schultz powder, the match was postponed to the 28th, when it is expected that "Dutchy's" numerous friends will back him and escort him home a triumphant victor.

Westfield's School Meeting.

At the annual school meeting for School District No. 26, held in Aeolian Hall, Westfield, Tuesday, long before the hour of meeting the hall was filled with anxious men. About [illegible] voters were present and cast their ballots for the candidates of their choice.

The first ballot was for a school trustee for 3 years. There were 267 votes cast. Mr. F. B. Pennington the present District Clerk, received [illegible] votes, Henry F. Alpers, [illegible] votes. There were [illegible] double ballots. Mr. Pennington was declared elected.

The second ballot was for a trustee for 2 years, to fill the unexpired term of Joseph B. Harrison. There were 258 votes cast. Ira C. Lambert received [illegible] votes, and George E. Brown [illegible] votes, and 1 blank. Mr. Lambert was declared elected.

The trustees in their call asked for $6,100 to run the school for the present year. It received no opposition and the Secretary cast the ballot accordingly.

Mr. Robert E. [illegible] was Chairman of the meeting and F. B. Pennington Secretary.

LOCAL OPTION KNOCKED SILLY.

TRENTON, March 21—The Local Option repealer, known as the Werts bill, passed the House this afternoon, thirty-two votes being cast in favor of the bill. This will do away with all local option elections in the State.

City Council Meeting.

President [illegible] and Messrs Dunham, Gallup, Jenkins, Myers and Moffett, constituted a quorum of the City Council, which met in special session, Monday, to act upon the liquor license application of Otto Arend, of East Second street. The application was reported as regular and in conformity with the city ordinance and it was ordered advertised. The meeting then adjourned.

The Borough Lock-up Large Enough.

One intoxicated individual was gathered in by the Borough Marshal Monday afternoon. This makes the second arrest for drunkenness within the borough limits since the saloons have been closed in this city. It is not likely that the borough officials will build an addition to the lock-up, as it was thought would become necessary when the hotels and saloons closed in Plainfield.

He Slept in an Apple Orchard.

One of Dunellen's professing temperance men is reported to have become fuddle-dazzled while on the road returning from New Brunswick, one evening recently. The story is told to the effect that the team the man was driving wandered into Green's apple orchard near Dunellen, where the horses and their owner reposed for the night. A colored man straightened things out in the morning, and he was given a dollar for his trouble.

A Store Broken Open.

During Saturday night burglars entered the store of Mr. Peter H. Bennett on Park avenue by prying open one of the back windows. The goods in the store were in charge of Assignee W. R. Codington, who had them securely locked up. The exact amount of the theft is not known, but it is thought that the robbers escaped with considerable booty. Special Officer Sliker was stationed in the store, during Sunday and Monday nights but the robbers did not return.

Property Under a Lien of [illegible]

The difficulties in the way of completing the row of nine brick buildings on the West side of Grove street, between Prospect place and the brook, in Washington Park, will in all probability soon be removed. A decree to sell the property under foreclosure, has been obtained from Chancellor McGill, and when duly advertised the sale will take place the latter part of next month.

The property to be sold consists of [illegible] feet on Grove street, and 285 on Prospect place, and includes the large dwelling and barn on the premises, together with the nine unfinished buildings. The claims against the entire property amount to about $22,000, and the mortgages are owned by Mrs. Julia Peck, of Madison avenue, New York.

NEW MARKET NOTES.

A very successful opening of the new lecture room attached to the Baptist church, occurred last Thursday evening, by which the treasury has added $50 to its funds.

Twenty-eight acres of land has been sold to Mr. Philip Jenner, located on Washington avenue, embracing a desirable five-acre corner. The price is said to be less than $50 per acre.

The fact is there is literally no demand for property and the value is less now than has been known within a quarter of a century. No transfers of real estate, show a lack of enterprise, and without enterprise there is no growth, yet for all this, land as eligibly situated as it is in this remarkably healthy locality, within 27 miles of the Empire City, must have a future, and will undoubtedly realize a handsome margin to those who possess the judgment and foresight to invest at present prices.

Realty Changes Over the Brook.

Mr. Isaac Brokaw and Mr. Edwin Overton purchased from Mr. Wm. White, Monday, the two remaining lots on the north side of Willow avenue, in Washington Park, and known as the "tennis grounds." These lots are immediately in the rear of the property upon which Mr. Brokaw and Mr. Overton will build their new residences, on Rock View avenue.

The house recently purchased by Mr. D. N. Groendyke on Grove street, from Mr. Grange of Philadelphia, is being remodeled preparatory to its occupancy April 15, by Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Van Vliet, the latter being a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Groendyke of Washington Park.

Mr. Brokaw Monday, sold No. 35 Duer street, to a lady of this city. The property was owned by Mrs. Emma S. Brown. He has also sold to Mr. Jacob Voehl, the property on Somerset street, 50x179, owned by Mr. Russell C. Johnson of New York, and which adjoins the property of Mr. C. F. French.

AMONG OUR NEIGHBORS.

The Fanwood Township election—which took place last Tuesday and the results of which have been fully announced in THE PRESS—passed off in the usual quiet way. The Dutch captured Holland with much elation.

The polls were open for the old hours, and it is to be hoped that the short-lived "Sunset Law" of disfranchisement of last year, was the last of the series of efforts to abridge the franchise in this State.

Mr. Edward La Day, the popular hackman, usually drives behind a pair of spirited nags which he has named Toby and Tobias. As a rule Mr. Day has very good success as a driver, but a few weeks ago he met with a distressing accident. He was driving down Spencer's Hill at a moderate and dignified rate, when suddenly Tobias became possessed of the idea that he might go a little faster. So he tried going faster and then Toby tried going faster, and Tobias wouldn't be outdone by Toby and Toby wouldn't be outdone by Tobias, so faster and faster they went, tearing pell-mell down the hill, around the curve—alas! that curve.

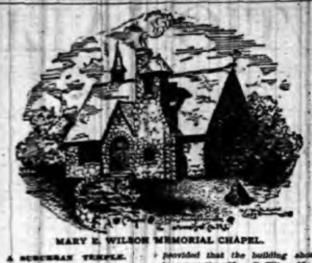
Whether it was Toby's fault or Tobias' fault, or the fault of something in the road, Mr. Day never knew, but the carriage had hardly turned the curve when there was a whizz and a whirr and a bang, a mixing up of the earth and sky, and Mr. Day felt a sudden thud and a stinging in his forehead, and although it was broad day-light he distinctly beheld Jupiter, Saturn, Venus and forty or fifty other stars the names of which he doesn't remember distinctly. That was what happened to Day, as nearly as he can recollect, but Toby and Tobias fared still worse.

Tobias was wound around Toby in an affectionate way and they were both of them badly mixed up with the shafts. Mr. Day did not laugh again that day, and Toby and Tobias were all broken up.

Mr. Day doesn't know how the thing happened.

On Wednesday evening there will be an interesting entertainment at Excelsior Hall. The occasion is the opening of the Public Library. Many of the school children are to take part in the exercises. One of these will be a short play written for the occasion by one of the Library trustees. It is hoped that a large audience will be on hand, as there is no charge for admission. At the conclusion of the exercises the library rooms will be thrown open to the public. It is not necessary to give details of information as to the library, but a full account of the institution will be given on Wednesday night.

SUBURBAN SAUNTERER.



MARY E. WILSON MEMORIAL CHAPEL.

A SUBURBAN TEMPLE.

Some More Facts Regarding the Washingtonville Chapel, and Those to Whom Credit is Due.

Early in the month of February, THE PRESS first told of the above building in view, in a column describing the rise and progress of the Mission and Sunday school, through the interest and assistance given by the earnest Christian workers of that neighborhood and this city. Today a few additional matters in relation are presented.

The above design for a chapel at Washingtonville which has been kindly donated to the Washingtonville Sunday School Association, together with plans and estimates, is the work of Mr. Oscar S. Teale, whose ability in his profession is being demonstrated in this and other cities. The new and beautiful First Presbyterian church, Congregational chapel and Vincent chapel stand as local examples of his taste in church architecture.

"The Mary E. Wilson Memorial Chapel" will be built of rubble-stone work constructed of field stone found on the mountain—the natural face of the stone being preserved which will thus afford an opportunity for a rustic building, examples of which are scarce in our locality and which will add further charm to the already beautiful Valley.

The site which is the gift of Mrs. Jeannette Wilson of Washingtonville, (widow of the late John Wilson) is upon an elevation overlooking the road which turns to the right from Somerset street toward Glenside Park, formerly known as Feltville.

The proposed Chapel is the result of the steady growth of the Sunday school, now occupying the district school house, which has become too contracted for its tenant, and originated in the hearts and minds of some of the ladies interested in the school, especially Misses N. J. Beeching and Libbie S. Allen, now Mrs. S. H. Beeching of Basking Ridge, who succeeded in raising quite a sum of money toward the desired object. In November last Mr. John F. Wilson of North Plainfield, a gentleman who likes to do good in a quiet way, offered to give the association one thousand dollars toward the building, provided that the building should be known as the "Mary E. Wilson Memorial Chapel." This generous offer was gladly accepted, and the residents of the Valley have offered their services and their teams to place the materials on the ground to be in readiness to begin work as early as the weather will permit.

Mr. Bicknell offers to supply the foundation stones and Mr. Frank Bartells a suitable bell for the tower. Ex-Mayor VanWinkle of North Plainfield, has kindly given his services in procuring articles of incorporation under the State law and other legal matters. Several Plainfield gentlemen have contributed toward the object, and those interested in the work would be gratified if they could complete it free of debt.

About thirty years ago the Rev. Mr. Hill of Plainfield, met with Mr. M. H. French, Mrs. Eliza Allen and others, to organize a Sunday school and provide religious meetings at this place, and they have been conducted since that time with scarcely any interruption. Some years later the Y. M. C. A. took charge of the evening meetings and have since conducted them with the help of the ministers and laymen of the different churches. Many new members have been added to our churches, several during the past few months. Mr. Manning, the present efficient General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., conducts a large and interesting Men's Bible Class at the school.

The first Superintendent was Mr. Cornish of Union Village, then Geo. Taylor of Washingtonville, and John W. Moore of Grove street, formerly a resident of the Valley. The Y. M. C. A. were invited to take charge of the school and procured the services of Mr. Joseph M. Lee, now of St. Paul, Minn., who was succeeded about five years ago by the present incumbent, Mr. E. L. Bonny. The present officers are:

Superintendent—E. L. Bonny.
Asst. Supt. and Organist—Miss N. J. Beeching.
Secretary—Robert S. Doyle.
Treasurer—M. H. French.
Librarian—Geo. Howard.
Teachers, Primary—Miss N. J. Beeching. Intermediate—Miss Carrie Spencer, Mrs. Eliza Allen, Miss Jennie Oddington, Mr. W. Henry Rogers, Mr. Andrew Wilson. Adult—Mr. J. H. Manning, Mr. E. L. Bonny.
Trustees—E. L. Bonny, W. Henry Rogers, Henry Weiss.

Must Make their Rounds.

Eight new police call boxes, located in various parts of the city, recently, were put into service on Sunday evening. The night-watchmen are now obliged to ring up the main office, every hour during the night, to show that they are not neglecting their duty.

The Latimer Will Contest.

The contest over the will of the late Sarah M. Latimer of this city, will come up for argument in the Orphans' Court of Union county, at the May term. The Court will then decide whether it shall be necessary to appoint a Master in Chancery or a referee to take testimony pending a final decision by the Chancellor.

Cut the Ropes to Get a Job.

The irrepressible John Peiffer of Westfield, was arrested Saturday night for cutting the halliards on State Senator Miller's flagstaff, and afterwards trying to sell the ropes for a few dollars. Peiffer put the halliards in position and confessed he maliciously cut them in the hope of getting a job from the Senator to rig new ones, as Mr. Miller, who is noted for his liberality, paid him well for the work.

A [illegible] Change in the Time-Table.

Notice has been sent out over the New Jersey Central Railroad—and the agents and baggage masters have received instructions to sell tickets and check baggage accordingly—that the Baltimore and Washington express, due here at 9:15 A. M., on Sundays, now makes a full stop, and the 8:20 A. M. train from New York daily, now stops regularly in this city. Heretofore these trains only stopped on signal to take on passengers for Philadelphia and points South.

WESTFIELD ELECTS A ROAD OVERSEER.

The annual election for Road Overseer for Road District, No. 1, and also to vote for or against an extra appropriation to be used in improving the roads and sidewalks, took place in the town rooms at Westfield, last Thursday. As usual there was considerable wire pulling, and several candidates loomed up for the office of Road Overseer.

Mr. John T. Lawrence was elected Chairman of the meeting, and Town Clerk, Chas. R. Clark, was chosen as Secretary. The Secretary read the call, after which Mr. Moorehouse made a motion to the effect that Road Overseer Pierson make a report on the work done in each of the several districts, during the past year. Whereupon some one advanced the information that not one cent had been spent on the roads in District No. 3.

Upon motion adopted the Clerk read the minutes of the meeting of March 15, 1887, whereat a resolution was adopted authorizing the raising of $3,000, by special tax, for street work.

Mr. Moorehouse made a motion that the meeting proceed to vote on the appropriation. The motion was lost.

Mr. J. O. Clark, the Township Counsel moved to proceed with the election of a road overseer, by ballot, each name to be recorded. The motion was adopted, after being amended by Mr. J. M. C. Marsh to the effect that a majority of the votes cast was necessary to elect. The following persons were nominated for Road Overseer: Messrs W. W. Connoly, Thos. Eustice and John J. Willis.

Mr. J. M. C. Marsh and Mr. Frank Miller, were appointed tellers, and after some further discussion on the matter of voting for the appropriation at the same time, which the Township Counsel said could not be legally done, the voting began. Men flocked up to the ballot box like a herd of sheep and finally at 6:30 o'clock the hour when the polls closed, 170 names were recorded. Following is the result:

William W. Connoly	135
Thos. Eustice	20
John J. Willis	14
Total	170

The meeting re-convened and after a spirited discussion a ballot was taken adopting the resolution fixing the extra appropriation at $2,000—$800 of which is to be used for sidewalks, and the balance for purchasing and spreading crushed stone.

Westfield has some excellent driveways but the extra appropriation can be judiciously expended to further improve the streets. One thing in particular which our neighboring village is in need of, is a system of street lighting.

Her Aged Husband Testifies to Her Cruelties.

Morning March 13 in the Court of Special Sessions at Elizabeth, Susan Harris, of Plainfield, who was charged with assault and battery on her husband, was tried and found guilty.

Simeon Harris, her husband, is nearly sixty years of age. He testified that for three years his wife frequently ill-treated him, striking him with an iron rod, broomsticks, fire shovels and other weapons. He bore these cruelties as long as he could and made complaint because he feared she would kill him.

Mrs. Harris, a buxom woman of thirty years, denied her husband's allegations. She alleged he did not properly support her, and refused to give her a share of his property.

Thirty-Four Cars Passed Over Him.

Henry B. Slingermann whose death on the railroad was told in THE PRESS of 13th inst, was a young milkman of Bound Brook, who had cast his first vote the same day. He was run over by a B. & O. freight train about a quarter of a mile East of the Westfield station, about 12:15 o'clock at night.

He and a friend, Fred Waldron, had gone to Elizabeth on a "coaler" during the evening, to call on Slingermann's brother, and, although they had money, got on the freight train, engine 420, to ride home. They were on the back of the tender, but it being exposed to the wind, Slingermann climbed up over the first car and down between it and the next to ride in shelter on the bumpers.

There were no bumpers, however, and the unfortunate young man dropped through to the track. He realized his fate as he dropped, and his comrade heard him say "Good bye!" The entire train of thirty-four cars passed over the body. Slingermann's father is a prosperous farmer near Bound Brook.

A CHECK TO PLAINFIELD'S PROSPERITY.

(From the N. Y. [illegible])

Hereafter the wayfarer in the model city of Plainfield will feel a heartfelt sympathy with the unhappy tramp who craved a drink of water "because I'm so hungry I don't know where I'll sleep to-night." The entire aggregation of sufferings will be the lot of the mortal so rash as to court Jersey hospitality in the future.

The City Council is presumably created to advance the city's interests. How beautifully the theory is realized is shown by the action of the wiseacres in that august body in Plainfield, which, swayed by the prohibition element, has paralyzed the hotel business, and thereby incidentally placed an embargo on all traffic from without the city's sacred precincts.

The hotels are inseparable from Plainfield's prosperity; at them stop those who are prospecting with a view of settling; but a menu of crackers and cheese lubricated by H 2 O and followed by a berth under heaven's dome in the park, will hardly present permanent attractions. Its table guests alone will not support New Jersey hotels and all bonifaces are not so affluent and benevolent as to pay a big rent and employ a small army of servants just to oblige a meagre temperance element. So the hotels are all closed and the proprietors have entered into an agreement under $500 bonds to keep them so until the Council comes to its senses.

Henceforth must the drummer bring his own bed and pocket flask; the opera troupes travel in gypsy carts and bake the succulent pomme de terre by street fires; while the Summer guests, from whom the thrifty Jerseyman has been wont to beguile many a specimen of the nimble sixpence, will now "pass by on the other side."

The Press of the distressed city utters this plaintive wail: "The city will soon be known as shut up to the outside world, and about the only thing left for the Council to do, is to wall in the city, and charge an admission fee."

Since the above was written the Common Council have licensed Laing's and the City Hotel, to be kept as "inns and taverns," or, to complete the farce, are simply licensed as temperance boarding houses. Final action in reference to the other hotels will be decided by that "unimpeachable" body on the first Monday of April next.

Still Improving the Service.

Manager Runyon of the Telephone company here, has completed the erection of a metallic circuit between Plainfield and Elizabeth, and has thus again improved the service in another direction and added to its increasing facilities.

He Attached the Purchase Money.

Mr. F. M. Bacon, the real estate agent, recently sold a property in North Plainfield, to a gentleman named Groendyke. The property belonged to Jesse M. Grange of Philadelphia, and as the agent's fees were not paid at the time, Mr. Bacon has attached a part of the purchase money in the hands of Cashier Carmon Parse of the First National Bank. The case will be tried before Justice Nash on April 2.

Good Roads are a Necessity.

"Somerset street, in its present condition," said a North Plainfield Township official, to a PRESS representative a few evenings since, "is very rough; particulary so in the neighborhood of the brick bridge." Our informant, who, by the way, is a man of sound judgment, says that twice as much money could be judiciously expended for street work in that particular locality, the coming year, than was spent during the past year.

No Time for Democratic Jersey.

The people of Elizabeth and Trenton, who were making preparations for a welcome to President Harrison, were deeply disappointed to learn Friday that he has decided not to stop at either city next month while on his way to New York to attend the centennial ceremonies in that city.

Adjutant-General Stryker and Benjamin F. Lee went to Washington a day or two since, and the President told them that owing to the vast amount of business which he had to attend to, he could not give the week that would be required for the ceremonies proposed in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Meyerheim Again Heard From.

Max Meyerheim, the swindler who "worked" a few dollars out of our merchants' pockets recently, and who Inspector Byrnes' men have been looking for, has turned up in Bound Brook. The Chronicle of that place, says:

"A young fraud who claims to represent a Providence hardware firm, is said to be traveling about and slightly interesting confiding merchants and others by borrowing small sums, which he never returns. He was arrested in Plainfield a short time ago, but was allowed to escape, and has since been seen in Dunellen and Bound Brook."

Church Anniversary.

There was not a large attendance at the 13th anniversary of the Park Avenue Baptist church, Friday evening, but there was much enthusiasm and satisfaction over the reports of the past year's work done by the different societies of the church.

These reports were read by Mrs. W. L. Lowry, Miss Alice Spangenberg, Mrs. J. W. Johnson, the Rev. Mr. Dilts and Mr. Joseph Hawkins. During the serving and enjoyment of refreshments, the Rev. Dr. Robert Lowry, the former and still well-beloved pastor of the church, made a brief address.

(From the Elizabeth Herald.)

The suit instituted by President John Smith, of the City Council, for his back salary as Councilman for the years 1886-7, amounting to $1,000, exclusive of interests and costs was decided in his favor Friday, the time having expired for the city to join issue with President Smith in the case. It is said that no plea had been filed by the city attorney, he believing the city's position to be untenable.

The circuit court ordered judgment in Mr. Smith's favor for full amount, in all $1,200. Other members of the Council who claim their back pay, it is said, will now push their claims vigorously and are hopeful of success. The total amount claimed for unpaid salaries due Councilmen, it is said, will reach $16,000.

More Realty Transfers in the Borough.

In an article of last week regarding the improvements in Washington Park, North Plainfield, reference was made to negotiations that were pending for the purchase of other property within the Park.

One of these transactions has been consummated in the purchase by Mr. Henry A. McGee, from Mr. Wm. White, of one hundred feet on Willow avenue, immediately adjoining the former's new and handsome dwelling. When this is thrown into a lawn it will add largely to the attraction of this beautiful location.

The closing of this transaction disposes of all the vacant lots on the north side of Willow avenue up to Magnolia, excepting one hundred feet known as the "tennis grounds." Everything of Mr. White's on the south side of Rock View avenue, between Orchard and Magnolia avenues, has been sold, excepting the house and lot occupied by Mrs. Nitch.

The vacant lot 200 feet, on Orchard avenue, adjoining the residence of Mr. White, and owned by him, is to be nicely graded, which will largely improve its appearance. It has also a frontage on Rock View avenue, of 200 feet.

The two pretty homes on GrandView avenue, recently erected by Mr. Isaac Brokaw, have both been disposed of. One is sold to Mr. T. Wilford Powell, of New York, and the other has been rented to Mr. S. C. Sloan, who is connected with the big New York dry goods firm of H. B. Claflin & Co.

PARK PERSONALS AND PARAGRAPHS.

Mr. Henry B. Wells, of Washington avenue, is in Chicago.

The Rev. T. Logan Murphy, rector of Holy Cross church, preached Sunday P. M. at Grace church, Linden, N. J.

The Rev. J. Saunders Reed, rector of Trinity church, Newark, N. J., will preach at Holy Cross church, next Friday evening.

Mr. Peter B. Matthews, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Matthews, who has been spending the Winter in Trinidad, sailed for home on Saturday last, and is expected to arrive about the 28th inst.

The Upper Division of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese, will hold a meeting with the ladies of Grace church, Westfield, N. J., on Wednesday, March 20, at at 2 P. M., at the residence of Mrs. Van Boskerck.

Miss Baldy, of St. Paul, Minn., is the guest of Mrs. Chas. Matthews of Grove street. Miss Baldy is a niece of Mrs. Matthews.

Mr. and Mrs. Elias Hotchkiss of Rock-View avenue, are visiting friends in Brooklyn.

Mr. W. T. Broadway, of Leland avenue, is in Chicago on business.

Mr. B. A. Hegeman, Sr., of Sycamore avenue, returned from his trip to Washington, D. C., on Saturday evening.

A gentleman residing on Central avenue, this city, surprised the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, rector of Holy Cross church, Sunday, just before the commencement of the afternoon services, by handing him the generous sum of $200, to be devoted to the advancement of the new choir of that church. The donation was wholly unexpected, as the gentleman has not been a regular attendant at that church. He had, however, taken a deep interest in the new choir, which has attracted so much attention of late.

Oh for a Dog Catcher!

Fifty cents is allowed for the catching of unmuzzled dogs in Morristown and the boys are making life a burden for the owners. In this city it is just the reverse. The dogs are making life a burden to pedestrians and owners of horses, notwithstanding the fact that there is a city ordinance compelling the muzzling of dogs all the year round, when they are allowed to run at large on the streets.

New Companions and Friends Were Entertained.

In response to cordial invitations issued by the Plainfield Lodge of the American Legion of Honor, about seventy-five gentlemen met together in the parlors of the Park House, evening Mch. 13, and thoroughly enjoyed the entertainment set forth, followed by a collation in the dining rooms.

The gathering, which included members of the local lodge, visiting companions and other invited guests, were cordially welcomed in a hearty speech by Mr. George L. VanEmburgh, who spoke for Commander W. H. Rogers and the Plainfield Lodge. He also introduced the speakers of the evening, Grand Orator J. Gordon Emmons, and Commander Price and Secretary Neefus of Livingston Lodge, Elizabeth. These gentlemen were eloquent in their sincere endorsement of the benefits of the order, and related interesting personal experiences of what great financial comfort in the time of distress and want it had brought the widowed and fatherless of its members.

Not the least of the entertaining features of the evening, however, were the quartette singing of Messrs E. E. Runyon, Geo. Schoonmaker, Arthur and David Tilsworth, and the dialect recitals of Mr. John H. Carney. The singing was much appreciated, while Mr. Carney's touching teutonic appeal for "Der modder-in-law," and his ode to a "Lock of Hair," were unquestionably humorous.

At the collation that was served about 9:30 o'clock, nothing to tempt and satisfy the appetite was wanting. During its continuance, short addresses were made by others.

THATCHER, PRIMROSE & WEST'S NEW VENTURE.

There will shortly be given in this city, (previous to its production at the Park Theatre, Boston,) a new musical bit of nature called "Up to the Times." It is owned and controlled by the trio of gentlemen whose names appear above, and who are familiar to all playgoers in this and every community. While they do not appear in the comedy it is under their personal supervision produced, and the names of the artists engaged are most exemplary, and show a desire on the part of these generous managers to outdo themselves in the new venture.

In a conversation with Mr. George Thatcher while at home last week, he told a PRESS reporter all about it. He said: "The dramatic business is new to us, but the musical end we are all well posted on. Now our reason for branching out in that department is simply this—we have the reputation—and I quote the press when I say it—of being the first minstrel organization to introduce refinement into our business. As a proof of this our class of audiences do not attend any other minstrel show.

"While we have been busy cleaning up in our line, the ever-ready present-day "skit"-producers have been scraping up our sweepings, and foisting them on the public. For example: The old barber shop act; the bath house; and innumerable other castaways of minstrelsy, which they have done over and then prayed to the critics to be easy on them. Claiming no plot, they have gulled the unsuspecting public with the contents of our old ash barrels. Now what we propose to do in that field, is just what we have done in minstrelsy—clean it out.

"We shall not resort to any old burnt cork antiquities—our comedy has a plot. There are no "slap sticks" in it, nor any "horse play" whatever. If the critics can find a flaw, we want them to sail into us. We claim to have a legitimate work, musically superior to any light comedy production of the day, and humorously excelling them in every particular. It will cost us twenty thousand dollars, and if we have to add twenty more to it we are bound to make a success of what already seems to be an assured one. We never have made a failure, and we can't afford to make one now. You will find us in this, as well as in minstrelsy 'up to the times.'"

METHODIST MATTERS.

Church Chat From the Rev. Mr. Mitchell's "Visitor."

We again take the liberty of quoting some more items of general interest from the current number of a little leaflet called The Visitor, issued by the Rev. C. B. Mitchell, pastor of the M. E. church. They are these:

Conference convenes April 3.

Mr. James McGee will deliver the address of welcome to the Conference at the opening session.

Mr. Isaac W. Pangborn, President of the Board of Trustees, and wife, have been visiting friends in Washington, D. C.

The pastor's Monday evening receptions at the parsonage are very well attended, and a source of great pleasure to the pastor and his wife.

Mrs. Randolph of Putnam avenue, is enjoying a visit from her mother, who resides in Nashville, and is quite active in our church work in that city.

All hearts were gladdened to see Supt. Jackson in his place last Sunday. During his absence that Prince of Sunday School workers, Dr. Hurlbut, superintended the school.

The pastors of the city churches have shown unusual kindness and courtesy in interesting their people in the coming sessions of our Conference. Many of their pulpits will be occupied on Conference Sunday by the visiting ministers.

The new officers of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society for the ensuing year are the same as last year, with the exception of Miss Minnie Sharp taking the place of Mrs. N. Y. Hull, Secretary.

Mr. Alfred Taft has recently been called to mourn the death of his mother. She was one of the most active and useful of women in church circles in Brooklyn. No one can fill the place she occupied in Summerfield church. Her death was triumphant.

The "King's Sons" is an organization of young boys of our Sunday School, led by Mrs. L. M. French and Miss Edith Katline. They have taken a pledge to abstain from strong drink, tobacco and evil words. Many sick rooms have been brightened by the beautiful flowers they have distributed, and quite a sum of money was raised by them for the purpose of helping a poor little boy who was much in need. God bless the "King's Sons," and may they grow up to be the "King's Men!"

On Tuesday, March 12, the following officers of the Ladies Aid Society were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. L. M. French; Vice President, Mrs. D. E. Davis; Secretary, Mrs. E. R. Fairchild; Assistant Secretary, Mrs. Samuel Mitchel; Treasurer, Miss Emma McGee; Assistant Treasurer, Mrs. Lorenzo J. Spicer.

Mr. Walter McGee, second Vice President of the League, took the members on a tour through Italy, at the last Friday night meeting. Well prepared sketches of important places were read by the members. Charlie Hurlbut presented beautiful stereopticon views, and George Cornwell acted as interpreter. A most instructive and entertaining evening was spent.

Death Where is Thy Sting.

Another terror has been added to death by the publication in the Plainfield post mortem news, of a disfigured and deformed face labeled with the honored name of one whose character and position should place him far above such reproach.

The Four-in-Hand Social.

The members of the "Four-in-Hand" Circle were entertained at an evening social, at the residence of Miss Mabel Woodruff, No. 45 East Second street, Tuesday. About twenty young people were present and enjoyed an evening of real pleasure, made up of dancing and other social amusements. A beautiful collation was served during the evening. The guests set a good example by adjourning about midnight.

Gifts to the Children's Home.

At the last monthly meeting of the managers of the Home, held March 7, a letter was received from L. W. Serrell, offering for the reception room of the Home, in behalf of himself and family, a fine life-sized picture of Mrs. Serrell, who from 1880 to 1889 so faithfully filled the office of Treasurer.

Mr. Serrell also sent a check for $1,000. This amount Mrs. Serrell left by her will for the work of the Association with which she has been closely identified from its first informal meeting more than twelve years since. To its interests she was ever most loyal in life, and by her gifts her work will follow her.—Central Times.

Young People's Sociable.

The members of the Young People's Association of the First Baptist church, held their regular monthly sociable in the lecture room, last Thursday. The entertainment was largely patronized, and was one of the most successful ever given by the Association. Mr. H. J. Runyon, the President, presided, and announced the numbers on an informal programme. Mr. W. A. Conger was the accompanist.

The programme included a duett, "Forever with the Lord," by the Misses Sarah and Harriet Manning; a soprano solo by Miss Sarah Manning, entitled "Hear ye Israel;" and a contralto solo, "Waiting" by Miss Harriet Manning. Miss Sarah Manning sang "Coming through the rye," by request, and Mr. J. M. Cobb of Newark, gave several humorous recitations, one of them being the "Bees, cure for rheumatism," which was very creditably rendered. Mr. H. Serrell was Chairman of the Social Committee. The serving of refreshments brought the very successful entertainment to a close.

PLAINFIELD BOWLING CLUB.

At the adjourned meeting of the Plainfield Bowling Club, held at the residence of Mr. J. A. Haines, Wednesday, Mch 13, a Constitution and By-Laws were adopted, and the following gentlemen passed the Membership Committee, and were duly elected:

Messrs G. W. Rockfellow, J. T. Fritts, M. D., John Ulrich, T. L. Graham, G. O. Stevens, E. Nelson, C. E. Runk, T. J. Carey, T. S. Armstrong, D. C. Adams, R. F. R. Huntsman, Charles R. Thiess, Charles A. Reed, J. V. Berkaw, H. [illegible], J. F. McMurray, J. V. A. Craighead, T. Barnes, C. E. Vail, J. H. Doane, R. J. Meeker, M. C. VanArsdale, A. W. Wardron, Jr., H. Terry, E. Schultz and G. M. Randell of Plainfield, and J. B. Martine and Alexander H. McKewon of Fanwood.

The full membership of the Club is 46, and applications are received daily, so that there is a very fair prospect that the hundred mark will soon be reached. Though the officers of the Club have provided accommodations only for about 50 members, should the accession to membership be such as to warrant it, further facilities will be provided in the present quarters.

A welcome sight to his host of friends and acquaintances, is the well-known figure and kindly face of Dr. Chauncey M. Field seen again on the street after his long absence abroad and subsequent sickness. The doctor is himself again, but proposes to take a little longer rest if those who are so persistently anxious for his professional services will let him.

The sudden death of ex-Mayor Evans, recalls the death of his first wife the mother of his sons, which was just as unexpected. The attendance was very large, many representatives being present from the New York boards of trade, shipping associations, Produce Exchange, and other financial corporations in which Mr. Evans was interested. The service was an extended and impressive one of which the musical parts were particularly beautiful. Interment was made in Greenwood.

Mr. C. M. Jenkins' Funeral.

The funeral of the late Conway Madison Jenkins, who died 11th inst., took place from the house, No. 11 East Ninth street, afternoon March 13 at 2:30 o'clock. Rev. Mitchell, Miss Addie McGee and Messrs Frank and Elmer E. Runyon, sang "Abide in Me" and "Asleep in Jesus."

A [illegible] Celebration.

The admirers of the successful candidates in Fanwood, after the township election, proceeded to Traynor's City Assembly Rooms, over Ryan's carriage factory, where a dainty and tasty collation was served by the celebrated epicurean cook, "Dory" Rulon.

The "menu" consisted chiefly of sausages and lager. Music was furnished by Nesty's String Band. There was a perfect freshet of lager, and dancing got to be uproarious, without any respect to figures, until the musician was fairly overcome by his exertions to keep time to the merry shufflers.

At last "Dory" offered each participant five dollars out of his own private purse to go home, and all agreed to retire after giving three cheers for "Local Loption" and the great temperance movement, and three rousing cheers for the little man who knifed the Democrats in their primary.

NUX VOMICA.

A Scene at the Funeral.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Laura Bell, the young colored woman whose mysterious death was first recorded in THE PRESS of March 13, took place from the undertaking rooms of Messrs Terrill & Cole on East Front street on Thursday afternoon. The time announced for the funeral was at 2:30 o'clock, but at that hour the relatives had not arrived from New York city. Rev. Mr. Mitchell, pastor of Mt. Olive Baptist church was present to conduct the service, and a number of persons were there to pay their last respects to the deceased.

The service was postponed until four o'clock so as to give the relatives ample time to arrive. They did not come, however, and at half-past four o'clock the service took place. After the service the body was taken to the Methodist cemetery, lowered into a grave and the grave-diggers had shoveled a considerable quantity of dirt into the hole, when the mother and two sisters of the deceased drove up. A scene followed.

The mother insisted upon having a last look upon the features of her dead daughter, and the grave-diggers were obliged to remove the earth from the grave, while the undertaker unscrewed the lid on the coffin and exposed to view the corps. The relatives wept bitterly and finally entered a hack and were driven back to the city.

DEATH OF A NOBLE MAN.

An Occurrence Which Has Cast a Gloom Over Very Many.

All the great dailies of New York and Brooklyn published, Tuesday, extended obituaries upon the death of ex-Mayor Evans, that was first announced in THE PRESS of Monday. Additional particulars are as follows:

Mr. Evans was at the Hotel St. George, Brooklyn, his Winter home, and feeling unusually well in body and spirits. He was retiring at about 11:30, when, complaining of a pain in his side, he suddenly fell to the floor and, though at once the subject of the most tender attention, he was dead when he was raised to the bed, on the side of which he had been sitting a moment before. The cause was an attack of disease of the heart. There had been no antecedent reason to suspect the existence of heart trouble, as Mr. Evans had always appeared to be in excellent general health and was a gentleman of notable regularity and simplicity of habits as well as of much business activity. The stroke which at one blow ended his existence was as insidious as it was sudden. In the suite occupied by Mr. Evans were his wife and little May Evans, a niece of Mrs. Evans and adopted daughter. The child was asleep in her room. Mrs. Evans was in the parlor, adjoining her husband's sleeping apartment, finally seeing to things before retiring. The tragic event was over in almost an instant.

The presence of Mr. Courtlandt Evans, of Baltimore, a son of the deceased, who, with his family, was visiting his father, and of Mr. Daniel F. Lewis, President of the Brooklyn City Railroad, and brother of Mrs. Evans, who also resides in the hotel, was at once secured. Others, kind and loving friends, were likewise soon at hand. Sympathy and condolence were all that could be extended. The event which had created a reason for both had done its work in one swift act.

Mr. John H. Evans had made the St. George his Winter home for three years. His Summer residence is in this city at Oakwood, the scene of much unaffected hospitality. His public spirit was marked. The respect and esteem in which he was held were universal. By every one who knew him he was held in high regard, being a man of kindliness, justice, animation, humor and gentleness in all the relations of friend and neighbor. A better expectation of life none had. Sorrow at the death of no man could have been greater in all his wide circle of friends than at his own.

Mr. Evans was an importer of chemicals at 84 William street, New York, where the firm of Wing & Evans, of which he was a member, does business. He also occupied relations of business trust at 42 Park place and 440 West street. He was the Vice President of the Sapolio Co.; a large owner of the town of Warsaw and its Salt Works, and a stockholder and director of many large corporations.

He was twice married, his first wife dying several years ago. To that union three sons, Clark Wright Evans, Courtlandt De Lacey Evans, and Louis Melville Evans, were born. In 1883 he married Miss Lewis, youngest daughter of the late Wm. B. Lewis, of this city and Brooklyn, he being Secretary and Treasurer of the Brooklyn City Railroad Co., in which trusts he was succeeded by his son, Daniel F. Lewis, now the President of the corporation.

The official investigation has found that the death of Mr. Evans was caused by sudden heart failure. The funeral services were held Wednesday at 10 A. M., in the Reformed church, corner of Pierrepont street and Monroe place, Brooklyn. The interment was in the family plot at Greenwood.

—THE PRESS is requested to urge the necessity of macadamizing Liberty street, the full distance, from Front to Seventh streets. This request is made on behalf of the property owners, who claim that the Council should at least complete the work ordered done months ago.

A Lucky Find.

While Mr. T. O. Doane, the carpenter, was at work in Mr. R. J. Shaw's drug store, Tuesday, making some alterations for the reception of a new soda water fountain, he discovered a well arranged, mouse's nest, made out of fractional currency extracted from the money drawer many years ago. Most of the bills are of the ten and twenty-five cent denominations, and several of them were badly mutilated. The nest was found in one corner of the counter, and a route was discovered through which the mice passed on the way to and from the money drawers. Mr. Shaw says he has been in his present location for the past twenty years, but during that time this issue of fractional currency has not been in use.

Doubtless many of the money drawers at the present time are being relieved of their bills by rats and mice, and the notes converted into nests.

North Plainfield Township Committee Meeting.

Messrs Coddington, Fairchild and Voorhis, constituting the North Plainfield Township committee, met in regular session in Spencer's Hall, Tuesday, and organized for the year by electing Mr. Harrison Coddington Chairman, and Mr. R. R. Fairchild, Treasurer. The newly elected officers were sworn in, and the usual order of business was resumed.

The bond of Tax Collector H. N. Spencer, for $15,000, was accepted, and Dr. J. H. Carman was appointed township physician for the ensuing year. The following appointments were made for road masters in the several road districts: District, No. 1—Aaron Allen; District, No. 2—Daniel Acker; District No. 3—Jacob Kilner; District, No. 4—E. R. Vail; District, No. 5—Wm. A. Holman. The clerk was requested to notify the several road masters of their appointment.

Claims were presented and ordered paid as follows: Unionist-Gazette, $12.60; H. C. Vail and H. J. Martin, for election expenses in the First and Second Districts, each $24; H. J. Martin, $16.45; H. N. Spencer, $10.

The Treasurer's salary was fixed at $150. Mr. R. R. Fairchild, was appointed a Committee of one to make arrangements for a room to meet in during the comming year.

The meeting then adjourned.

NORTH PLAINFIELD SCHOOL MEETING.

The annual meeting for the election of one trustee and to fix upon an appropriation for school purposes in School District No. 38 took place in the public school building in North Plainfield, Tuesday, and drew together a large representation of the voters in the district. Although women were entitled to vote, there were none present.

Dr. H. K. Carroll called the meeting to order, and Hon. Charles Place was elected Chairman. Mr. David Snediker was chosen as Secretary. The Secretary read the call, after which Principal Boss read the annual report of the District Clerk, in the absence of Mr. Geo. F. Brown, the Clerk. The report showed these totals: Receipts, $16,933.99; disbursements, $12,010.42; balance, $4,923.57. A supplementary report stated that $8,300 had been expended for teachers' services, and $650 for a janitor. The report was received and ordered recorded.

Dr. Carroll, President of the Board of Trustees, then read the following report, which was received and filed:

We have to report another very prosperous year in school matters. We have a larger corps of teachers, a larger enrollment and a larger attendance than was reported a year ago. According to the school census taken in May, 1887, we had at the date of our last report 904 children of school age in this District. This number was advanced to 966 by the census of May, 1888, and we have every reason to expect that it will advance to 1,000 or more, next May. The year we occupied this building (1883) the school population of the District was 744, showing an increase of about 200 in five years, or forty a year. When we removed from Harmony street to this building, in 1883, we had an enrollment on our school register of 439, and there was an average attendance of 264. This year our enrollment foots up 668, and our average attendance, 559—showing an increase in the enrollment since 1883, of 229, and in the average attendance, of 295. Of our 668 enrolled scholars, 443 are in the primary department and 223 in the intermediate and grammar departments, which occupy the six rooms on the second floor. Our first floor, with six rooms, was intended for 300 scholars, but we have been obliged to find seats and desks for 443—143 in excess of the normal capacity of the floor. At the opening of the school in September Miss Ginn, who has the first grade, had 160 scholars on her register, and an average attendance of 120, in a room intended for 50. We divided the class and let part attend in the morning and the rest in the afternoon. But the expedient of half-day sessions was not adequate, and the trustees were compelled to fix up a room in the basement, at a cost of upwards of $300, and form another class. We hired an additional teacher, and gave her 44 scholars from Miss Ginn's room, leaving Miss Ginn with 125 still. The best we can do with these scholars is to divide them into morning and afternoon classes, each one getting a half-day's schooling. We have reason to expect that the class will be still further enlarged next month.

No change has been made in our admirable corps of teachers, except to add one to the number. The trustees are proud of them as a body, for their devotion, diligence, capability and efficiency. We do not believe any school in the State has a more willing or intelligent staff of instructors. The following is the roll:

GRAMMAR AND INTERMEDIATE.

Mr. Boss.................Principal.
Miss Purdick.............Vice Principal.
" Claypoole, Miss Lewis,
" Bainbridge, " Randolph.
Miss Main.

PRIMARY.

Miss Wilson..............Vice Principal.
" Claypoole, Miss Stremmell,
" Kiernan, " Ginn,
" Katline, " Hudson.
E. MacDonald, Janitor.
H. K. Carroll,
Jas. McGee,
Geo. F. Brown,
Trustees.

The Chairman stated that the election of a school trustee to succeed Dr. H. K. Carroll was now in order, and the doctor was promptly re-elected for a three year term. In a few appropriate words the Doctor thanked the convention for the mark of confidence and appreciation the members had shown him. He said for the six years he had been a member of the Board he had done the best he could for the advancement of the school, and he hoped that it would continue to increase as it had in the past.

A ballot was then taken on the $4,000 appropriation asked for by the trustees, and that amount was decided upon.

Dr. Carroll, as Chairman of the Special Committee, consisting of the Trustees and Messrs Chas. Place and Justus H. Cooley, appointed at a former meeting to take into consideration the necessity of increasing the school facilities, read the report, which was upon motion accepted and the committee continued, an amendment by Mr. F. H. Martin to add three members to the committee being lost.

After a long discussion on the subject of purchasing a lot and erecting a new building, the committee was requested to submit plans for the erection of a new building in the rear of the present school building, to face on Vine street, and also to report on other eligible sites, together with the probable purchase price, within the district.

The committee was requested to make a report at the earliest possible convenience, the trustees to issue a call for a special meeting to hear said report. The call was ordered published three times in the daily papers, within ten days prior to the meeting.

The meeting then adjourned.

THE GARDEN SPOT OF THE BOROUGH.

Where the Aristocracy of North Plainfield Dwell—Their Handsome Homes.

About a year ago we spoke of the growth of Washington Park, in the Borough of North Plainfield. Since then improvements have been on the increase, property has advanced, and many choice building lots have been bought up; some for improvement and others built upon. The Park proper consists of about 200 acres. It is bounded on the North by Stony Brook, on the East by Grove street, on the South by Green Brook, and on the West by the farm line of Messrs Cadmus and Stine. It is considered one of the prettiest resident spots in this vicinity. The inhabitants are composed principally of wealthy New York merchants and their families, who mingle among and belong to the best society. The dwellings are models of architectural beauty. No two connect with each other, being divided by many feet. Vacant houses are scarce, and so popular has the Park become that new dwellings rent before completed. The mountain view from almost any part of the Park is superb, and is one of the attractions. If the present improvements continue for a few years longer there will not be a vacant lot left.

Mr. Wm. White of Willow avenue, is one of the largest owners of unimproved property in the Park, and to him is largely due the recent improvements for having met the popular demand for choice building lots he sold at reasonable prices to induce building, and in this he was successful. Other properties have been held at higher prices, but will no doubt eventually sell.

Mr. White sold a number of lots on RockView and Willow avenues, between Magnolia and Crescent, and upon some of these, handsome dwellings have been erected. One owned by Mrs. W. de F. Curtis, another by Mr. Walter M. McGee, and three, almost completed, by Mrs. A. E. Mulholland of Sycamore avenue.

Immediately adjoining these Messrs Isaac Brokaw and Edwin Overton have purchased lots from Mr. White, upon which new houses will be built and occupied by the owners.

On Willow avenue, near Magnolia, Mrs. J. B. Bacon of Sycamore avenue, on Tuesday last, commenced the erection of three handsome residences upon two hundred feet of land, also bought of Mr. White.

On Willow avenue, corner of Sycamore, Mrs. Rafferty, widow of the late Colonel Thomas Rafferty, will erect a residence for herself and daughter, and adjoining it Mr. DeWitt Brokaw will build. This property was also sold by Mr. White, and is considered one of the choicest in the Park.

Adjoining these lots is the property of Mr. F. H. Gardner, Cashier of the City National Bank of this city. Mr. Gardner's house was struck by lightning last Summer, causing considerable damage. He seized the opportunity to enlarge and remodel his house. It has recently been completed, and is now one of the prettiest little gems in the Park.

Mr. A. W. Haviland of RockView avenue, has purchased a lot from Mrs. Jane Roome on Sycamore avenue, to which he will soon remove his present dwelling, leaving him a lot on RockView avenue, extending from the line of Mr. George Dupee's property to that of Mr. R. H. Cook's, 300 feet front, upon which he intends to build a residence that will probably eclipse anything in the Park.

The three handsome dwellings on Mercer avenue, near RockView, built by Manning & Sanford, have been sold. The one on the corner was bought by the late Mrs. Allison, and is occupied by Mr. John G. Musgrave and family; the other two were purchased by Messrs W. L. Saunders and Frank Curtis, and are occupied by their owners. These properties are beautifully situated.

There will be some removals on April 1st, next; also, some strangers will take up their abode in the Park. Among the changes we hear that Mr. E. Roberts of Park place, will sail for Europe on the 16th, and Mr. E. C. Pease, an Albany lumber merchant, but a resident of Brooklyn, will occupy the house vacated by Mr. Roberts.

The Misses Day will occupy the house which will be vacated by Mr. and Mrs. Lucius H. Bigelow, on Mercer avenue, and Mr. Bigelow's family will occupy one of Mrs. Mulholland's new houses on RockView avenue—as will also Mr. B. F. Rogers, a coal merchant of New York, another of Mrs. Mulholland's houses.

Mr. Henry Bartling and his family, of Brooklyn, will occupy the dwelling which will be vacated by Mr. B. A. Hegeman, Jr., on Sycamore avenue, and Mr. Hegeman's family will remove to the palatial residence on Grove street, of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Matthews, who intend leaving town and devote much of their time to traveling.

Mrs. Emma S. Brown will occupy the pretty cottage to be vacated by the Misses Day on Mercer avenue, corner of RockView. These are some of the changes that will be made.

There are other sales of property pending, the most important of which is the "old homestead," belonging to the Roome estate, on Washington avenue. Should negotiations fail, Mrs. Jane Roome will move the old home nearer to the street and build a few substantial and attractive houses, facing both Washington and Myrtle avenues.

RockView avenue not only is, but always has been the "cream" of Washington Park, and contains some handsome building lots. Among the most picturesque views is the one just East of the residence of Mr. Thomas B. Penton, Jr. It has an unobstructed view of the mountains, runs to the brook in the rear, a beautiful grove of trees, winding paths, and a "dell" on either side, the borders of which commence near the avenue. The Park people hope to see an elegant home erected here, which will add to the already great beauty of this locality.

The prospects for the erection of a church on the large plot of ground at the intersection of Willow and Myrtle avenues, and which was offered by the late Judge Roome, together with $1,000 in cash, as an inducement, are most remote. Strenuous efforts have been made to raise the necessary amount for the building, but having failed, the project has been practically abandoned. The Church of the Holy Cross is the only one within the limits of the Park, and is largely attended, many of the congregation being residents of the Park.

Mr. Isaac Brokaw, real estate agent, whose office is at No. 30 Duer street, was largely instrumental in negotiating the sales of lots and dwellings referred to, and also the renting. He has made the Park property a specialty, but is not confined exclusively to it, having negotiated many other properties within the Borough.

An ex-Councilman in Trouble.

Miss Teckler Fellington, a young woman residing in Somerset county, went before Justice Nash about two weeks ago and asked for a warrant for the arrest of an ex-Councilman of this city, charging him with crime.

Justice Nash refused to issue the warrant, on the ground that the city could not be held responsible for the cost which is likely to ensue, claiming that the expense should be borne by Somerset county, where the woman resides.

Friday, however, the woman succeeded in swearing out a warrant for the arrest of the man in question, and last night the paper was served.

THE NEW JERSEY STATE BOARD OF HEALTH

Trenton, N. J., State Gazette.

The New Jersey State Board of Health has published its official regulations for the enforcement of the laws relating to the adulteration of food and drugs. With reference to baking powders, the following provision is made:

"Baking Powders.—The market is flooded with large quantities of inferior baking powders, and as these are sold largely to working people, and are used by these people as substitutes for yeast, it is necessary, in order that light bread be made, that these powders have proper leavening power. This power the cheaper powders do not have, many of them giving off very little carbonic gas. These cheap and imperfect powders contain alum or phosphate, and are so crudely compounded that a residue is left in the bread or biscuit after baking. The public are warned against these, and in their suppression will be faithfully aided."

The regulations provide for the collection of samples which are to be forwarded to the State chemists for analysis. Four chemists have been appointed, as follows: Prof. A. R. Leeds, Hoboken; Prof. H. B. Cornwall, Princeton; Shippen Wallace, Burlington, and Dr. W. K. Newton, Paterson.

The following are the names of the alum baking powders sold in the State examined and reported upon by the State Chemists. The list will be useful for dealers and consumers alike. If other cheap or new powders are discovered samples should be forwarded to the State Chemist for examination:

Mischievous boys or some malicious persons are in the habit of throwing lighted cigars and cigarette stumps in the letter box on the corner of Broadway and Fifth street, evidently with the intention of setting fire to the contents therein. The penalty for this kind of mischief is $100 fine and from one to three years' imprisonment.

SOMETHING NEW IN CARPETS

"If there is nothing new under the sun," there certainly is "under the feet," at least, so say John and James Dobson, the well-known Carpet manufacturers, and they ought to know. This season's productions are so large and varied that the firm above mentioned have been compelled to devote another floor of their immense establishment to the demands of their growing business.

The most striking novelty shown this Spring is a chinchilla carpeting, an especially heavy weave with a long, soft pile. For every design a bordering is shown to match. Some Turkish designs in dull rose tints, and Indian patterns in metallic blues, are particularly handsome. In Moquettes and Wiltons, there is a variety of entirely new patterns, and the coloring is notably artistic. The same attractions pervade every line of Carpets, be they high cost or medium priced; indeed the line of medium cost goods seems particularly desirable just now as the quantity is so large and varied. And then rugs, mattings, oil cloths, mats and other kinds of floor coverings, can also be obtained just as well from this firm, whose large store at 40 and 42 West Fourteenth street, New York, is so convenient for access to all out of town shoppers.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

MEN AND CLOTHES.

A Bright Woman Writes About the Fussiness of the Male Sex.

A lady signing herself Kate True has taken "it up" for the women in the columns of the Detroit Free Press. Kate says: I attended a woman's meeting the other day where some of the representative women of Boston were assembled. The subject under discussion was "dress." After the ethical side of dress had been duly considered, and the decollete gowns frowned upon, one sweet-voiced sister arose and said: "Why could we not be sensible like men; they are never bothered about their clothes; a dress suit was always a dress suit!" I looked at the speaker curiously; she was in earnest; and then I remembered that she belonged to that estimable class called spinsters, and did not know any better. In all the ups and downs and ins and outs of this kaleidoscopic world I recall certain scenes in a household of men when dressing for a party. I remember, with certain nervous twinges, the demands for needle and thread; the utterances, not sweet, but strong, concerning a delinquent tailor; the angry twitchings given an innocent necktie, and the fearful denunciations of some far-away laundress.

"Men never bother about their clothes!" Saints and angels defend us! It takes a woman with a man attachment and a quartette of brothers to understand the true inwardness of the masculine toilet. When Tom Debutant has a suit fresh from the tailor's he is more finicky and fussy about it than any woman. If there is a faint suggestion of a wrinkle across the shoulders, back it goes, and is considered a "misfit." As to the pantaloons, have I not twisted my neck worse than any photographer ever did to see if they were not a trifle too long, or too short, and didn't I consider them a little flush in the rear, or a little snug at the knees, or a trifle too springy at the bottom!

If men "do not bother about clothes," why were crazy quilts ever made to use up the superfluous neckties abandoned as out of style? As to cosmetics, Tom Debutant has free access to every one of his sister's, and perfumes are the delight of the masculine toilette. Ask your druggist who buys them, and then ask every wife who uses them up for her. Only the other day a bright woman remarked concerning a popular physician that he was the "Otter of Roses" in the morning, "German Cologne" at noon, and "Horse" at night.

"Yes, Miss Philp, there was a column in the Journal about it. I thought every one read it. Poor Billy!"

"What was the matter with him?"

"Well, you see, Billy was our Maltese goat. We called him Maltese because he rolled in the blue mud so much that he was always the color of a Maltese cat. We called him Billy because that was his name. Well, Billy got mad yesterday afternoon at the new cable-car, and he butted it. Poor Billy! Boo-hoo."

UNDIVIDED.

I met a true dear friend last night,
I had not seen in years,
And in her face beamed love's sweet light
Unchanged by time or tears.

We turned at once with natural thought
Back to our mutual past—
And thus, I think, we will be brought
To view our life at last

When meeting with our long-lost dead,
To find their love unchanged,
We gather up its hidden thread,
No faithful heart estranged.

Nor need we fear they will outgrow
Us, in their service sweet;
To us 'tis given to serve below
With swift and willing feet,

While they, in ministries of love,
May oft to us be sent;
And gently draw us to above,
Their work with ours is blent.

Our vision dim may see them not;
No voice our ears may hear,
But yet I hold and love the thought
They are in spirit near.

—N. Y. Observer.

NEARLY A TRAGEDY.

Suffering from the Misdeeds of a Twin Brother.

"Just one more errand, and then home!" It was a careless speech enough, and Sophie Wiltbank's voice was indifferent in tone, but her eyes, large dark eyes full of expression, scanned her companion's face closely.

She knew well that this one last errand was the only aim and object of that drive, though they had visited many stores and purchased quantities of goods.

She hoped Grace would ask her where they were going, help her to draw down a blow upon her cousin's heart, that she must give, and which she would yet have given her own life almost to avert. But Grace was day-dreaming apparently, looking out upon the village streets, as the carriage drove toward the suburbs. So Sophie tried again.

"Are you very tired?" she asked.

"No, indeed! I was thinking of Ernest."

Here was an opening, with a vengeance.

"Of Mr. Copeland! He will be back soon?"

"I do not know. His brother is dying. Who can tell how soon or how late he may come. Father heard in the city that Mr. Gerard Copeland is very rich. Perhaps Ernest may have business to arrange for him. For," with a shy, pretty blush, "you know Mr. Ernest Copeland is not very rich."

"So I have heard, Gracie," and Sophie's voice trembled, "do you love him very much?"

"Why, of course I do," the blue eyes now very wide open. "Are we not to be married in September?"

"But—if—any thing should prevent."

"What can happen? It is August now."

Then the carriage stopped.

"In a moment, John," Miss Sophie said, and John stood aside. But Sophie, laying one little gloved hand upon Grace's, said, earnestly:

"Grace, you know that I love you, don't you?"

"Yes, I know it. Why, Sophie, what ails you?"

"You know I would rather hurt myself than hurt you?"

"I believe you would. What is it?"

She was trembling then, and all the pretty pink flush faded from her lovely face, for Sophie's eyes were misty, her lips quivering.

"Come and see," Sophie said. "And, oh darling, forgive me that I must show you!"

She sprang out of the carriage, and Grace followed her. Two pretty maidens they were, the daughter and the niece of the great mill-owner, Joseph Wiltbank. Grace was his only child, Sophie, the orphaned, penniless child of his brother.

Grace's lover lived in the great city, where the cousins often spent some of the winter months with their aunt, in a fashionable boarding-house. In one of the informal social gatherings, to which they were invited, Grace had met Ernest.

And Sophie, heart-whole, loving Grace as yet above any one else on earth, thought of it all as she led the way across a tiny garden to a mean little cottage, where a woman stood in the doorway, holding some sewing in her hand. Two boys, of three and five, were playing in the garden.

"Good afternoon, Mrs. Copeland," Sophie said, very quietly, but watching Grace brace herself as she heard the name. "Is the sewing done?"

"Well, no, miss, not all of it. I have two skirts done."

"I promised to bring my cousin to see if she had any work you could do."

"Walk in," Mrs. Copeland said.

And Grace, following Sophie, entered the little parlor. A cry rose to her lips, but she said, hastily:

"I sprained my foot!" and sat down, just as Sophie prepared to catch her if she fell. She could still see over the mantel-piece a crayon head of Ernest Copeland!

"I think you told me you were not a widow," Sophie said.

"No, miss. My husband deserted me. I was a poor girl, without education, and he was a gentleman. But I believed in his love and we were very happy till last winter. Then he changed, and one day he gave me some money to keep for him, quite a sum, and went away. He never came back, but he wrote to me never to expect to see him again. The money lasted till now, but it is gone. I hoped I could get work at the mill, and it's cheaper living in the country; so I came here. But I'm not strong enough for the mill work, and it does not bring enough to pay for some one to watch the children; so I put out that sign," pointing to a neat board on which was painted the legend:

MRS. COPELAND, Plain Sewing.

"Yes. It was the sign that brought me here. We will come in again when you finish the work I have left. Is this your husband?" looking at the crayon head.

"Yes, ma'am. It is a good likeness."

"He is?" said Sophie. "Come, Gracie. Poor child, how pale you are! I am afraid your foot pains you very much."

The cousins gently declined any assistance, and went back to the carriage.

"Drive home quickly, John," Miss Sophie said, and John obeyed.

No word of complaint passed Grace's white lips, but she clung to her cousin, always the stronger nature of the two, till she reached her own room, then whispering: "I want to be alone a little while," kissed Sophie, and went into her own room.

There was a family council down stairs, while Grace fought her own agony. Sophie told her story, and Mr. Wiltbank stormed and raved, while Aunt Agnes wept profusely.

"I have it! I was going to send Porter over to Paris this season, on account of the wedding, but I'll go myself, and I'll take Grace! We will all go!"

It was sudden, but where money is plentiful sudden moves are easy. Before Grace realized fully that she was to be carried away, they were all four on a European steamer "outward-bound."

And Ernest Copeland, watching his dying brother, wondered why no letters came from Ferndale, chafed under the necessity for remaining so long from his betrothed, but was too much occupied until the last sad hours to do more than pen anxious letters never answered.

He had a heavy heart to carry to the funeral, a sacred trust to fulfill, and he had no elation in the fact that half of his brother's fortune left him a far richer man than he had ever been. Gerard's life had been shortened by drinking and by remorse.

It was over at last, the funeral, the care of the dead man's personal property, and then with an undefined fear of evil Ernest Copeland went to Ferndale.

"Gone! Gone to Europe, you say!"

He repeated this after the servant, in a daze of bewildered pain, holding unopened the letters given with the message. Not for some minutes could he collect his senses sufficiently to understand he held perhaps the clew to the mystery in his hand.

But he opened it at last. Grace had had to plead hard for permission to write those lines, harder still to keep back a furious epistle from her father. But only her well-known writing greeted her lover's eyes as he opened the letter:

"Your wife and children," he read, "are in the little cottage opposite the church. May God forgive your cruelty to them."

There was no address or signature. Only one low moan broke from Ernest's white lips as he folded the note again and turned from the house. White as death, shivering in the soft summer air, he went down the road to the cottage. There was an ecstatic scream of "Papa! Papa!" as four clinging arms encircled his legs, and Mrs. Copeland stood trembling and crying in the doorway.

He gently lifted the youngest child, and, followed by the other, went into the cottage. Mrs. Copeland, crying still, sobbed:

"So you have come back!"

Gravely, but not tenderly, Ernest answered:

"Your husband will never come back. You know best by what want of wifely love you drove him to drinking, to despair, finally to deserting you. He was not guiltless; but ask yourself if you are."

"Who are you?" she gasped.

"I am Gerard's twin brother."

"I have heard of you. Where is he?"

"In his grave."

She dropped at his feet as if he had shot her. She had been a slovenly housekeeper, a shrewish wife, grating every hour upon Gerard's sensitive, fastidious tastes; but, in her way, she had loved him, scarcely realizing how she drove him desperate.

It consoled her presently to know that half of her husband's wealth would be hers and her children's, and Ernest made no explanation of the reasons why the search he had promised his brother to make for her had been so suddenly terminated. He left her at last to find Porter, Mr. Wiltbank's confidential clerk. Having received no orders to the contrary, Porter readily gave his employer's Paris address, and Ernest returned to the city, to interview his brother's lawyer, and prepare for a sea voyage.

Over the broad Atlantic the Wiltbank party accepted the usual tribulations of sea-sickness and discomfort. Only Grace was exempt. She waited on the others, but made no moan over old Neptune's caprices. White as a snowflake, listless, with her soft blue eyes sunk in hollows, her little white hands wasting, her pretty bright ways all gone, she said she was perfectly well, and seemed to be dying before her father's eyes.

She would not own to being sick after they arrived in Paris.

They had been a month in Paris, and the French doctor Mr. Wiltbank called in talked of a "want of tone," and "raising the spirits" of his patient, but Sophie wept all the long, lonely nights, believing her fatal discovery had killed her cousin.

But it was Sophie who, one day in November, received a visitor alone, a visitor who sent up a little note that sent her with flying feet to receive him.

He was still in the salon, when Sophie came into the sitting-room, their own private salon, where Grace was sitting at the window.

She wanted to tell her news calmly, to avoid exciting the inmates, but she broke down, sobbing:

"Grace! Grace! Will you ever forgive me? It was all a mistake. She was Gerard's wife, Ernest's twin brother's wife! He is here!"

"Here! Ernest here!"

And Sophie flew out again. She sent him in alone, for she said:

"I must watch, or uncle will murder you before you have a chance to explain."

Ernest entered the room, where a pale shadow of his bright Grace rose to receive him, to fall into his arms weeping now as in all her despair she had not wept. But there were no more tears. Grace's roses came back in their happiness, and there was a wedding in Paris where Sophie was bridesmaid, and hosts of American friends offered congratulations.

But as Sophie sagely observed, shaking her pretty head:

"It was nearly a tragedy, for if uncle and Ernest had met too soon, there is no saying what might have happened."—Anna Shields, in N. Y. Ledger.

NUTMEG CULTURE.

How the Nuts Are Grown and Treated in New Guinea.

Paddling into a little cove, says Captain John Strachan in the Glasgow Mail, on the south side of the bay, we landed beside a clear, rippling stream, and, having ordered the whole of the men to march in Indian file in front, we started by a little rugged path into the mountains, with my interpreter immediately behind me, and the Rajah just in front. Every foot of the journey, which was laborious in the extreme, disclosed fresh scenes of verdure and tropical splendor, winding along the sides of deep ravines, sometimes dragging ourselves up the creepers and undergrowth, we ultimately attained an altitude of about one thousand feet above the sea, and then entered the nutmeg country. Here we halted and rested. The Rajah pulled some of the nutmegs, and explained how far they were from being ripe.

Having rested sufficiently, we again started forward, and after scrambling along for about an hour, we gained a fine piece of table-land, over which we traveled for about another half an hour, when we reached three houses erected in the very heart of the forest. These were used by the natives for drying the nutmegs. The country was everywhere magnificent, and the aroma of the spice-laden air delicious. Nutmeg and other equally valuable trees were everywhere growing in great profusion. The fruit of the nutmeg in appearance resembles a peach, and when ripe opens and displays the nut covered with a beautiful red coating of mace. The nuts are then picked from the trees, put into baskets and taken to the houses, where they are husked and placed on shelves. They are then partially roasted over a slow fire until all the moisture is extracted. After this they are cooled and carried down to the village in nets ready to be bartered to the Bugis, Arabs and other traders who frequent the Gulf in their small prows or junks at the proper season.

NEBULÆ EXPLAINED.

Instructive Information for Students of Astronomy.

According to Late Researches Nebulæ Are Neither Very Distant Clusters of Stars Nor Masses of Gas, But Merely a Cluster of Meteorites.

Ptolemy was the first to point out, when he was making his map of the stars, that there were certain "cloudy" stars, of which he gave five on his map, writes J. Norman Lockyer in Harper's Magazine; and Tycho Brahe, whose work was done before the invention of the telescope, although he did not notice any bodies which we now class as nebulæ, was firmly convinced that that nebulous luminosity which we call the Milky-Way was something entirely different in its nature from the stars. He imagined it to be what he called an ethereal essence, a sort of fire-mist, so that when in his time, in the year 1572, a new star appeared, he supposed it to be a considerable agglomeration of this ethereal fluid. Galileo was able to show that the Milky-Way, the "ethereal substance" of Tycho, was only an appearance due to enormous numbers of stars lying in the same visual ray; the stars of which it is composed can indeed be seen with very small optical power.

It was not till 1612, a few years after the introduction of the telescope, that we got the first real definition of a body which we now call a nebula. The first observation we owe to Simon Marius, who stated that some of the bodies visible in his telescope exactly resembled the appearance produced by the flame of a candle seen through horn. It was not till 1656 that the nebula in Orion was discovered, although now to the trained eye it is very easily visible, so that it seems rather wonderful that it was not discovered before. In 1714, in England, attention began to be paid to these bodies, but it was not until the time of Sir William Herschel that the most magnificent revelations were made. He was the first to construct very large telescopes, by means of which objects which appear to the eye as excessively dim, or objects entirely invisible to the naked eye, may be brought into full visibility. In this way Sir William Herschel convinced himself of the existence of a true nebulous fluid differing from stars.

After not only Sir William Herschel, but his son, Sir John Herschel, had accumulated vast stores of facts, Lord Rosse took up the story, and made a telescope very much more powerful than any which had been employed by the Herschels. His telescope has a light-grasping power compared with the eye of 190,000. The chief result of Lord Rosse's work to which we need hereafter is the idea that in a great many bodies which had been classed as nebulæ this enormous increase of optical power suggested that we were only dealing with very distant clusters of stars.

Lord Rosse was able to get the suggestion of "resolvability" in so many bodies which had been classed as nebulæ by Sir William Herschel and others that gradually the idea came to be held that the most nebulous nebula, if we could get sufficient optical power to bear upon it, would be broken up into stars just as certainly as the Milky-Way had been by Galileo.

This would mean that the nebulæ were simply clusters of stars so infinitely remote from our ken that even with the power of Lord Rosse's instrument they retained the appearance of an ethereal essence.

This was the general opinion in 1864, in the early days of spectrum analysis, when Dr. Huggins turned his spectroscope one night to one of the planetary nebulæ. At first he thought that something had gone wrong in the apparatus, because he could only see a bright line, instead of the usual sort of spectrum obtained from a star. Further work on other nebulæ showed him, however, that the spectroscope was doing its level best, and that the cause, the anomaly, was really that the nebula gave out monochromatic light, while stars gave out light of all colors.

In some cases another line was seen, easily proved to be due to hydrogen, and in another planetary nebula other observers have since shown that there is another hydrogen line visible.

It became Dr. Huggins' duty to find out the origin of the first line observed, and he came to the conclusion, after considerable labor, that this line was very nearly, if not exactly, in the position of the chief line seen in the spectrum of nitrogen, and the suggestion was therefore made that these nebulæ were masses of nitrogen and hydrogen gasses mixed, or if not nitrogen, some constituent of nitrogen mixed with hydrogen. That result made the idea of Lord Rosse concerning the possibility of the resolvability of nebulæ into stars untenable. We had to consider from that time that the light of the nebulæ came from a gas or vapor, and hence it was held that the nebulæ were masses of gas.

Another explanation of the origin of the green line has already been given. If we study the spectrum of magnesium, we find a very bright fluting with its less refrangible edge absolutely in the position of the green line; in the nebulæ and in comets the same line appears, not nearly, as in the case of the line of nitrogen, but absolutely. But not only so. We find another line of magnesium also visible in the planetary nebulæ. Again, in the spectrum of magnesium burning in the Bunsen burner, can be photographed a line having the exact wave-length of a line also seen in the nebula of Orion, so that there is a considerable amount of cumulative evidence that magnesium is the true origin of this spectrum, the luminosity being produced by meteorites, the chief constituent of which is a compound of magnesium with oxygen, silicon and iron.

We are therefore justified, until some better explanation has been given, in holding the view that nebulæ, like comets, consist of meteorites, and that they are neither very distant clusters of stars nor masses of gas.

Cost of Living in Germany.

The poor of Germany can live much cheaper than the poor of America. But for the rich, especially for Americans and English, living is nearly as expensive in the Fatherland as their native countries. The following are the prices of some articles of food as bought by rich and poor on the public market: Butter is 25 cents a pound; eggs, 20 cents a dozen; coffee, from 15 to 40 cents a pound; salt, 5 cents a quart; sugar, 6 cents a pound; a huge loaf of rye bread, 8 cents; steak is 15, 20 and 25 cents a pound; vegetables cost just about one quarter as much in Germany as with us.

Bottled Fire Extinguishers.

A physician has imparted to the Atlanta Constitution, for domestic application, the exact recipe of the solution used in the fire extinguishers now offered for sale, as follows: "Take twenty pounds of common salt and ten pounds of sal ammoniac (muriate of ammonia, to be had of any druggist), and dissolve in seven gallons of water. When dissolved it can be bottled and kept in each room in the house, to be used in an emergency. In case of a fire occurring, one or two bottles should be immediately thrown with force into the burning place so as to break them, and the fire will certainly be extinguished.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

In the whole galaxy of mortal perplexities there is none more perplexing than that of fixing the responsibility for the dude, says Munsey's Weekly.

The creature exists in every land, with the possible exception of England, where those who would be dudes if they were permitted to, go into the army. There is no such leisure class in England as there is in this country. To be sure, there are Dukes and Marquises and Barons and Lords, but these men are not dudes, because they have duties to perform, which I admit the American dude has not. They represent an idea, which the American dude does not. They are part of a system—the American dude is a part of a disorder, he represents chaos in its completest form, he is a confused conglomeration of trousers, flesh, cravats, blood, bone and shirt collar; purposeless, incapable of thought, his life one hopeless round of tailors' bills, cocktails and cigarettes.

Who is responsible for him?

I have heard it said that his father is responsible for him, but it has always seemed to me that this is not a just assertion. Primarily responsible for him, no doubt, is the father of the dude, yet in these days when the struggle for existence is so fierce a fight, when even death itself entails an expense so great that it deters the man of moderate means from committing suicide, when the cost of living seems overwhelming, what opportunity is there for the father to direct his son in the proper path toward the goal of mediocrity which must now be regarded as the limit of the dude's capacity? How can the father in these days, when decent poverty is the lot of him who but ten years ago would have been accounted wealthy, spare a moment of his time to see that his boy is cast in the mold of manhood? Is it not too much for the parent to devote time to the education of his son when time is so valuable a commodity—does not the father, indeed, do all that can be expected of him when he allows the boy $10,000 a year on which to bring himself up!

No. The father must not be blamed for the dude. If he does not give his personal attention, he gives him its cash equivalent and his conscience is clear.

I am loath to believe this.

The shoulders of the mother must not be overburdened by so great a responsibility as this. How can an observing person who knows the ways of the mother of the dude reach so absurd a conclusion? Is it not clear to all men of experience that the dude's mother is quite as busy, and as hopelessly busy, too, as the dude's father! When we consider the ceaseless round of social duties that devolve upon this beautiful matron, when we think of all the calls to be made, the receptions to be given and attended, the teas, the cotillions, the theater parties to be engineered, the parties of young people to be chaperoned, the balls to be patronized, the amateur theatricals to be supervised, the number of establishments, town house, country house, mountain lodge, shooting box, not to mention the yachts and house boats to be looked after, how can we, I say, when we consider all these things, add to the weight upon the maternal shoulders by making her responsible for the idiosyncrasies of her son! Her horses must be exercised in the afternoon, her opera box must be occupied at night, her dress-maker must be seen in the early morn—surely the mother has not a moment to devote to the adolescent dude, and how can she be held responsible for him when she has nothing to do with him?

Again the theorists are fallible. The mother, no more than the father, is responsible for this curious freak of nature.

This leaves but two possibly responsible persons to be considered—the dude's nurse, or the girl of the period. The nurse is quickly disposed of, because, after attaining his majority, the average dude has no use for a nurse. He breaks away from her, hires a valet, on whom no responsibility devolves further than that of keeping the dust out of his master's wardrobe and seeing that his shoes are removed when he goes to bed in the early morning. The nurse must be absolved of responsibility.

So we come to the proper solution of the problem. The girl of the period is responsible for the dude. This conclusion may not be disputed, for it can not be denied that if the girl of the period were to insist upon something better than small talk, were to discountenance the cigarette school of philosophy upon which are based so many of Mr. Edgar Saltus' alleged studies of society, were to insist upon a higher idea of life than that which holds as its aim the running up of tailors' bills and the sucking of cane handles in club windows. If indeed the modern girl, whom we all love in spite of her faults, were to discourage the dude in his chaotic inanity and refuse to uphold him longer, deserting him for the man of true ideals, of lofty ambition, of brains, the dude would no longer exist, for the instinct of self preservation would lead him to kill himself off.

It is none the less true.

TOLD BY SENATORS.

Two Stories Illustrating Prairie Morals Where Lumber Is Concerned.

Old Philetus Sawyer, the genial Senator from Wisconsin, who can tell a good story as well as any of them, amused his colleagues and the New York Tribune correspondent in the committee room of pensions the other day by referring to the smartness of a local preacher near his home, who, he says, is as sharp and shrewd at a bargain as he is prompt to attend to the spiritual requirements of those in affliction. This preacher was called upon once to attend a funeral, and on returning home remarked, with no small satisfaction, that he had "improved the time by making fifteen dollars in a wood trade while the mourners were viewing the corpse."

This little lumber story reminded one of the Nebraska Senators of one of the most powerful and effective revivals that ever occurred in the West at a little town in his State not a thousand miles from Omaha, where every male inhabitant, with a single exception, was converted. The inhabitants of the town were, as a rule, wretchedly poor. The president of the railroad company on the line of which the town was situated, touched with sympathy for their condition, approached one of the principal men and inquired if they ever had any preaching out in that section.

"Preaching!" said the person addressed. "Oh, yes; we had a great revival here last winter, and all got converted but one man, who said he could not join the church until he had stolen timber enough from the railroad company to fence his farm."

I suppose that these two stories, as illustrating prairie morals where lumber is concerned, are unique, if I may be permitted to perpetrate a bull.

WHEN IT'S TOO LATE.

What We Do for the Dead We Had Better Do for the Living.

It is an odd thing, muses Harper's Weekly, that no sooner has death claimed our friends for his own than we begin to say and do a multitude of things of little use at all then in comparison to that which they might have been had they come in advance of death. Then out of hand we flock to the house with offers of assistance and proffers of friendship; we rob our gardens and our hot houses and send cut flowers in profusion, and funeral wreaths and crosses and pillows and anchors and stars to encumber, and do all we can, though late, to hide and disguise and sweeten fate. But if we had flocked to the house while the dead could have been aware of it, how much pleasure and excitement and relief from monotonous or lonesome hours our sick friends might have enjoyed when all was a tiresome round of day and night, and medicine and solitude, when a bunch of flowers brought in would have brought a light to the dull eyes of joy both over the gift and the giver, joy which no broken columns of tuberoses and ivies, costing small fortunes, can bring to the eyes of the dead!

Even could we not have been admitted to the sick room itself, we could have brought there the murmur of the outside world by the mere knowledge given to the patient that we were within the gates, some break, some cheer, some good.

Then, too, how profuse we are with our good words after the ears are stopped with dust! We do not hesitate then to say all that is true, or even more than is true in praise of the departed. It is as if we had suddenly discovered in the sand a jewel fit for kings to wear; we make an outcry and hold it up to the light and turn it this way and that and exclaim and marvel and admire and call on others to do likewise. There is nothing too much to say about this person now that the place once filled is vacant. But if we had said a tenth of it all when it might have been heard by the living person, of how much more worth it had been! What joy and satisfaction it might have given! the subject of it all might have felt as if not living in vain, as if satisfied to leave life with such appreciation. But it was not spoken, and life went out without it; and now we regret it, and do the same thing over with the next friend.

OOZY-HEADED PEOPLE.

Beware of Persons Between Whose Ears and Mouth There Is No Partition.

You would not pour precious wine into a sieve, yet that were as wise as to make a confidant of one of those "leaky vessels" of society that, like corporation watercarts, seem to have been made for the express purpose of letting out what they take in. There is this difference, however, says the New York Ledger, between the perforated pumpkin and the leaky brain—the former lays the dust and the latter is pretty sure to raise a dust.

Beware of oozy-headed people, between whose ears and mouth there is no partition. Before you make a bosom friend of any man be sure that he is secret-tight. The mischief that the non-retentives do is infinite. In war they often mar the best-laid schemes and render futile the most profound strategy. In social life they sometimes set whole communities by the ears, frequently break up families and are the cause of innumerable misfortunes, miseries and crimes. In business they spoil many a promising speculation and involve hundreds in bankruptcy and ruin. Therefore, be very careful to whom you intrust information of vital importance to your own interests or to the interests of those you hold dear.

Every man has a natural inclination to communicate what he knows, and if he does not do so it is because his reason and judgment are strong enough to control this inherent propensity. When you find a friend who can exercise absolute power over the communicative instinct—if we may so term it—wear him in your heart, "yes, in your heart of heart." If you have no such friend, keep your own counsel.

The Doctor Who Succeeds.

A physician who understands human nature, who plays with the baby, makes friends with the children and listens to the woes of the good wife and mother, is the fellow to whom the master of the house most cheerfully pays the largest bills. It isn't the medicine that's bottled up, but it's the comfort, the consolation that are unbottled that mark the broad line between an unsuccessful and a popular physician.

FALSE PROTECTION.

The radical tariff difference between the Democratic and Republican parties is that the Democrats seek to practically encourage and protect all kinds of legitimate American industry and enterprise, while the Republicans concentrate their fostering care upon the [illegible] and the [illegible] of wealth.

Labor is the architect of all wealth, without it this country would be a barren waste.

First and foremost labor should be the object of intelligent regard on the part of legislators.

Is it protected?

During the recent Presidential campaign Republican orators and [illegible] rang far and wide the [illegible] charge that the Democrats were "free traders," bent on reducing the wages of labor to a level with the paupers of Europe, and in order to keep up the [illegible] of home industry, it was absolutely essential that the Democrats be voted down and the present so-called war [illegible] tariff system be maintained.

Tariff Reform was for the time being defeated. The day of [illegible] [illegible].

A rich manufacturing firm in New York, tariff tribute [illegible], compelled their large force of workmen to march in Republican processions [illegible] just slaves, and to shout "Republican protection forever," and "death to Democratic free trade."

By such tyranny levied against the liberty of political action these workmen retained employment, but at what cost?

A reduction of wages.

Off upon such hypocritical protection! Wages actually cut down after the election was over, and yet the blessed Republican was [illegible] in full blast.

In Fall River thousands of mill operatives having had their meagre earnings lowered twice under the present [illegible] system of Republican protection, asked their [illegible] masters for a reasonable increase, only a few crumbs from a richly protected table.

Was their request granted?

Nay—spurned as insolence.

Those millionaire Massachusetts mill owners, living in palaces, clothed in purple and fine linen, and faring sumptuously every day out of special and [illegible] tariff tribute profits, instead of sharing a little gain with their poor [illegible] employees, who had no doubt been [illegible] to vote the Republican ticket, coolly told them to accept our offered [illegible] or suffer.

As we before said, and we repeat it with emphasis, labor ought to be the first subject for protection, not empty partisan profession, but substantial [illegible] reality, and that the day is coming when the idols of tariff fatality will be swept out of existence by the bright and prospering beams of genuine TARIFF REFORM.

MRS. JAMES AND HER DESCENDENTS.

The approaching centennial gives special interest to the following extract from the life of Mrs. Mary D. James, who has many descendants well known to THE PRESS readers:

"Early in the year seventeen hundred and eighty-nine, Trenton, the capital of New Jersey, witnessed an occurrence which has passed into history. General George Washington, who had been chosen first President of the new Republic, was on his way to New York City for the inauguration ceremonies. His whole journey was a triumphal march, but nowhere was he treated with more cordiality than in Trenton, the scene of the first decisive victory of the little American army twelve years before. Young ladies from leading families strewed his path with flowers, and all classes delighted to do him honor. On the day before the arrival of the distinguished visitor the [illegible] was thronged with people eager to see the preparations for his reception, and especially the triumphal arch under which he was to pass."

This arch has been preserved and was to be brought from the attic where it has been treasured so many years to grace the pageantry of the [illegible] centennial celebration in Trenton that was [illegible].

The book goes on to tell how Benjamin Yard, a young carpenter at work on the arch, fell in love with a young lady in the crowd of spectators—Miss Priscilla Knox who he subsequently married. That the little blind god should be on hand in the midst of such pomp and ceremony, is perhaps not so remarkable as that a wonderful amount of patriotism was engendered in the descendants of the young couple who met in this romantic manner.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Yard were the parents of Mrs. James, a lady well known for her patriotic sympathy with our soldiers. Her brothers, Captain Joseph Yard, and Lieutenant Edw. Yard, served in the Mexican war, while eight grandsons of Priscilla Knox and Benjamin Yard, who first met under this historic arch, rendered valiant service in the war of the Rebellion, as Chaplains, Colonel, Major and other officers, one of whom has recently received the appointment of Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Was That Local Option?

[illegible]

Then the new law gives the South local option, at least, whereas the old law gave no local option in any meaning of the word.

Fanwood ought to deal out [illegible] against the sale of rum in its limits, and there might be cast every vote in the Township against it, but the Fanwood people had no option in the matter—the "[illegible]" at Elizabethport would settle that.

Westfield had nothing to say about the sale of liquor in her limits, that [illegible] might not wipe out, and so on [illegible].

The Local Option Repealer.

The question is frequently asked whether or not the passage of the Werts' bill will affect the counties in which local option elections have already been held. We should say that it will, from the reports we hear from neighboring localities. A day or two ago, a hotel keeper from White House was in the city, and stated that unless the local option law was repealed, he would be obliged to [illegible] of the county. He said that provided the local option repealer took effect, he could apply to the District Court and have his license application granted.

[illegible]

Mr. Israel Thorne, a venerable old farmer of Metuchen, drove in town noon of Saturday, and at the corner of Park and North avenues, a bolt from his whiffletree dropped. His team realizing that they had everything their own way, started at full speed towards Second street, but the plucky old gentleman, rising from his seat, succeeded in getting the horses under control, and brought them to a dead stop in front of Fine's cigar store. There he made the necessary repairs, and drove away.

Attempted Burglary in the Borough.

An attempt was made Friday by burglars to enter the residence of Borough Councilman J. M. Dettmer, on Willow avenue, Washington Park.

The burglars may congratulate themselves upon their failure to get admission, for the chances are they would have met with a warm reception, in the shape of fireworks.

The Park is a bad place for burglars, as the residents are always prepared for them. With burglar alarms, pistols, shot guns and dogs, the midnight marauders have little show.

South Plainfield.

A party of Lehigh Valley Railroad officials visited South Plainfield in a private car, a few days ago, to examine the new switch tower recently erected there by the company. The party supped in their car, during which wine flowed like water. The officials left for New York about 11 P. M.

This place is experiencing quite a boom in the building line, just at present. Several new houses have recently been erected, and others are now in course of erection.

A considerable quantity of coal and freight is now being carried over the new branch of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, but as yet no regular passenger trains have passed over the new route.

The roads in this vicinity are very rough in places, but a few days fair weather will soon dry them up, and put them in good condition.

A View of Plainfield from a Distance.

A former resident of this city, an aged man of 70 years, now living in Brooklyn, writes as follows in a private letter.

"I trust that Plainfield has not been entirely ignored and abandoned by the out-side world as a place of residence, but I confess that at this distance it looks a good deal that way. Unless the citizens do something in the way of facilitating the movements of the people about town by street railroads in place of carriages, they may as well wall the town in and lock the gates to prevent the balance of the community from leaving.

"Then could be written on the wall

THIS TOWN IS FINISHED
we are happy and contented with our success and prosperity (?)

"You want nothing in Plainfield at present, more than you do street railroads. They will inspire confidence and give an impetus to business that will send a thrill of vitality and prosperity to your city that it has not felt for years."

PROPOSED GAME LEGISLATION.

The Bills Now Before the Legislature and their Purport.

The law made by last year's Legislature dividing the State into two game sections, known as the Northern and Southern sections, has not proved at all satisfactory to sportsmen in South Jersey. They had the law made through the agency of Senator Roe because they desired to have their season open later than it did in the Northern part of the State. The counties in the Northern section comprised Essex, Bergen, Hudson, Hunterdon, Middlesex, Morris, Passaic, Somerset, Sussex, Union and Warren, and the remaining counties, including Mercer, were in the Southern district.

In the Northern section the game season was fixed between October 15 and December 1; in the Southern portion between November 1[illegible] and December 5. This made the season a month shorter in the lower part of the State, and it was thought that the game would be better protected in that way. It has been found that this does not operate in the way desired, and it is now proposed to repeal this law and pass another introduced by Judge Ulrich, of Union county, at the request of the "New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society," whose headquarters are at Plainfield, and of which Judge Ulrich is counsel. The repealer has been introduced by Mr. Harris, of Camden. There are a large number of game bills before the Legislature, but Mr. Ulrich's bill is the one which will be likely to become a law. It fixes the game season as follows: Quail, ruffed grouse and rabbit, during November and to December 16; woodcock, during July, October, November, and to December 16; grass plover, during August, September, October, November and to December 16; Wilson snipe, during March and April, October, November, and to December 16; reed birds, rail birds and marsh-hens, during September, October, November, and to December 16. The bill has passed the House and will undoubtedly pass the Senate.

Senator Edwards of Hudson, also has a bill pending which makes the Northern game section to consist of the same counties as in the old law. It makes the open season as follows: For ruffed grouse, quail, gray squirrel or rabbit, between Nov. 1 and Dec. 15, and for woodcock during July, Oct. and Nov.

There is also a bill pending before the House changing the time for fishing for brook trout from March 1 to Oct. 1, to the time between April 1 and July 15 of each year. This is quite important to lovers of trout fishing who wish to follow their favorite sport during their Summer vacations. There will not be much opportunity under such a law as this if passed.

One of the members from Monmouth county is endeavoring to have a law enacted making September the open season for gray squirrels.

Senator Carter, of Burlington, has a bill before the Senate which makes it unlawful to catch or kill gray squirrels except during September, November, and to December 16, under a penalty of $[illegible] for each squirrel; to ship from this State any rabbit, quail, or pheasant, either dead or alive, under a penalty of $25 for each animal or bird; and to hunt rabbits with ferrets, under a penalty of $100 fine or six month's imprisonment.

Two bills are pending to enforce the game laws about Barnegat Bay. One authorizes the appointment of a game warden by the Governor for a term of three years for that purpose, and the other amends the present law in several important particulars.

Senator Smith introduced a bill this week prohibiting the killing or capturing of European partridges, grouse or hare pheasants for three years.

Although most of these bills were introduced early in the session some of them have yet become laws. This sort of legislation is generally left until the more important work is done.

The "New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society" numbers among its membership a large number of New York and other [illegible], and is rapidly increasing in membership on account of its interest in game matters, protection of game and enforcement of the game and fish laws.

—The Senate re-districting bill passed the House at Trenton Mch 27 by a vote of 33 to 2[illegible], and only awaits the Governor's signature to become a law.

Elizabeth's Substantial Gift.

There was recorded in the County Clerk's office at Elizabeth, Monday, the deed transferring to the city the Anthony W. Dimock property located on South Broad street, in that city. The property is a gift to the city by Mr. Joseph Battin, "for the purpose of establishing, conducting and maintaining a free public school of the grade and character now commonly known as a high school." The dimensions of the lot are 100x219 feet, 9 inches, and the consideration was $1. The house originally cost $250,000.

Again the Frightened Women Jump.

Mrs. Israel Coon of Smalleytown, and Mrs. Handrill, of Union Village, jumped out of a carriage, that an unmanageable team was dragging down a steep hill, Wednesday week. Fortunately neither of the women were killed.

Mr. Coon was driving, and the party was returning from Millington. Mrs. Handrill struck the hard road bed on her head and received a severe scalp wound. Mrs. Coon escaped with a few body bruises. Both are suffering as much from the shock as from their injuries, but are in a fair way of recovery.

Everybody Excited Over Nothing.

"Somebody" sent an alarm of fire by telephone from Short Hills, about half-past two o'clock Tuesday. The bell was rung and the whole Department turned out with the exception of Fe cart, and chased one another around the streets looking for the conflagration.

Mr. John Gable, of Gazelle company gave an old farmer a dollar to tow their steamer out Broadway to Webster place. Here the apparatus all anchored, until Chief Doane ordered them back home. The farmer brought about 75 men and boys back in his hay rigging.

The cause of the alarm was a pile of burning brush. During the excitement Charles Hand's horse ran away with his dump cart, and Clark Hope caught the animal on Putnam street.

A MINISTER OF GOD ON PROHIBITION.

The Daily Spirit of Chambersburg, Pa., published last Tuesday week a letter from the Rev. Cyrus Cort, pastor of the Reformed church of Greencastle, and one of the ablest ministers in this State, in which he defines his position on the prohibition amendment question. He writes:

"As long as I hold my present orthodox views respecting the inspiration and integrity of God's word, I must regard prohibition as unscrupulous and wrong in principle. I could not consistently endorse prohibition without nullifying or perverting many parts or passages of the sacred Scriptures, and at the same time running counter to what I consider the genius and aim of free and constitutional government.

"As a practical measure of temperance reform, prohibition has been largely a failure, and tends to create a community of spies, informers and hypocrites—the most abominable state of society that we can conceive."

They Are Blessed With [illegible] in Joliet.

The city of Joliet, in Illinois, is the latest shining example of the wisdom and effectiveness of High License. Seven years ago it had 137 saloons for a population of 15,000, and the license fees, being $25 each, amounted to $3,175. Under the High License law the fee was raised to $1,000. This closed more than one-half the saloons, leaving only fifty-five.

The largely increased tax they pay supports the police, the firemen, all the city officers and the cost of lighting and cleaning the streets. Having now a population of about 30,000, the people of the town are considering the advisability of raising the fee to the enormous figure of $2,000. This would, they believe, cut down the number of saloons to fifteen, while at the same time increasing the total revenue. Isn't it better that the saloons should be heavily taxed for the support of the government than that they should go scot free, as they do in so many communities under Prohibition laws?—Tribune.

Past Three Score and Ten.

The 75th anniversary of the birth of Mr. T. J. Gillies, was celebrated Friday afternoon and evening by a surprise party tendered that young gentleman at the home of his daughter, Mrs. E. B. Ryder, on Central avenue.

There was a general good time, with much feasting and rejoicing. Among the guests and relatives present, were:

Mr. and Mrs. John Gillies, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Gillies, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gillies, Mr. and Mrs. James Gillies, Miss Emily Gillies, Master Robt. Gillies, Jr., Miss Aggie Gillies, Miss Cornelia Gillies, Miss Lulu Gillies, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Gillies, Mr. T. J. Gillies, Jr., Miss Mabel Gillies, Mr. and Mrs. Dr. De Long, Mr. and Mrs. J. DeLong, Mr. Ed. DeLong, and Miss Mamie DeLong, of Brooklyn.

Mr. Chas. MacGiathery, Mrs. Chas. McGiathery, Mr. Add McGiathery, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hale, Miss Cornelia Hale, Miss Flora Prentice, Mrs. A. Buchanan, of Philadelphia.

Mrs. Nettie Coffin, Brooklyn; Mrs. Lou Palmer and Mr. John Lent, Long Island; Mr. E. C. Ryder and Miss Dollie Ryder, Plainfield; Miss Agnes Irine Palmer, Long Island.

OBITUARY.

The Hon. Enos Wisner Runyon.

In the death of Judge Enos W. Runyon, which sad event occurred Saturday A.M. at 10:30 o'clock, Plainfield loses a valued and honored citizen. Deceased has been confined to his residence, No. 136 Park avenue, for months past by cancer in the throat, but has borne his sufferings with Christian and heroic fortitude. During the past two weeks Mr. Runyon was conscious of the fact that he had but a short time to live and with remarkable clearness and precision arranged his business affairs in proper shape in anticipation of death. He was conscious to the last moment, and recognized and expressed in a feeling manner his thoughts toward faithful friends and his family.

Enos W. Runyon was born at Green Brook, N. J., Feb. 24, 1825. In early life he was publisher of the Plainfield Gazette, in a building then on the site of the handsome building recently erected by Mr. Clarkson on East Front street. Later he engaged in the law business and succeeded Hon. E. B. Green as presiding Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of the new county of Union, which position he occupied with honor and credit alike to himself and his constituents. He also served two terms as member of Assembly from the Third Assembly District of Union county, and was appointed Engrossing Clerk of the House four years ago. He also served as member of the Common Council of the city of Plainfield, and was its President in 1870. Of late years he has been connected with the law firm of E. W. & N. Runyon of this city. He leaves a family of wife, three daughters and one son. The children are Mary, Susan, Mabel and Albert. The widow, a most esteemed Christian woman, is the sister of ex-Postmaster Wallace Vail.

Judge Runyon was a conscientious and honest man in all his dealings, and held the respect of the community in which he has lived so long. He leaves a host of friends to regret his death. The funeral services took place at his late residence, 136 Park avenue, Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The Rev. Robert Lowry officiating.

John, the seven-year-old son of Mr. John Benner, of East Front street, was thrown from his father's fish wagon, in front of the First Presbyterian church, Friday afternoon, and received painful injuries to his back and shoulders. A carriage was passing at the time, and the little fellow came near being run over.

Took a Header to the Ballast.

Michael Ettinger jumped from a passenger train just after it had left this city, March 20, and broke his collar-bone. The services of Dr. E. W. Hedges were sought, the fracture was set, and the unfortunate man is laid up at home awaiting recovery.

Ettinger was going to Netherwood, and by mistake boarded the 4:34 train instead of the one a few minutes behind it. When the brakeman shouted "Lizabeth-next-stop," and swung the car door shut, Ettinger made a rush for the platform steps and launched himself out along the track.

Reform Hall.

The storm last Thursday did not prevent a goodly attendance in Reform Hall. There is an awakened public interest in the success of the Reform Club since the ministers of Plainfield, with one or two exceptions, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, except a band of noble female workers, have strangely withdrawn countenance and support from an institution that has done so much to reform and elevate humanity. We are informed by a member of the club that it will now, daring to do right, rally with increased energy for the carrying forth of its saving mission, holding as it does that religion and temperance are identical. President French last evening presided. Several pointed addresses were made, and Mrs. King and Miss Alice Smith discoursed the best of music.

The Plainfield Building and Loan Association.

At the regular meeting of the Plainfield Building and Loan Association, held last week, the annual statement of the Association, for the year ending February 28, 1889, as audited was presented. In the first series, in the report, is shown the total receipts to be $94,201.88, and the disbursements, $23,419.25. The net assets are placed at $70,333.81, making each $60 paid share worth $74.86. There are 938 shares out-standing. In the second series the receipts amounted $61,941.98, and the disbursements, $61,904.97. The net assets in this series are $26,457.97, making each $19 paid share worth $20.86.

Another Commendable Work.

The W. C. T. U. have taken up another work, one in which it is sincerely hoped they will meet with success. It is to check, if possible, the smoking of cigarettes, by checking the sale of them to minors. To this end they desire that the act prohibiting such sale be printed, so as to give fair warning. The act reads as follows:

An act prohibiting the sale of cigarettes or tobacco in any of its forms to minors. Approved March 1[illegible], 188[illegible].

SEC. 1. That hereafter no person or persons in the State of New Jersey shall knowingly sell any cigarette or cigarettes, or tobacco in any of its forms to any minor under the age of sixteen years.

Penalty $20 each and every offense.

If these ladies do anything to stop cigarette smoking, they will deserve the thanks of everyone, for the law is now a dead letter.

STOPPED ON THE STREET.

Rose Kennedy, a prepossessing young woman, who is employed as a domestic on East Fifth street, was passing along Peace street on the way to her home on West Front street, about half-past eight evening of March 20, when she was seized around the waist by a colored man, who attempted to take improper liberties. The young lady screamed and wrenched herself from the brute's grasp, proceeding to her home, where she related her story.

The assault took place directly under the Peace street railroad bridge. The young woman says she remembers passing the man but she did not hear him approach her from the rear. She describes the fellow as a young man and she could readily recognize him.

RATS IN THE [illegible] TILL.

The Philadelphia Inquirer of Friday, contains the following romance dated from this city:

For some time past R. J. Shaw, a druggist, of this place, has missed money from his drawer and all his efforts to discover how it was abstracted have proved futile. He had a watch placed on his office clerk and it was soon demonstrated that the latter was entirely innocent of theft. Then he marked some bills, but the bills disappeared and never could be traced. He put a patent contrivance on the drawer, which no one but himself and his wife understood. Still the money vanished.

Then detectives were called in, and they were baffled as well. Matters reached such a state that the druggist began to suspect his own wife, much to her indignation, and it was said that if the suspicions were not immediately withdrawn she would separate from a husband who no longer wanted her. Life became a burden to him. His money disappeared as fast as ever. He discharged his clerk and slept in the store. Still the purloinings went on.

Then suspicion of evil spirits began to haunt him. He grew moody and began to believe firmly in the supernatural, and was about making up his mind to remove from the place when the mystery was solved today in a manner that has restored peace to the family and removed vagaries from his mind.

As he began to take down some shelves previous to removal, he found a neatly arranged rats nest, made of the missing bills, and also some of the old fractional currency of the five, ten, twenty-five and fifty-cent denominations, showing that the thefts had been perpetrated in the rats' family for many years. The notes aggregated many dollars' worth. A route was also discovered along which the rats passed between their nest and Mr. Shaw's money-drawer.

—Some person unknown poisoned a valuable dog belonging to Mr. Eugene Hoemer of North Plainfield, on Friday. The animal was valued at about $150.

Scotch Plains Wants a New School House.

The trustees of the Scotch Plains public school have issued a call for a special meeting to be held in Excelsior Hall, on Tuesday evening next, to take into consideration the advisability of the erection of a new school building. The present school house has proved inadequate to meet the demand for school accommodations, and the trustees have found it necessary to take immediate steps to increase the facilities. The sum of $20,000 will be asked, but in case that amount is granted, the trustees will not expend it all on a building alone, but the surplus will be reserved, perhaps, for beautifying the place or else to include additional branches in the line of study.

Condoling Judge Runyon's Death.

The members of the city bar were well represented at the meeting held in Mr. J. B. Coward's office on Park avenue, on Monday, to take action concerning the death of the late Judge Enos W. Runyon. Mr. J. B. Coward was elected Chairman of the meeting, and Mr. Walter L. Hetfield, Secretary.

A committee was appointed, consisting of the Chairman and Messrs John H. Jackson and Francis E. Marsh, to draft suitable resolutions condoling the death of the late Judge Runyon, and to have the same engrossed and presented to the bereaved family. The resolutions were ordered published in the city papers, and the lawyers decided to attend the funeral in a body.

The Crescents' New Grounds and Prospects.

Wednesday lease was signed for the new ball grounds of the Y. M. C. A., and the laying out of the diamond and the erection of the grand stand, will commence at once.

The new grounds are located at the corner of LaGrande avenue and Richmond street, and about the same distance from the station as the old ones. The site is a good one and there is plenty of room.

The old grounds would not be recognized now. A street is laid through them over the brook, and two houses on it are completed and ready to rent.

Maynard who caught once for the Crescents last year, will play behind the bat during the whole of the coming season, and already he is putting himself in training. It will be a great year for base ball in Plainfield, and the Y. M. C. A's propose to beat anything in the State that has no hired players.

How the Amusement Question Can be Solved for Plainfield.

The Rev. George Newell Karner, whose parents are Plainfielders, and who married Miss Emma Louise Cadmus of this city in the First Presbyterian church, last January, is pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian church of Manchester, N. H., a city of about forty-five thousand inhabitants.

The clergymen of the various evangelical churches of that place, are organized in an association which meets Monday morning twice each month. Early in the season the pastors determined to have a voice in the matter of public entertainments, and if possible raise the standard from the slough into which it had fallen. They secured the largest hall in the city, had a personal interview with an agent of a Boston Lecture Bureau, selected five of the best and most expensive concert companies and lecturers, advertised the scheme generously in the city press, put the tickets on sale at 75 cents for the entire course for reserved seats, and fifty cents general admission for the entire course.

The result was that every seat was taken long before the first entertainment and hundreds were turned away that it was impossible to crowd into the building. Hundreds of people who appreciate such rare entertainments, who could not afford them at higher prices, were among the eager buyers. The scheme was a complete financial success, paying all expenses and leaving a surplus of about $200 which was voted to the city mission and other worthy benevolences.

The Manchester pastors believe they have found a partial solution at least of the amusement question, and such a plan would just as surely solve the same vexed question for Plainfield.

ONLY A MATTER OF FORM.

As one of Senator Evarts' daughters is now married and a resident of this city, the following story told in Washington will be of interest to at least the large circle of friends she has drawn around her here by her culture, high breeding and charming character.

The families of Chief Justice Fuller and Senator Evarts in Washington are very thick. It has brought about a remarkable reform in certain social customs. The celebrated writer on etiquette, Mrs. Pussie Sherwood, declares with emphasis that, in making calls, cards should be left for every member of the family. In strict adherence to this rule, when the seven Evarts girls went over to call on the Fullers, they had to leave cards of themselves and papa and mamma Evarts for papa and mamma Fuller and the eight Fuller girls, that is:

7 plus 2x2 plus 8—90.

Each time they made a call they had to leave ninety cards on the hall table, and when the Fuller girls went over to see the Evarts family they had to leave ninety cards to do the thing in proper shape.

Now, those girls would die, each and every one of them, rather than do a single thing which was not chic and recherche and en fait and en regle and cafe au lait, especially the Fuller girls, and as they ran back and forth to see each other in their innocent girlish way not less than four times a day, the equation stood at the end of a month:

Justice Fuller arrived in Washington about the 1st of October, and by the end of the year his dear girls had used over 30,000 cards calling on the Evarts girls, and not less than 30,000 more calling on other precious creatures, and the house was full of cards. He couldn't pick up a book or put down a hand without grabbing a handful of cards. The house was carpeted with cards. And it was the same way over at Evarts's.

The Judge had been drawing his $10,500 a year in monthly installments, and paying his landlord $1,000 a month with commendable regularity and cheerfulness. But when Jan. 1 came around, and the stationer ran in a bill of $600 for printing 60,000 visiting cards, the Judge felt apprehensive.

The stationer had the thing down fine. To accommodate the girls he had been putting the cards up in neat little decks of ten—just family decks, you see. Then when a call was made, a pack was left for each member of the family called upon. And the Evarts girls had theirs fixed the same way. So convenient; didn't have to break a deck.

The Justice carefully brushed his hat that evening. He had thought of buying a new tile as a New Year's present, but he put away the notion and gave the old one a whirl against a genuine rag. Then put it on, washed his hands carefully, gave his moustache a twist, and went over to Senator Evarts's. He looked longingly at a passing street car, but resolutely braced himself against temptation and walked.

The Senator and the Justice had a long, confidential talk, and parted with a cordial grasp of the hand. The next day a furniture van, heavily laden, went from the Evarts house to the Fuller house, and a big two-horse dray, loaded to the [illegible], toiled from the Justice's to the Senator's. The girls were exchanging cards. Now, when they make calls on each other they just bang on the newell post and holler up stairs.

The Local Record in the Alleys.

The city is bringing forth, just now, many and zealous bowlers, and the scores rolled up at the Olympia are most creditable to those beginners.

Mr. Henry Voehl, of North Plainfield, however, holds the top record at 191; but Messrs. E. C. Kieb, B. T. Barnes, T. J. Carey, D. C. Adams, F. R. Stevens, C. Reed, J. Ulrich, W. A. Coddington and many others, are crowding him.

The Missing Rig Found.

Mr. Walter Q. Dunn, a farmer living about two miles South of New Market, when he went to his barn, early Tuesday morning, found a horse and buggy wedged in between a hay barrack and the barn. The vehicle was overturned and one of the curtains was torn off. The rig proved to be the one belonging to Mr. S. L. Mitchell of this city, which wandered away from Mr. Davis' residence at Dunellen, on the previous night. Mr. Mitchell went to New Market next morning, and recovered his property.

For Health and Comfort.

A fashion paper remarks that men are going to wear the sensible flannel shirt more than ever next Summer. Neckties are being made to match. For ease and comfort the flannel shirt cannot be beaten and it is a wonder that men have clung to the starched shirt front and collar so long. Notice the man as he goes along twisting and turning his head on account of the uncomfortable feeling produced by this invention of fashion—the starched collar. Why people will punish themselves for the sake of fashion is a question beyond comprehension. Poor, deluded mortals.

THE CITY WINS.

A question of importance to this city, was raised by Corporation Counsel Marsh before Justice Nash, last Summer, in the trial of a case against one Adams. It was decided adversely to the city by Justice Nash, and was then taken to the Supreme Court by writ of certiorari. The Supreme Court, per Judge Reed, have just filed an opinion reversing the judgment of Justice Nash, and deciding in favor of the city.

The case was noticed in THE PRESS when first tried, and briefly recapitulated, was as follows: Adams was placed under arrest, brought before Justice Nash and charged with having been guilty of an offense under the general law of the State concerning disorderly persons. Wm. A. Coddington brought the suit for the plaintiff.

Craig A. Marsh for the defendant, demanded a dismissal of the suit on the ground that none but the City Court had jurisdiction in such cases. The Justice, relying upon long established precedent, refused the motion and fined the defendant a nominal sum with the understanding that the case was to be removed to the Supreme Court by writ of certiorari to have the question of law raised by Mr. Marsh decided.

The county came to the aid of Justice Nash, because if the Justice was right the fines in such cases would go to the county, whereas, if Mr. Marsh was right the city would get the benefit of the fines.

Further than that, if the Justice had not jurisdiction in this case, all the arrests made, fines imposed and sentences of imprisonment pronounced by Justice Nash or any other Plainfield Justice, under the disorderly persons act, during the last eight or nine years, would be illegal, and possible suits for damages, the refunding of fines, etc., would come up for consideration.

The result was that the county made a strong fight, even going so far as to ask the Supreme Court to declare the act relied on by the city to be unconstitutional.

OPENING OF OLYMPIA.

The Olympia bowling alleys on Sycamore street were formally opened on Mch. 20, and in spite of the weather the building was so crowded that probably no one saw the entire match of the occasion between the Plainfield and Westfield teams, except the pin boys. It was necessary to stop the game at times, while Captain James Davis called in the feet that filled the alleys. The arrangements for the seating of the spectators were very inadequate, and the scorers were unable to see anything.

Mr. Y. M. C. A. Marsh, the tall Sycamore of Westfield, acted as umpire and referee with unlimited neatness, despatch and audibility. Not one of his rulings was questioned, and the Plainfield Club only asks that it will always meet as fair a judge in all its matches.

The game was begun promptly at eight o'clock by Messrs Kieb and Dorvall, who each made a spare for their respective sides. Before the first frame was finished, however, it was plain that the luck—that is a component part of all bowling matches—was with Westfield. Echman scratched a strike, and Seeley scratched a spare, to begin their scores with, and the first frame closed with Westfield in the lead by 21.

But the Plainfield Bowling Club's team hung on in spite of all discouragements. It was a green team that had never bowled in a match before, while the Westfielders had been at just such work together for months. Barnes, one of Plainfield's best bowlers did not arrive in time and a good substitute was not on hand. Teel was laboring under an injury and Kline had a blistered thumb. Pluck alone kept them from going all to pieces, and Captain Davis has reason to feel proud of the score his men made under the circumstances. When the match was half through, Westfield was 103 ahead, but this lead was pulled down to 54 at the close by the later efforts of Reed, Kline, Day and the Teels, and by the fine bowling of Mr. Kieb.

The first four of the Plainfield team easily led the first four of the Westfielders, but the tail-enders of the latter did the better work. It is probably a fact, though, that the Westfield team offered the Plainfielders such an opportunity to defeat them as will not occur again. The visitors were strangers to the alleys, and the construction of the floor of the runways at the Olympia is so entirely different from other alleys, that the best of bowlers would be handicapped.

At the close of the match, a bountiful supply of coffee and sandwiches was served in the wheel-room of the Bicycle Club house, and the visitors subsequently departed on the 11:28 P. M. train for Westfield pleased with their victory and reception. Cy Wilcox carried away with him from six to eight pounds of chalk on the soles and sides of his pumps. The handsome pair of bowling slippers offered by Doane & VanArsdale to the maker of the highest score, were won by Mr. Harry Van Emburgh, a graceful and effective bowler who has held the top average record of his club for some time.

The score in detail was as follows:

WESTFIELD.	Strikes.	Spares.	Breaks.	Totals.

Enlarging Already.

The owner of the Olympia bowling alleys will apply to the Council at its next meeting, for permission to extend his building. Ten feet will then be added to the length, giving more room for spectators and making a run-way for the bowlers of twelve feet in the alleys.

The Deserted Family.

Michael Kreuger, of New Market, recently deserted his wife and family, who are now in very stringent circumstances. The whereabouts of Kreuger are unknown. Kind friends are contributing towards the support of the deserted family until Mrs. Kreuger finds employment. Mrs. Kreuger declares that she will not again live with her husband, and she is probably just as well off to be separated from such a worthless fellow.

Dunellen's Schools.

The school meeting, Tuesday evening, was largely attended. It resulted in the election of L. E. Livermore for trustee. $2,300 was voted to maintain the school for the coming year. Trustees were also authorized to obtain plans of a school building and submit them, with a view of erecting another school building, town hall and offices for the Borough officials on the North side of the railroad. The present school facilities are found inadequate.

Work for the Common Good.

Wherever in this broad land you find a town whose residents work together for the common good, who help each other, who speak well of home industry, who patronize the home market, there you find not only a growing town, but a community destined to realize the utmost of its geographical and natural advantages. It is not going to get left in the race for wealth and commanding influence among the towns and villages that are its neighbors.

A Detail of Brooklyn, N. Y. Veterans Visit Plainfield.

At a regular encampment of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, of this city Tuesday, the members were somewhat surprised by the presence of a detail from U. F. Middleton Post, No. 500, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who had come here for the express purpose of extending an invitation to the Plainfield boys to visit Brooklyn on Memorial Day and take part with them in the ceremonies. An urgent request was made to accept the invitation, but it was very reluctantly declined on the ground that in all probability their own State would need their presence on that day.

The members of these Posts are very warm friends and have entertained one another on several occasions. The following gentlemen constituted the detail from Brooklyn: Senior Vice Commander, Geo. G. Sickles; Quartermaster, E. C. Bloodgood; Officer of the day, James G. Peters; Chaplain, James L. Adams; A. D. Spaulding and J. S. Ogden.

Convention Echoes.

Mr. George Hall, State Secretary of the New York Y. M. C. A., related the following story at the State Convention at Bridgeton. The young men of the Albany, N. Y., Y. M. C. A., were anxious for a building. They knew Mr. Jermain of that city, was interested in their work so they brought him around to one of their young men's meetings. There he saw a large crowd of men, entirely too large for the size of the room, and he remarked that it was not a good thing to have young men in such confined quarters. They told him it was the best they had.

He came to one or two more such meetings and saw that there was great need of better accommodations, so he offered them there a building which they could convert into a Y. M. C. A. building. But they refused, saying the buildings were not what they wanted. Mr. Jermain went away and after thinking it over for a year offered to put a $40,000 building on a $30,000 lot if the men of Albany would buy the latter. They did it, and Mr. Jermain erected a $60,000 building, and said a short time ago, "Its the best investment I ever made."

Freed from All Attachments.

In the attachment case of A. D. Cook & Bro. vs. Mrs. Searing, in Somerset Circuit—which superseded the attachment, issued by Justice Crossley, at the suit of R. R. Fairchild—Judge Magie on Saturday, on motion of Craig A. Marsh, Attorney for Mrs. Searing, signed an order quashing the writ with costs.

The Judge holds that Mrs. Searing has been a resident of this State for several years last past, and not liable to attachment. Justice Crossley decided the other way, but the judgment of the higher court leaves the goods free from both attachments.

In justice, however, to Justice Crossley it should be stated that his decision in the Fairchild case was decided upon entirely different evidence, and that no notice of the motion to quash the Cook attachment was given to either Mr. Fairchild or his Counsel.

It is a question whether or not the decision quashing the Cook attachment does not revive the Fairchild attachment. There is a decision of the Supreme Court which holds that where the higher court attachment was issued the same day that the Justice's attachment was, the quashing of that attachment did not revive the Justice's. But Mr. Fairchild's case is distinguished from that in this important respect, that the Justice's attachment in his case was issued Feb. 12, when Mrs. Searing was out of the State, and the higher court attachment of Messrs Cook afterwards on March 2, when it is said she was actually in the State.

—The days are now longer than the nights.

—The Northward flight of wild geese is reported.

—The Werts Local Option Repeal bill was March 20 signed by Governor Green at Trenton, and is now a law.

—People who shout the loudest about patronizing home industries are too often they who do the least patronizing.

—Messrs Jackson & Codington have been appointed Township Counsel of Fanwood township for the ensuing year.

—One blacksmith estimates a loss of [illegible] because there were no shoes to sharpen during the past season.

—The wind and warm sunshine of the past week have done much to improve the condition of the roads throughout the county.

—Improvements made by the carpenters, painters, paper-hangers, all of whom [illegible] to have plenty of work, are now in season.

—The highest temperature in the State, recorded by the weather service at New Brunswick, during the past month, was 57 in this city during the 19th.

—Owing to the increase of business the law firm of Messrs Jackson and Codington have purchased a Remington typewriter, and engaged a stenographer.

—The admission of the new States will make it necessary for the government to replace all the eight thousand national flags with new ones having the additional stars.

—The dead dog at Grove street has been removed. It is not Chief Carey's duty to attend to post mortem disposition of carcasses within the Borough limits.

—The hotels in North Plainfield continue to do a rushing trade. Some of the hotels, it is said, cannot secure help enough to accommodate their customers in this city.

—One of the most disgraceful thoroughfares in the city, so far as its sidewalks are concerned, is East Third street. On the South side of that street the sidewalk is rough and almost impassable.

—Nearly every week we have inquiries from people who contemplate coming here to live permanently. Plainfield is growing, and all well disposed new comers should be given a hearty welcome.

—Moving day, April 1, comes on Monday, but it seems to be the desire with many to move on Saturday previous to the first. For this [illegible] movers will have to depend upon one another.

—A lazy genius in Maryland has invented an automatic fishing pole, which by the aid of steel spiral springs yanks out the unwary denizens of the streams while the fisherman smokes and reads in peace.

—It is said that the Republicans in North Plainfield now meet regularly in a butcher shop on Somerset street and discuss politics. It is also said that most of the political wire-pulling in the borough is done there.

—The vestibule train arriving in this city at 2:36 P. M., daily, from New York, is a great convenience to the Central Railroad company's patrons. No additional cost is charged by the company for riding on this train.

—A bill for the organization of a New Jersey Signal Service, has been introduced into the Senate with the approval of the Governor. The co-operation and votes of the members of both houses, are solicited to secure its passage.

—John Fisher, the man who cut the halyards on Senator Miller's flag staff at Westfield recently, in order to get the job of replacing the same, pleaded not guilty to the charge, and his trial is set down for Wednesday of next week.

—The gaudy awning that floats from Barkalew and Dunn's grocery, is one of the most gorgeous sights on North avenue. It is a conundrum how this firm of young men can buy such gaudy furniture when the prices of their goods are so low.

—Dr. Mary Walker has applied for a patent on an improved suspender. She is also at work on a device to prevent trousers from bagging at the knees. Should Mary succeed she will receive the heartfelt thanks of our male population.

—On Saturday night a number of posts [illegible] were left unguarded in front of the residence at the South corner of Third and Washington streets, making it extremely dangerous for pedestrians. In case of accident the owner could be held for damages.

—While [illegible] three-cent pieces are extremely scarce, it is a curious fact that they are freely found among the plate collections of some churches, each Sunday. It is supposed that in the dim religious light of the churches the donors mistake them for dimes.

—New York city is literally full of young "pigs." Men, women, and children carry these along the streets in boxes, and when they reach home, a whole family will engage in a contest as to who can drive these into a "pen" in the shortest space of time.

—A circular has been issued by Secretary Shaw, of the New Jersey State Football League, asking for subscriptions for purchasing a championship cup to be contested for by the several clubs in the League. The receipts of all games will be devoted to charitable purposes.

—The police were sent on a wild goose chase, late on Saturday evening. One of the special officers, patrolling in the neighborhood of the Crescent Avenue church, made his hourly report from the call box located there, when a general call for the police was accidentally made.

—Hugging bees are a new form of entertainment. A man pays fifteen cents for the privilege of hugging the first woman he can catch after being blindfolded. It is not easy to imagine his disgust when he has opened his arms only to grasp his mother-in-law or maiden aunt.

—Tuesday, March 19, Sheriff Toolson drew the list of petit jurors for the April term of the Somerset County courts. The drawing was made in the presence of the Court of Common Pleas. The list includes 54 names. Following are the members from North Plainfield — John Carney, Lewis E. Barkalew, Peter G. Kline, James Hardy, Lewis Bird.

—Some of the residents of North Plainfield are inclined to believe that the Borough Marshals should be a little more diligent in their search for evil-doers. All of the owners of licensed places over the borough keep orderly houses as a rule, but there are some persons who make the night hideous by yelling and otherwise acting in a disorderly manner on the street. A night in the borough "cooler" would probably teach such persons a lesson.

—The base ball season will soon open.

—It seems reasonable to suppose that at the next meeting of the Council, on Monday night, liquor licenses will be granted to some of the applicants, if not all.

—Whether there is any celebration here of the centennial of Washington inauguration or not on the 30th of April it will be a legal holiday. The Legislature made it so.

—Now, gentlemen of the Council, arrange to have the streets sprinkled by carts drawn by the Fire Department horses. It will be a service and a saving to the city.

—A dainty gift for Easter is a lace pin of dead gold upon which rests a tiny egg in white enamel. A chicken formed of diamonds, has just emerged from the shell and is gazing in mute surprise at the wreck.

—The work on Mr. Edward Lowe's new building at the corner of North avenue and Peace street, is progressing favorably. The foundation walls are up, and the work of construction will be pushed forward to completion.

—The "Pigs in Clover" craze has struck this place as well as many others, and toy dealers are besieged for the novel little toy, which, by the way, seems to have met with greater popularity than the maker ever dreamed of.

—As soon as the weather moderates a little some people change their flannels. Don't change them yet. Keep on your Winter flannels until June. The cases of pneumonia resulting from this thoughtlessness are frightful.

—Street Commissioner Angleman has done a commendable job in repairing the gutter on the South side of East Fifth street, at the intersection of Sycamore street. Several loads of crushed stone were required to complete the work.

—Mr. J. F. McIntyre is putting an attractive front in his new building on North avenue, opposite the railroad station. The front is to consist of pressed brick and terra cotta, and when completed the building will be one of the most attractive in the city.

—At three o'clock Tuesday, just as the engines had returned from the first alarm, a second general alarm was sent out. This time the fire proved to be in a woodshed on the premises known as the Woodland estate on Somerset street, near Blatz's Hotel. The shed was entirely consumed.

Mr. Rudolphus MacDonald has recently purchased the Runyon Homestead property on Peace street, adjoining his own residence. He thus secures control of a number of connecting building sites that will increase in value every year.

The funeral of Dr. Charles H. Penfield will take place in the First Baptist church, Saturday afternoon, at 2:30 o'clock. Interment will be made at Hillside cemetery with masonic ceremonies by Anchor Lodge of which the dead man was a member.

Mr. C. Schepflin of Dunellen, and a member of the firm of C. Schepflin & Co., of this city, will hereafter devote his time to personally superintending the business here. Heretofore Mr. Schepflin traveled extensively in the South, where the firm has a large trade.

Among the number of handsome houses that Messrs Sandford & Manning are building in various parts of the city's outskirts, is one most charmingly located on Richmond street, North of Front. This has been sold to Mr. B. T. Barnes who will take possession as soon as completed.

Mr. Clarence Teal, the popular shipping clerk at the Pond Tool Works, was painfully injured while attending to his duties on Wednesday. Mr. Teal was climbing over some cars which stood on a trestle, when he slipped and fell down between the bumpers, injuring one of his lower limbs.

Mrs. Louise Holmes, a widow lady, and a daughter of the late John DuFlon of Brooklyn, died at her home in Short Hills on Saturday, aged 81 years. The deceased passed away on her birthday. The funeral took place from the residence of her brother, No. 381 Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, Tuesday afternoon. Interment was made in Greenwood.

Rev. F. M. Kipp, pastor of the Reformed church of Harlingen, Somerset county, was the guest during Sunday of our fellow townsman, Isaac L. Miller. In the evening he attended divine service at the Trinity Reformed church, and heard his classmate, Rev. Mr. Schenck, preach an able sermon from the text as found in the tenth verse of the twenty-eighth chapter of Genesis.

Mr. Charles F. Everitt, formerly of this city, grandson of the late John L. Everitt, was married Wednesday of last week to Miss Sarah Pinkerton, daughter of the late John L. Pinkerton. The ceremony took place at the bride's home, West 84th street, New York city, the Rev. Wm. M. Taylor, D. D., officiating. The immediate relatives and a few intimate friends only, were present.

It is with with pleasure that we can today announce more favorable symptoms in the condition of Mrs. J. F. Hubbard of West Seventh street, who is lying dangerously ill with pneumonia. Wednesday the patient's temperament registered 100, which is the lowest point reached in several days before. It is to be hoped that the critical point has been passed, and that recovery will now be rapid.

An Evening Party.

About thirty couples attended a party given at the residence of Mr. and Mrs Theodore Vroom, on Grove street, last Thursday. Prof. O'Reilly furnished the music for dancing, which continued until an early hour next morning, when the guests departed for their homes well pleased with the evening's enjoyment. The committee of arrangements consisted of Messrs H. G. Adams, H. Ackerman, H. Adams and Chas. Van Middlesworth.

Judge Runyon's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Judge Enos W. Runyon took place from the deceased's late home on Park avenue, Tuesday afternoon, and was very largely attended. The members of the city and county bar associations attended in a body. Rev. Mr. Dilts made the opening prayer, and Rev. Dr. Lowry spoke in eulogy of the deceased. He also made the closing prayer. The remains were interred in Evergreen cemetery.

Fell From a Third Story Window.

Little Maud Sharkey, a daughter of Mr. John Sharkey of North Plainfield, went into the attic of her father's residence on Somerset street, Monday afternoon, ostensibly to play. Raising one of the attic windows, she attempted to push open the shutters, when she was precipitated headforemost to the ground below, a distance of about thirty feet. Fortunately the little one escaped with only a few slight bruises and a general shaking up. An hour or so after the accident occurred the child was able to be about the house as usual, but complained of feeling sick at her stomach.

Death of Dr. Chas. H. Penfield.

It is with sincere regret that we today record the death of Dr. Charles H. Penfield, which occurred at his home, corner of Seventh street and Park avenue about half-past two o'clock P. M. Tuesday, after a brief illness from pneumonia. The deceased was stout and robust in physique but the disease, which at first was considered nothing more than a severe cold, quickly developed in pneumonia and resulted in his death as above stated.

Dr. Penfield, although recently coming to this city, has won a host of friends and had built up an extensive practice. The deceased leaves a widow, the daughter of Mr. George Smock of Dunellen.

Building Loan Association.

At the annual election for Directors of the Plainfield Building and Loan Association, held in Cotter's Hall, Monday night, Messrs T. Chamberlain and V. L. Frasse acting as tellers, 1,275 shares were voted, and the following named gentlemen duly chosen for the ensuing year:

Run Over by a Wagon.

About noon of last Friday, Mr. James H. Searing, of West Third street, was seated on a lumber wagon, driving along West Fourth street, in the neighborhood of Central avenue, when he was suddenly taken with a fainting spell.

Mr. Searing fell from the wagon, and the wheels passed over his head and body. The injured man was taken to his home, and Dr. J. T. Fritts was summoned. The doctor found the patient suffering from the shock, and also badly cut on the head.

No bones were fractured, but the injuries are of such a serious nature they will confine the unfortunate man to the house for some time to come.

Election of Officers.

A regular meeting for the election of officers to serve the Young People's League of the First Baptist church, took place Monday night and resulted as follows:

President—Stephen E. Joseph.
Sec'y and Treas.—Miss Grace Yerkes.

The following were elected Vice Presidents, to act as chairmen of the several standing committees: Walter G. Dobbins, Harold Serrell, Geo. F. Brown, Edward Wilson, and Dr. Yerkes who will act as chairman of the visiting committee. Mr. Howard J. Runyon presided. At the last meeting the society adopted a new constitution and name, under which they are now governed.

Services at Holy Cross Church.

The Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, was well filled Sunday at both the morning and afternoon services. There were a large number of strangers at the latter service. Many were no doubt attracted by the surpliced choir, which probably was heard at its best yesterday. It rendered in excellent voice some beautiful selections.

There will be a few alterations made in the church, this week, to admit of other voices into the choir. On Friday next the Rev. Otis A. Glazebrook, rector of St. John's church, Elizabeth, will preach at Holy Cross church, and the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, will conduct the services, commencing at 7:30 o'clock.

New Houses Rented.

Mr. J. F. Parker, of East Front street, a former resident of Washington Park, North Plainfield, has rented the pretty dwelling and spacious grounds on Grove street, formerly occupied by Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Potter. Mr. Parker is a member of the large grain commission firm of Franklin Edson & Co., Produce Exchange building, New York.

The handsome dwelling and grounds on the corner of Washington and Mercer avenues, in Washington Park, owned by Mr. J. C. Zimmerman, have been rented to Mr. M. A. Shaw, a lumber dealer of New York, now a resident of Crescent avenue.

Mr. Isaac Brokaw, real estate agent, conducted the negotiations of both properties.

What Caused the Alarm.

A young son of Mr. H. A. Ostermoor of Woodland avenue, is said to be responsible for the general alarm of fire sent out Tuesday afternoon, that gave the firemen a wild goose chase in the neighborhood of the Short Hills. The little fellow, it is said, started a bonfire in the absence of his parents, and the flames igniting with a quantity of brush and dry grass threatened to communicate with the barn. The boy ran into the house, and over the telephone called up the Fire Department.

Chief Doane went to investigate the cause of the alarm, but it took him some time to even locate Woodland avenue, as there were no sign boards announcing the name of the avenue. The result of the investigation is above stated.

SHE STAYS WITH THE HOUSE.

The story goes that an industrious shoemaker, by name Alvin E. Chickering, had rented premises on Manning avenue, North Plainfield, belonging to a colored man, by name Henry Thomas.

There, for some time past, Alvin and Mrs. Chickering dwelt together in such harmony as circumstances permitted—he carrying on his trade of cobbling, part of the time working for Mr. J. O. Campbell of West Front street, while she scrubbed and toiled over the household duties. Ill-luck and hard times came together, however, and the landlord closed his tenant out.

Chickering was compelled to pack up and leave, but Thomas was not so hard on the wife. Mrs. Chickering was allowed to remain, and as the house was big enough for two, Thomas also remained. It is said that the white woman occupies her own apartments upstairs, and the colored man remains below. Be that as it may, there is no doubt that Chickering is entirely left out of the domestic arrangements in every particular.

He is reported to have said, "I do not know whether my wife has led Thomas astray, or he has led her."

A Creditable Programme Rendered by Scholars and Friends.

At High School Hall, Tuesday night, a well chosen programme of solo and chorus singing attracted and entertained a large audience.

A large chorus selected from the public school pupils, occupied the platform and sang a number of selections in a most praiseworthy way. They showed the results of careful training by Mr. T. E. Hasell, the musical director of the schools. The shading was admirable, and the annunciation and quality of tone very good. Miss Maud Lowrie and Miss Alice Coard were the accompanists.

Miss Alice Holmes singing was, of course, particularly pleasing. Her first solo, Abt's "Thou Wondrous Youth," was enthusiastically encored and she responded with another charming selection. She was accompanied by Miss Gussie Holmes, and a violin obligato by Alfred Holmes, added an attractive harmony. Later in the programme, Miss Holmes, Miss Anna Petrie and Mr. Lincoln Goodrich, sang as a trio a "Song of Summer," a composition by Mr. T. E. Hasell that was most musical and highly creditable to all concerned. Miss Holmes' last solo, "My Lady's Bower," was also encored.

Master Fred Freeman, the boy soloist of Grace church, sang "The Little Shepherdess" with such good effect as to call forth a flattering encore. His mother, Mrs W. A. Freeman, played the accompaniments.

The Messrs Smith rendered in remarkably fine tune, a number of quartettes arranged for male voices. The first, Dudley Buck's "Concert Waltz," was followed as an encore piece, with "The Emperor of Austria." "Hark, the Trumpet!" also by Dudley Buck, called forth a double recall, and "Peter Gray" was given with a humor and harmony that received slight evidences of favor from even the ultra-critical.

The entire affair was most creditable to the Principal, Miss Bulkley, and to Mr. Hasell, and thoroughly deserves the financial profit that has accrued for the purpose of buying a new singing book for the schools.

In the Justices' Court.

Justice Nodyne has rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff, in the following contract cases tried before him recently, Mr. W. A. Coddington appearing for the plaintiff in both instances. Dorothea S. Nelson vs. Peter Holm, amount claimed, $2[illegible], judgment awarded, $160; Chas. H. Clark vs. Susie Rively for full amount of claim, $25.

An action in tort brought by Joseph Schlingerman vs. A. J. Linbarger will be tried before Justice Crosby in North Plainfield, on Saturday afternoon next. The defendant, it is alleged, took a horse rake belonging to the plaintiff and converted the same to his own use. The damage claimed is $100.

The Service of Song.

Crescent Avenue church was crowded, Sunday night, and many were standing in the gallery. The Rev. Wm. R. Richards preached a sermon on "Joy in Heaven," taking as his text, Luke XV, 10.

The music was a special and attractive feature of the services. The choir of 24 voices, was lead by Mr. I. C. Pierson, with Miss Utter as organist. The selections were:

Organ—Offertoire in B flat	Collin
The Shadows of the Evening Hour—Choir	Barri-Shelley
Seeking for Me (No. 18, Gospel Hymns No. 5)—Choir	Hasty
My Faith Looks up to Thee (Hymn, 712)—Duet	Goldbeck
Mrs. J. E. Myers and Miss Alice Holmes.
Sweetly Through the Night—Choir	Shelley
The Lord my Pasture (Hymn 51)— Duet	Schnecker

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Urges Education, Directly and Incidentally—The Scotch Plains Public Library Opened at Last—Remarks of Judge Nicholl.

The annual meeting of the Scotch Plains District No. 14, was held on the 19th inst. The first thing on hand was to elect a Trustee to succeed Dr. Westcott. Sure enough, there was a faction of opposition on hand—chiefly composed of the apostles of wealth and culture. It was evidently the idea to defeat the incumbent for reelection, but a Westcott ticket was placed in the hands of every voter, and as there were signs of an avalanche approaching, word was hurriedly passed around among the opposition to stand from under. They accordingly stood, and the Westcott landslide continued on its way, the popular Doctor receiving every vote cast. Some one did indeed nominate Dr. Oliver, but the Doctor lost no time in explaining that he didn't care a straw for the doubtful honor of a nomination, and that he really must decline. The whole thing was a little discouraging to the votaries of wealth and culture, but the walk did them good. It was quite a long walk, too.

But the most important feature of the evening had yet to come. The Trustees report was largely devoted to the question of a new school house. Now in regard to the school building, the people of the District have for several years been in a state of semi-somnolence. Everyone knew perfectly well that we ought to have a new school house, and yet nothing was done; partly, I suppose, because no one knew exactly where to begin, and partly because there were so many other necessary expenses in the way of roads and public improvements of that sort; a deplorable state of affairs, but for which no one was altogether to blame.

But that report! It fell like a bombshell. It seems that the rooms have the most wretched ventilation, that the furnace is played out, that the children are thereby constantly exposed to disease, and that unless something is done very quickly, there is absolute danger of the building falling down about the children's heads. Naturally, this produced something of a sensation, and when it was proposed to consider the question of an appropriation the idea was unanimously adopted. A meeting will accordingly be held on the second of April, and the question of building a new school house, the amount necessary therefor, and the location of the building, will be discussed and voted upon.

I am informed by a gentleman familiar with school matters, that to build a good, substantial school house of brick, including furniture, tables, new desks, furnace, etc., will cost about eighteen thousand dollars. This amount is to be paid in twenty years, and so the burden of taxation will not be as great as might be supposed. Of course the amount to be raised will be diminished each year; the first year, for example, requiring the payment of one thousand dollars of principal and the interest upon eighteen thousand dollars, which will amount to nearly a thousand dollars more. But each succeeding year more and more of the principal will have been paid off and so there will be a constantly decreasing amount of interest to pay. It is estimated that the sum mentioned would necessitate an assessment of thirty-seven cents per hundred for the first year and a smaller amount the next.

As for the location, it seems to be the general opinion that it will be best to place the new building in the neighborhood of the Episcopal church. This is nearer the centre of the District than the present site and a great deal nearer the centre of population.

On Wednesday, the twentieth of the month, after considerable delay, the Public Library was opened. The exercises of the evening were very well conducted, and although it was a bad night, Excelsior Hall was full. Mrs. D. A. Sayre and Mr. T. J. Nicholl sang a duet. Mr. Nicholl also joined with Mr. T. W Franklin in another song. Mrs. Coyte sang a very amusing song, but refused to respond to the people's enthusiastic encore. The address was made by Hon. George H. Nicholl.

Judge Nicholl said that he very much regretted that the President of the Library, Mr. Shepard, was unable to be present, and felt that he would be gratified at the sight of such a very large and very respectable audience. He told the history of the Library from the beginning, stating that the two persons to whom the credit of the undertaking was due were Miss Mead and Mr. Hall. The Library, he said, had the same end in view as the public school—education; but they worked in different channels. The Library would furnish the people with those works which their private shelves might be unable to supply. The speaker said that the names of Scott, Cooper, Lever, Hawthorne, and Thackery, recalled pleasant images of by-gone days, as they pass along in innumerable line. He rejoiced that the young people of the village were to be given the privilege of intercourse with the World's great writers. The speaker closed with an impressive quotation from Longfellow, amid tremendous applause. Towards the close of the exercises, Mr. Hall came forward with the purpose, he said, of "filling a gap."

He rambled on in an aimless kind of way, keeping the people laughing and filling the gap very successfully. He asked for assistance for the Library; as the Library is absolutely free it is dependent upon voluntary contributions for support. The entertainment closed with a little sketch written by Mrs. David F. Hall, one of the Trustees. Mrs. Hall's work on "Social Customs" is among the library's volumes.

At the close of the exercises the Library rooms were opened, and a party of young men lost no time in "breaking in" the smoking-room. A large crowd filled the rooms on Saturday afternoon and evening. A description of the Library must be reserved for another time.

SUBURBAN SAUNTERER.

ONE PURE ARTICLE OF FOOD.

The Royal Baking Powder Officially Commended—Good Effects from the Action of the State Board of Health.

The action of the State Board of Health in publishing the names of the alum baking powders sold in this State will be commended by all who are in favor of pure and honest food. Scarce an article sold enters more generally into the daily food of every one than baking powders. It is well understood that the alum and the alum and phosphate baking powders are detrimental to health, and consumers only require to be informed as to the names of these unwholesome brands in order to avoid them.

This information the manufacturers of the alum baking powders have tried, however, to suppress, one of them going so far as to seek for an injunction prohibiting the State authorities from proceeding with their recent investigation and exposure.

It is particularly gratifying to consumers to know that the baking powder which they have so long been accustomed to using, the Royal, has invariably gone through these analyses not only without a reflection against it of impurity or unwholesomeness, but each time more emphatically endorsed as the superior of all the baking powders of the market.

The health authorities of a number of other States have also recently made exhaustive examinations of this character, and with the uniform result of finding the Royal superior to all others. The United States Government Chemist, after an examination for the Indian Department, made the emphatic statement that "The Royal Baking Powder is the purest in quality and highest in strength of any baking powder of which I have knowledge." The authorities of Canada have been making an elaborate study of the baking powders sold there. The official analyst of Ontario says as the result of his investigation that he "finds the Royal Baking Powder far superior to the others," and goes so far as to recommend its use in preference to any other. Likewise a series of over five hundred tests for strength made by public analysts and other chemists of prominence throughout the country show it to produce an average of twenty-five per cent. more leavening gas than any of its competitors.

A company that maintains this high standard for its product against the temptations of the enormously greater profit that would accrue from the use of the cheaper materials employed by others (for the alum baking powders are produced at a cost of three cents per pound) is entitled to this public commendation and endorsement.

A Small Fire.

An incipient fire that kindled in the roof of the building in the rear of No. 16½ East Front street, Tuesday, was extinguished before much damage was done, and without the assistance of the fire department. No general alarm was sent out. Mr. H. C. Drake, proprietor of the American steam laundry, assisted in putting out the fire, and received some bad flesh wounds on his hands from flying tin.

Hotels Licensed at Scotch Plains.

The Fanwood Township Committee held a meeting in Excelsior Hall, Scotch Plains, on Saturday evening, and granted the five applications for hotel licenses, notwithstanding the fact that a remonstrance with 150 signatures was sent in praying that no licenses be granted. Of the five applications presented four were from hotel keepers in Scotch Plains and the other was for a license at Dog Tavern.

Westfield Loses Both Games.

The second of the series of two-out-of-three games between the bowlers of Westfield and Elizabeth, took place at the alleys of the latter, Saturday evening. The Elizabethans were victorious again, winning by exactly the same number of pins as they did the first game. The following was the score:

A Sermon on the Stage.

Next week "Little Lord Fauntleroy" enters upon the fifth month of its successful run at the handsome Broadway theatre, New York. It is surprising to note the number of clergymen who attend the performance of this play, and who leave feeling better for having seen it. We have been informed that a certain Episcopalian clergyman in Harlem, after witnessing a performance of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," on the following Sunday in the course of his address to his congregation, stated that if they were desirous of passing a pleasant evening, and receiving an illustrated lecture of the cause and effect of a pure and noble character on its surroundings, recommended them to see "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

When a disinterested person, and that person a clergyman, speaks so strongly of the wholesome effect of this play, it certainly must have given him the satisfaction that a pure and wholesome play ought to give to everybody, or it would not have received such favorable recognition.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

My boy (three years old) was recently taken with cold in the head. It seemed finally to settle in his nose, which was stopped up for days and nights so that it was difficult for him to breathe and sleep. I called a physician, who prescribed, but did him no good. Finally I went to the drug store and got a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. It seemed to work like magic. The boy's nose was clear in two days, and he has been all right ever since.—R. J. IRELAND'S NATIONAL GAME.

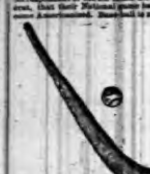
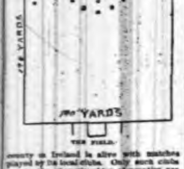
An Expert Describes the Features of Hurling—It Is Very Exciting, and Broken Shins and Cracked Heads Are Not Uncommon—Thirty-five Thousand Players in Ireland—Popularizing It in America.

When the number of Irishmen who have made their homes in this country is considered it is a bit surprising, says a New York correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, that their National game has not become Americanized. Base-ball is not better known and appreciated here than is hurling in Ireland, and yet until this winter there has been no systematic effort to introduce the game to this continent. Occasional matches have been played in various large cities, so that the name of the game is recognized, but it has not as yet taken a conspicuous place among American sports. It bids fair now, however, to enjoy a considerable boom, and by another season there may be a hurling league with championship contests and big audiences at the grounds to see the fun.



THE GAME'S IMPLEMENTS.

The importance of this game on the other side of the Atlantic may be inferred from the fact that in the Gaelic Athletic Association of Ireland there are one thousand seven hundred hurling clubs. Each club must have a membership of at least twenty-one active players, for that is the regulation number of men to a side in championship matches. This tremendous league manages to discover the champion club every year, and at this time the season of play is in full blast. As it would take several years of constant playing to play every team in the one thousand seven hundred against every other, the association has adopted a system of subordinate matches, in order to eliminate from "All-Ireland" championship contests such clubs, and that means the great majority, as would have no hope of winning. From the 1st of February to April 30 every county in Ireland is alive with matches played by the local clubs. Only such clubs as win the championships of counties are entitled to enter for the "All-Ireland" tournament, which occurs between April 30 and May 25.



THE FIELD.

Interest in the game was aroused in this country by the recent visit of Irish athletes. They played exhibition games of hurling in most of the large cities before great audiences. Three of the visiting athletes are still in this country, and one of them, J. J. Cullen, has become a member of the Gaelic Society in New York. Not the least reason for his stay here is the desire of the society to introduce hurling as a prominent and regular feature of American sports, and Mr. Cullen is acting as a general instructor. He is known in Ireland as the champion individual hurler. Under his guidance at least one game is played every pleasant Sunday in Weehawken, and by reason of the open winter the sport has taken a good start.

As hurling is so little understood in America a diagram of the field is printed herewith, as well as a picture of the tools of the game and some sketches of the play. It will be seen that the field is very similar to that used for football. The dimensions are marked in the diagram, and the general positions of the men in a full team are indicated. A similar arrangement of men in the lower half of the diagram would represent the position of the opposing team.

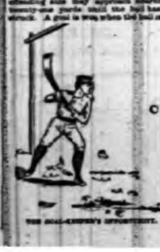
None of these positions are strictly maintained during the play, for, as in foot-ball, the men must be where the ball is, and the immediate scene of action is constantly changing. It is possible to play a good game of hurling with fourteen men on a side, but in that case the grounds should be smaller. The Irish rules allow of a field as small as one hundred and forty yards by eighty-four yards, and there is no objection to a field larger than that indicated in the diagram. Four goal posts are set up at each end of the field. They are twenty-one feet apart, and across the two in the middle is a bar ten feet six inches from the ground. The general object of the game is to send the hurley ball across the goal line between the middle posts and below the cross-bar. The difference between this play and foot-ball will be noticed, for in football it is the object to send the ball over the cross-bar of the goal posts.

The chief implement of the game is of wood, shaped somewhat like a hockey, though much broader and heavier. It is called a hurley. The Irish rules do not define the pattern to be used. The hurley ball is made of cork and woolen thread, and is covered with leather. It should be four and one-half or five inches in diameter and weigh from seven to ten ounces. How the game is played may best be put in the words of Mr. Cullen, who told the writer all about it recently.

"To begin with," he said, "each side has an umpire, and there is a referee whose judgment is final on all disputed points. When the opposing captains have tossed for choice of position the hurlers stand in two lines in the middle of the field, with hurleys across and then separate. That is a formal recognition that the players are friendly and are ready to begin. The referee, who stands a little distance from the end of the two lines, then throws the ball between them, either rolling it along the ground or tossing it higher than the players' heads. After that each side strives to get the ball across the goal line opposite it. To gain this end the player may strike the ball with his hand, or kick it or hit it with the hurley. It is [illegible], however, to carry the ball except when it is balanced upon the hurley. A player may catch the ball on the fly in his hands, and if he succeeds he has the privilege of a 'puck,' that is, he may toss up the ball and hit it in any direction he pleases, but he can not throw it.

"When the ball is on the ground it must not be picked up by the hand. In case these rules, or any others, are violated, the referee may punish the offending side by allowing the other a free 'puck' of the ball, in which case no player of the offending side may approach nearer than twenty-one yards until the ball has been struck. A goal is won when the ball is sent between the middle posts and under the cross-bar; if the ball goes over the bar, or under the goal-line between the outside posts and the goal, a point is scored. There is no score when the ball crosses the goal-line outside the limits marked by the four posts. When a point or goal has been scored the goal-keeper has a free 'puck' from his post, in which case the men opposed to him must stand off at a distance of twenty-one yards."



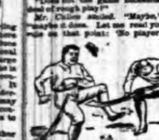
THE GOAL-KEEPER'S OPPORTUNITY.

"What if the ball goes over the boundaries at the side of the field?"

"If it does not rebound into the field the referee must throw it back at the point where it crossed the line, in which case it must touch the ground before it reaches the players, who must stand ten yards away from the line when the ball is thrown. After playing for half an hour the referee calls time and the sides reverse their positions. The game ends with another half hour's play. The count, of course, is by goals and points. If no goals have been made by either side the one that made the most points is the victor. The same rule applies when each side has made the same number of goals, but one goal will outweigh any number of points, so that if one side got ten or a dozen points but no goal, and the other got one goal but no points, the latter would be winner."

"Does not the game necessitate a good deal of rough play?"

Mr. Cullen smiled. "Maybe," he said; "maybe it does. Let me read you the Irish rule on that point: 'No player to catch, trip, push from behind, or butt with the head. No player to bring his hurley intentionally in contact with the person of another player.' Now, the referee has the greatest discretion possible in interpreting this rule. He may disqualify a player for a breach of it, and in that case his side is not permitted to substitute another player. The referee may inflict various penalties for undue vigor in play, such as suspending a hurler for a short time, allowing the opposite side a free 'puck,' and so on. Nevertheless, it is not uncommon to get out of a game with aching shins and any number of bruises. The better the player, of course, the less likely he is to injure his opponents. But, in the excitement of play, it is not to be wondered at that some blows are accidentally given."



A SCRIMMAGE.

"Are there any professional hurlers in Ireland—that is, men who make a business of playing the game?"

"Not one. No one plays for a salary or any other remuneration than emblems of skill and success. Nevertheless, I think that the possibilities of the game are as highly developed as if there were a league of professional players. Every body in Ireland plays the game, from school children to old men. The seventeen hundred clubs in the Gaelic Association represent not only upward of thirty-five thousand active hurlers, but many thousands more who are not deemed expert enough to have a position on a county team. There is much interest in our Weehawken games, and I look forward to seeing the sport secure a strong foothold in this country."

A Clairvoyant.

There was a social gathering not long since at the residence of Rev. Whangdoodle Baxter, of the colored hallelujah shouting-house on Austin avenue. Whangdoodle told his wife to send off and get six pies.

"But dar am twelve guests invited to the social gatherin'."

"I knowed it. Didn't I tole yer six ob de guests wouldn't eat no pie?"—Texas Siftings.

MAX O'RELL'S IDEAS.

Extracts from the Bright Frenchman's Book on Brother Jonathan.

If good style consists in not doing what the vulgar do, good style in America ought to consist for one thing in wearing no diamonds—unless democracy should demand the sign of equality. Diamonds are worn by the women of fashion, the tradesman's wife, shop girls, work girls, servants—all the womankind. If you see a shabbily dressed woman who has not a pair in her ears, you may take it for granted that she has put them in pawn. Naturally, in America, as elsewhere, all that sparkles is not diamonds.

There is a pronounced childish side to the character of all Americans. In less than a century they have stridden ahead of all the nations of the Old World; they are astonished at their own handiwork, and, like children with a splendid toy of their own manufacture in their hands, they say to you: "Look, just look, is it not a beauty?" And, indeed, the fact is that, for him that will look at it with unprejudiced eyes, the achievement is simply marvelous.

Should a minister indulge in unorthodox theories in the pulpit, the Eastern man will content himself with shaking his head and going to another church to perform his devotions the Sunday after. The Pennsylvanian will open a violent polemic in the newspapers of the locality. The Kansas man will wait for the minister at the church door and give him a sound thrashing.

American hospitality is princely. You are not often invited, even in houses where the daily menu is of the most appetizing, to go and share the family dinner. You are not invited to dine, a fete is got up for you. If this can not be arranged you may not be invited at all.

America suffers from this state of things. The country's genius, instead of concentrating all its time to the production of works which would tend to elevate the ideas and aspirations of the people, is obliged to think of money-making.

To the American woman the diamond is not an object of luxury, it is an object of prime necessity. An English old maid would do without her tea before an American woman would go without diamonds.

The well-bred American is to my mind a happy combination of the Frenchman and the Englishman, having less stiffness than the latter and more simplicity than the former.

The character of the American is English from the fact of view of its contrasts and contradictions, which are still more accentuated in him than of the Englishman.

This necessity for being rich is the reverse side of the moral in America, where, more than anywhere else, talent without money is a useless tool.

The American may be eccentric, or what you will, but he is never monotonous.

THE BITER BITTEN.

A Practical Joke Which Came Near Ending in a Tragedy.

A young physician went to see his cousin, an army officer, out upon the great plains. The officer was given to practical jokes, and the young doctor, being a genuine "tenderfoot," was a most promising subject. One morning, says the Youth's Companion, the host gravely proposed an elephant hunt. "What," said the doctor, "do you have elephants out here?"

"Plenty of them," replied the host. Preparations were at once begun, and by nine o'clock a party of youngsters, ripe for the fun, were after elephants. When about five or six miles from the post the doctor was sent through a thicket of "wait-a-bit" thorns, of which he knew nothing. Anticipating rare sport at his plight on his return the host sat on his horse waiting, when he heard a shot and was startled by loud cries for help.

He galloped through the glades and arrived at a small prairie opening of an acre or two in extent, around which the doctor was frantically urging his pony, while only a few yards behind was a huge wild Texas bull in full charge.

All the manliness of the host was aroused by the real and unexpected danger of his friend, and, without a moment's hesitation, he dashed in and fired a pistol shot. In an instant the bull turned upon him. His large American horse was unequal to the emergency, and in turning was met full in the side by the horns of the beast.

Both horse and rider were lifted for one instant into the air, and then came down in a heap together. The horse was dead with one struggle, one horn being completely through his body, the other caught in the bones of the chest. One leg of the rider was between the horns of the bull, pinned fast between his head and the body of the horse.

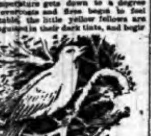
The whole hunting party soon assembled. They were afraid to shoot the bull, lest his struggles might further injure the man pinned to him. At last his jugular vein was opened and he slowly bled to death. His horns were then cut off, the horse lifted and the now nearly dead man carried on a litter back to the post.

Though no bones were broken, he paid the full penalty of his joke, not only with the loss of a fine horse, but with several weeks of severe suffering. It was his last "elephant" hunt.

WINTER BIRDS.

Leading Cold Weather Residents of the Fields and Forests—Summer Yellow Birds in Dark Coats—Fat and Happy Sparrows—The Shy Ground Lark—The Snowy and Screech Owls.

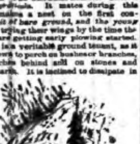
It may be a surprise to many, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, to know that the common yellow bird (Chrysomitris tristis) so plenty about the suburban fields in the summer does not migrate for the South with the coming of frost in the fall, but sticks as closely as possible to its warm weather haunts through the winter. But it does, and a tramp through the woods and groves in the outskirts at this time will result in finding them by scores. They may not be recognized, however, as late in the autumn the color changes to a dull shade more in keeping with the season's drabs and brown than the bright gold of the heated term. As the temperature gets down to a degree where overcoats and fires begin to feel comfortable, the little yellow fellows are well disguised in their dark tints, and begin to scurry for the shelter of the thick trees. The hemlock is a favorite winter resort for them, the seed of the tree furnishing an ample supply of food and the thickly leaved branches an accommodating roof. People generally are not partial to sauntering through the unbroken country and forest for pleasure in winter, but if they take a jaunt of that kind, and will deploy about sunny spots, out of reach of the wind, the yellow bird will be found apparently having a royal good time of it.



THE YELLOW BIRD.

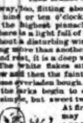
The tree sparrow or arctic chipper (Spizella monticola) is another winter resident. It puts in an appearance as the leaves begin to fall, and hangs to it until the buds start to swell in the spring, when it takes flight for points further north. The sparrow is a plump, inviting-looking bird, and makes splendid pot-pie. Go to Forest Park in the darkest and most miserable of winter days, hunt out the thickest spot of trees, and there the sparrow will be seen and heard chirruping, the soul of happiness and content. Flocks of them are occasionally seen about the residence streets, but they must not be confounded with the English sparrow, so numerous everywhere, that they somewhat resemble.

The ground lark is a winter bird, rather more familiar in the Eastern States than the West. The scientific name is Otocoris alpestris praticola. It mates during this month, makes a nest on the first convenient bit of bare ground, and the young birds are trying their wings by the time the farmers are getting early plowing started. This bird is a veritable ground tenant, as it is not known to perch on bushes or branches, but crouches behind and on stones and clods of earth. It is inclined to dissipate in a mild way, too, sitting about evenings as late as nine or ten o'clock. It finds, evidently, the highest pinnacle of bird bliss when there is a light fall of snow after sunset without a disturbing wind. If there is one thing more than another suggestive of peace and rest, it is a deep wood at such a time. The white flakes sift softly down, with now and then the faint fall of a mass from some overladen bough.



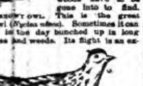
TREE SPARROW.

Then the larks begin to call each other with a simple, but sweet twitter and song. At first glance they may be taken for snow-buntings, as they have the same tuft of feathers on each side of the head, and the cry when on the wing is similar.



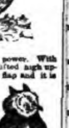
GREAT SNOWY OWL.

The winter brings another Northern visitor, that the thick woods have to be gone into to find. This is the great snowy owl (Nyctea nivea). Sometimes it can be found in the day bunched up in long dead grass and weeds. Its flight is an expression of gigantic motive power. With one sweep of its wings it is lifted high upward and onward. A second flap and it is hardly more than a speck, a third and it has gone.



GROUND LARK.

The little screech owl (Scops asio) is a home bird the year round, and its note is one of the first among birds to tell of spring's approach, it being heard a month or two before the blue bird comes. For all its name and the tales told, the screech owl's voice is not a bad sort of one. It is a mellow, vibrating cry, perhaps a trifle lonesome sounding when following a dark road through the woods in the night, but it has good tidings, as it is a notice for winter to move on and forerunner of bursting buds, green leaves and johnnie-jump-ups.



SCREECH OWL.

Victoria's First Hoop-Skirt.

The following anecdote is told to illustrate the readiness with which Parisian fashions are adopted, even by the most rigidly patriotic of Princesses. At the epoch of the arrival of Queen Victoria in Paris in 1855, on a visit to the Emperor and Empress, the latter had just brought hooped skirts into vogue. The Queen forthwith sent her a messenger to purchase one for her, and on her next approach before her Imperial host and hostess her skirts were expanded into the new and fashionable amplitude. But her Majesty had not comprehended the necessary methods of tying the tapes that hold the hoops in place, and her crinoline presented an extraordinary and shapeless aspect. It was the Emperor himself who, with his own imperial hands, set the rebellious petticoats to rights, and gave his royal guest a lesson as to the proper method of donning the new-fashioned adjunct of feminine costume.

Extenuating Circumstances.

Housekeeper, in search of a servant—"You want five dollars a week? Why, I can get a good, experienced girl for three and a half, and you say you can neither cook nor iron and never worked out before!" The lady, willing to accept a situation—"Aw yes, please, mum; but thin I haven't nairr a brother or a cousin, nor any relation at all this side of the water, mum. 'Tis all alone I am." Housekeeper—"Say no more; I will pay you a dollar a day till your first cousin calls."

Douches for Catarrh.

A word more about douches in catarrh: No one ought to resort to them unless advised to by a physician, and in cold weather one must be extremely cautious in their use. They should under all circumstances be blood warm, and for several hours after employing them the person should remain in a comfortably warm room, otherwise he is quite certain to suffer from "a cold in the head."

Dickens and the Clergyman.

Says James Payn in the Independent: "Dickens used to tell a story of meeting with a clergyman in a railway train who held forth to his fellow-travelers ever so long upon the novelist's private failings. 'Dickens is an atheist, sir, as I happen to know; he is also a gambler, and, I regret to say, drinks,' and so on. 'Dear me, how sad. Have you ever seen him drunk?' asked Dickens. 'Well, not exactly drunk; no, but certainly overtaken by liquor.' 'Have you ever seen him sober?' 'Well, that is too much to say. Oh, yes, I have seen him sober.' 'Often?' 'Yes, often.' 'No, sir; only once. You see him now for the first time.'"

A RACE OF DWARFS.

Remarkable Specimen of a Lilliputian Tribe in Central America.

A specimen of a living race of dwarfs who dwell in the mountainous district in Guatemala, Central America, has been brought to New York, not for exhibition, but as an ethnological curiosity for scientific men to examine. The dwarf, says the Sun, is 3 feet 6¼ inches in height, by actual measurement, but a remarkable-looking specimen of humanity he was. His head measured 26¼ inches in circumference and an American hat, size 8¼, could be barely forced upon his head.

A thick mass of long, straight black hair covered his head in a thick shock and hung down almost to his neck. His skin was of a deep copper color and his features flat, like those of the negro race. But he had not the expression of a negro, nor the color. He was undoubtedly of Indian extraction. But such an enormous though not ill-proportioned head, set upon so diminutive a body, made a strange contrast, and his little arms, short legs, and body added further to his peculiar looks. The Indian, or whatever he might be called, is a powerfully-built man, when his size is taken into consideration. In fact, is a veritable little Hercules.

His feet are five inches in length from heel to toe and his fingers measure from two inches to two and a half inches in length. His greatest peculiarity, however, is in his face. His eyes are so widely separated as to leave room for the eye-brows to grow down on each side of the bridge of the nose and still leave a space between them and the corner of his eyes. He is forty-two years of age and is a priest in his tribe.

In speaking of the strange dwarf Senor Arteaga told the reporter that during a fourteen-years' sojourn in Central America and Guatemala he had heard of these little people and determined on his leaving the country to get a specimen and bring him to New York for the scientists to see. He journeyed to the mountain home of the tribe of dwarfs, and after much bargaining secured the man he now has with him. He says the only other representative of the race ever seen by white men was a brother of the man he now has, who was brought to New York many years ago, but who died soon after landing here. Senor Arteaga's description of the mode of life of these little people is very interesting. They are semi-civilized and all speak Spanish, which is the language of the country.

From the time of Herodotus a race of dwarfs has been said to exist, and this seems now to be proved. Only a few years ago Du Chaillu, the African explorer, found a similar race in Central Africa, and a race of cliff-dwellers has been discovered in Arizona. They are also dwarfs. Senor Arteaga's discovery adds to the proof that races of small people do exist, and he has a living proof of it at his house.

OUR FIVE-YEAR-OLD.

Merry and restless all the time,
Sweet as a wild rose in its prime;
Pure as the lily of the vale
Blooming in sweetness, fair and pale;
Bright as the sun's rays just at noon,
Lovelier than the sweetest tune—
As a bud's petals sweet unfold,
So do thy days, our five-year-old.

Winsome thy ways, and sweet thy smile
Thy voice's melodies beguile;
On every day throughout the year
Thy laugh rings out, full, sweet and clear;
Our hearts in unison respond,
And love meets love in kisses fond;
What witchery our hearts doth hold—
Why love we so our five-year-old!

Search ye all o'er the earth's broad face,
Where find a form more full of grace,
Where find a face more nobly fair,
Or mind which lovelier jewels wear?
The graces and the virtues meet,
And find within thy soul their seat,
Ah, surely wealth of love untold
Is fitly thine, our five-year-old!

And as the years fly on apace,
When fills thy past an empty space,
Oh, may thy future bring to thee
God's wealth of love divinely free,
And lead thee home where joys ne'er fade!
God grant to thee and us, dear maid,
At last to enter the gates of gold
All together, our five-year-old!

—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

HER SPHERE.

Miss Susan's Fortune and the Trouble It Caused Her.

"Mother, Miss Susan has had a little fortune left here."

"A child is supposed to speak a simple, unvarnished tale, isn't it? Well, my admiring mother, that is just what I am doing. Miss Susan, I tell you, has had a fortune left her."

"By whom?"

"Ah, now your curiosity comes to the rescue of your unbelief; you grant me, then, that Miss Susan has had a fortune left her?"

"I would grant you a box on the ear, if my hands were not so busy just now, for teasing me about a matter that you must know I am sincerely interested in."

Mr. Herbert Johns' handsome mother threw enough reproach into her tone to bring the young man to more sober speech. He landed his chair safely on its four legs, after pirouetting it around on one, and left off bantering his mother. "Yes, madame, in good earnest, her California uncle has left her $10,000."

"Is it possible! I wonder what the good soul will do with it! I really am afraid, Herbert, that the change at her time of life will make her unhappy."

"Then I hope, mother, that you will suggest to her to give it to me. It would not make me unhappy, I assure you."

But Mrs. Johns was not far wrong. Miss Susan Park had learned the dress-making trade while she was a girl in her teens. She was an old maid of forty now, doing an excellent business, getting a dollar and a-half a day, and laying by a little something every year. She was entirely content with her lot. The California lawyer's letter had upset her whole plan of life. Instead of becoming the beneficiary of the Old Ladies' Home for the consideration of a three hundred dollar entrance fee, which had heretofore been her earthly ambition, Miss Susan now felt both the pleasure and the responsibility of a possible benefactress. And what, indeed, as Mrs. Johns had said, should she do with it?

"I'm thinking of setting up an orphan asylum, ma'am," Miss Susan said in answer to the kind lady, the next time she went to her for a day's sewing.

"Yes'm, I love childer, an' I think I'd hardly want to go to Heaven, if I could have a dozen of them, with blue eyes, and curls, and white dresses, in my house all the time."

This was the old maid's first dream of what to do with her money. Mrs. Johns had not the heart to break in upon it with cruel facts, of dirty, wilful, unruly, diseased, ungrateful little creatures, such as she well knew fell to the lot of most orphan asylums. She only said: "Don't be hasty, Susan, take some time to look around you before you make up your mind."

"Well, Miss Johns," said the heiress, plaintively, some weeks later, "I'm glad enough I took your advice about looking around a bit before I set out for an orphan asylum. I went to the Home of the Helpless, told 'em what I was thinkin' about, and asked them to let me stay a few days and look 'round. But land's sake! I could hardly stick it out for two days. I didn't have an idea that childer was so noisy and so pesterin'. If I was younger may be I could get used to 'em, but it wouldn't suit me now, no way."

There was something in Miss Susan's decided tone which suggested to her patron's sharp ears that some other object had risen above the old maid's horizon, and she promptly turned her glass upon it.

"Well, yes'm," reluctantly admitted Miss Susan, "I did get hold of a plan that it seems likely would just suit; the doctor at the house says they're awful short of nurses; he says, says he, 'you'd make a good lady superior, Sister Susan.' It does sound a little popish, but we wouldn't wear brown nor black veils, nor nothin' like that." She looked anxiously at Mrs. Johns; her approval had been Miss Susan's law for so many years that she could not be comfortable without it. But that lady shook her head sagaciously. "Don't you get yourself pledged to a nurse's life till you've tried it," she said, warningly; "remember the orphans." Miss Susan was evidently disappointed at her friend's lack of enthusiasm, but agreed to take a nurse's position at once and put herself to the proof.

"Mother," said Mr. Herbert Johns, coming into her dressing-room one day, "did you set Miss Susan Park up for a nurse?"

"No, my dear," answered the lady, trying vaguely to recall what she had done in the matter; "but why? She hasn't poisoned anybody, I hope."

Mr. Herbert picked out his favorite chair and then sat down to enjoy a good laugh. "I ran across the good soul to-day at Mr. Lancaster's, who, by the way, is very sick, and of all the sights she was the most absurd; gotten up in some fanciful costume of cap and cape, and so on."

"How did she seem to be getting on?" asked his mother.

"Well, I was there about eleven o'clock," he answered, taking out his watch and regarding it attentively; "it is now two, and I'll eat my hat if one or the other of that duet isn't stark crazy by this time, but I'd make a safer bet on Miss Susan herself."

"Oh, Herbert, what sort of speech is that! Do tell me what you mean!"

"I mean," said he, with an effort to look reasonable, "that Miss Susan has about as good an idea of nursing as a blacksmith, and I felt obliged to go and tell Dr. Carran."

It was some time before Miss Susan could be coaxed back to Mrs. Johns' house, but the tide of confession set in at last: "Yes, I like to went crazy at the job; the doctor told me so many things to do and not to do that I was all in a muddle, and then, bless your life, the sick man wouldn't let me do any thing. He just swore at me and told me to let him alone, and go about my business. Now, you know I never could stand with my hands folded doing nothing, so I tried to tip around and tidy up things a bit on the sly, but la me, I'd as soon go into a wild beast's den as try to nurse a sick man again."

Little by little came further confessions; Miss Susan had thought of making a home for old people, of going on a foreign mission, of being a tract distributor, in fact she had aspired to all the forms of usefulness open to her ken. "But 'taint no use," she said, breaking down into a good old-fashioned cry. "Seems as if I couldn't do any of the things that the Lord wants done; I don't see what good I am anyhow."

The soft folds of Mrs. Johns' surah fell over Miss Susan's scant calico skirt, as the handsome, fashionably-dressed woman sat down on a sofa close to the disconsolate old maid. The shapely white hand was laid over the bony fingers that had known such constant labor, and Miss Susan's friend spoke as soothingly as one does to a tired child:

"Now, Susan, I want to tell you something. I went to Mrs. Brown's high tea last week, and while a party of us were sitting at a little cluster of tables, eating wafers, and sipping bouillon, your name was mentioned. 'I am so sorry to hear that Miss Susan is going to give up sewing,' said one; 'not on account of the sewing; of course somebody else can do that, but I shall miss the little woman herself so much. I always feel more charitable to my fellow men, more reverent towards my Maker, more humble minded, and less frivolous when I have had her in my house for two weeks.'"

Mrs. Johns' paused and Miss Susan's brown eyes were full of tears. "Then," she continued, "another lady spoke up; 'Yes, indeed,' she said, 'you can't think what a loss she'll be to me. I have always said I owed Miss Susan Park a great deal for her influence over my girls. They have always been devoted to her ever since they were little tots, sitting by and getting her to cut out quilt pieces; and now that they are grown they still love and admire her. Her gentle Christian character, together with her pure, highminded views of things, and the earnest little speeches she makes, checks their levity and vanity. Oh, I assure you I could cry about her leaving her old customers.'"

As Mrs. Johns talked on, telling the lonely old maid how one and another household loved and valued her, a streak of sunshine seemed to touch her tears with rainbow colors. "Go 'long, Miss Johns," she said, blushing like a girl, "ain't you 'shamed to be saying such things to my face; but I feel all made over somehow by what you tell me. La, how nice it will be to go to Miss Holmes next week, and make over her blue challie. As for my money, I'll tell you a secret, Miss Johns, I was so beat out about it that I took the papers and things last week to Mr. Herbert, and he promised to tie it up in something so I couldn't get any more if I wanted it, 'cept the interest, and I'm just going to divide that 'round. When I come to think of it, I know lots o' people that'll be pleased to get a little help out of it, and then I won't have any more stayin' awake at nights. If you b'lieve me, my fingers are fairly itchin' this minute to get hold of Miss Holmes' blue challie."—Elizabeth P. Allen, in Interior.

TRUSTS AND COMBINES.

In 483 A. D. the Emperor Zeno issued the following edict to the Prætorian Prefect of Constantinople (Code iv., 59):

"We command that no one may presume to exercise a monopoly of any kind of clothing, or of fish, or of any other thing serving for food, or for any other use whatever its nature may be, either of his own authority or under a rescript of an Emperor already procured, or that may hereafter be procured, or under an imperial decree, or under a rescript signed by Our Majesty; nor may any persons combine or agree in unlawful meetings that different kinds of merchandise may not be sold at a less price than they may have agreed upon among themselves. Workmen and contractors for buildings and all who practice other professions, and contractors for baths are entirely prohibited from agreeing together that no one may complete a work contracted for by another, or that a person may prevent one who has contracted for a work from finishing it; full liberty is given to any one to finish a work begun and abandoned by another, without apprehension of loss, and to denounce all acts of this kind without fear and without costs. And if any one shall presume to practice a monopoly, let his property be forfeited and himself condemned to perpetual exile. And in regard to the principals of other professions, if they shall venture in the future to fix a price upon their merchandise, and to bind themselves by agreements not to sell at a lower price, let them be condemned to pay forty pounds of gold. Your court shall be condemned to pay fifty pounds of gold if it shall happen, through avarice, negligence or any other misconduct, the provisions of this salutary constitution for the prohibition of monopolies and agreements among the different bodies of merchants shall not be carried into effect."

HABITS OF WASPS.

An Incident Illustrative of Their Cunning and Ferocity.

The subterfuges resorted to by animals in search of food have been regarded by the general reader as the most interesting and instructive portion of the works of naturalists. An incident illustrative of the cunning of the wasp was recently related to the New York Ledger by an observing gentleman.

A blue wasp, known as the solitary wasp, because it lives alone in its little clay nest, was seen to hurl itself upon the strong, wheel-shaped web of a large spider. Here it set up a loud buzzing, like that of a fly when accidentally entangled in a similar web. The spider, watching at the door of his silken domicile, stole cautiously forth. His advance was slow, for he evidently felt that he was approaching no common enemy. The apparently desperate yet fruitless efforts of the wasp to free himself encouraged the spider and lured him forward. But when within some three inches of his intended victim, the wasp suddenly freed himself from his mock entanglements, and darting upon the poor spider, in a moment, as it were, pierced him with his deadly sting in a hundred places.

The wasp then bore his ill-gotten spoil to his lonely home. This home is built of clay, thimble-shaped and originally containing but one apartment. In the lower part of this cul-de-sac the wasp deposits its eggs. Immediately over them it draws a thin glutinous curtain. Upon this curtain it packs away the proceeds of its hunting excursions, such as spiders, flies and all other insects which it regards as suitable food for its young. Consequently when the young escape from the ova, they find above them a well-stocked larder, and gradually eat their way through the choice depository, finally appearing to the delighted world in the agreeable form and stature of perfect wasps.

SAM'S BOY.

"SHINE, mister?"

Something in that voice, perhaps the plaintive, appealing tone, or the just perceptible tremble, caught the attention of Keziah Hicks, the crusty, cross, crabbed old store-keeper and farmer from the Cross Roads up on Possum Ridge, and caused him to stop and look down on the little mite of humanity who had addressed him. He saw before him a face, though pinched and dirty, still retaining the freshness and innocence of childhood, while the large, brown eyes that looked so steadily into his own recalled memories of the almost forgotten past.

"I don't keer if ye do rub 'em a leetle," Keziah said, and there was a softness and tenderness in his voice that sounded strange to his own ears.

Down went the little kit on the hard pavement, and down went the little bootblack on his knees. As the little fellow rubbed and worked patiently at the great rough boots, Keziah watched him with interest, and his thoughts drifted back into the shadows of the past and dwelt on scenes and incidents of the years long gone by. To his mind there came a picture, the face and form of a little boy with laughing, dancing brown eyes and rosy cheeks. A little head wreathed with sunny curls, and a pair of lips wearing a smile like a ray of light struggling from Heaven. Then came the sound of a childish voice in happy laughter, heard but dimly at first, but growing stronger and more distinct until he recognized it. Then came another picture—a young man with eyes clear, frank, honest and affectionate, and in their depths he saw reflected a soul of love and gentleness. Then he saw a cloud steal over the picture, and when it had passed he saw the face of his boy, but oh! so sadly altered. The cheeks were thin and pinched, and the eyes dark are sorrowful.

"My poor, my poor lost boy," he murmured.

The little bootblack looked up and saw the old man draw his rough coat-sleeve across his eyes. He put his box and brush away and started to rise when the old man laid his hand on his head saying:

"Before you go tell me your name."

"Joe," the boy replied.

"What else?" and Keziah leaned over in an expectant attitude.

"That's all I know."

A shade of disappointment passed over the aged face.

"Have you no friends, no father or mother?"

The boy shook his head.

"Where do you live, then?" the old man went on.

"Just anywere. Sometimes I go to the 'homes' an' sometimes I sleep in boxes and stairways."

For a minute they were both silent. Then the boy said:

"Please pay me and let me go."

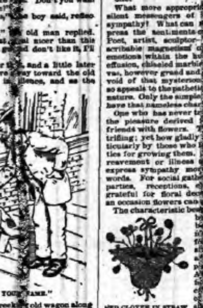
"Wait a bit," Keziah said. "Wouldn't you like to have a home and friends, an' a place to stay all the time? I need a boy like you on the farm, an' if you'll go you won't have much work to do, an' you'll have warm clothes and plenty to eat an' a good warm bed to sleep in.

"Then you can help me at gathering apples out of the orchard, and can ride the horses and every thing like that. Don't you want to go along with me?"

"It must be nice," the boy said, reflectively.

"Of course it is," the old man replied. "At least it's a great deal nicer than this sort of life. If you go and don't like it, I'll fetch you back."

Joe assented after this, and a little later he and Keziah drove away toward the old farm. They rode in silence, and as the horses pulled the screeking old wagon along the narrow lanes, up and down the rugged hills, Joe was busy seeing and enjoying the great open country with its broad fields of growing crops, and the big blue grass pastures, and meadows of red clover all in bloom. To his young mind a new world was opened out—a grand, beautiful world, and no doubt he sometimes felt that he must spring out and scamper off over the soft grass and down into the deep, shady forest beyond, where the happy birds were singing and the squirrels were basking. The sinking sun was gilding the eastern hills with gold and purple, while from far away came the rustic song of some happy farmer trudging home at the close of his day's labor in the field. Never had the boy seen anything like this, and he feared to speak lest he disturb the enchanted scene and the marvelous beauty fade away.



"TELL ME YOUR NAME."

Keziah saw nothing of the things about him, for his mind had wandered back to the days long passed, and again he was living over the time when his boy was with him, and as he recalled the time when he drove his son out of his home and life, and remembered his harsh words, his heart grew heavy and a sigh escaped him, and again he drew his rough coat-sleeve across his eyes.

Just as the twilight was deepening and the night birds began their mournful cry, the old horses stopped in front of the farm house at the cross roads, and Keziah awoke to his surroundings.

"Here we are, Joe," he said, very kindly. "Climb down an' come in. Mandy," he said to his wife, "this little fellow I picked up down to the city an' brought along with me, seein' he hain't got no friends nor home."

Amanda opened her eyes in wonder, for it was the first time she had ever heard Keziah talk that way. He was so unlike the cross, gruff old man he had been all these years, and his voice was so gentle and soft. Keziah saw her astonishment and understood the cause, and to hide his own confusion, said:

"Give us some supper, Mandy, for I guess the boy's hungry."

Amanda, kind-hearted, generous, patient soul, needed no urging to comply with her husband's request, nor did Joe need any urging when Keziah said:

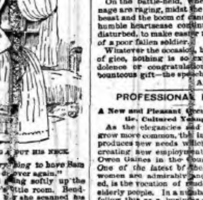
"Come, fall to an' eat a bite."

That night after Joe had been snugly tucked away in the loft bed upstairs, Amanda came and sat with Keziah on the long porch. For a long time they sat thus and gazed silently out into the night, each busy with thoughts, half sad, half sweet. At last, with a sigh, Keziah turned and laying his hand on Amanda's arm, said:

"Mandy, don't you think he's like him? The little feller up there, don't you think he's like Sam was when he was a little boy?"

"Yes, he reminds me of Sam," Amanda said, and her voice trembled and grew husky. "I've been thinkin' of poor Sammy ever since that boy came. He's so like him."

"Mandy," Keziah went on in a low tone, "there's something about that boy that I can't understand. I don't know why it was, but when I heard his voice and saw his face it set me to thinking of our own boy, an' somehow I felt drawn to the little fellow, an' it seemed as if I wanted to do somethin' for him. All day I've been goin' over all what happened way back there, an' feeling how wrong I was in driving Sam away because he hadn't my way of thinkin', and didn't marry as I wanted him to. I've made life a burden to you, and made people hate me by bein' so cross and selfish, an' besides I've been miserable myself. I never see it so till to-day, an' somehow that boy's teched my heart an' thawed the ice out o' my nature. I see it all now, an' I'd give every thing to have Sam back, an' have it all to do over again."



NOTICING A STRING ABOUT HIS NECK.

Amanda arose, and going softly up the stairs came to Sammy's little room. Bending over the sleeping boy she scanned his features well.

"It is so like Sammie," she thought, "so like he used to be when he came of nights to look at him when he slept."

Then noticing a string about his neck she pulled it gently and a little locket came from his bosom.

"That is it," she gasped, and, springing the lid, she held it down close to the dim light and read:

"God is my friend. He will protect and keep me."

After awhile Amanda came back, and going up to Keziah she laid her hand on his shoulder.

"He is Sam's boy, Keziah," she said. "I know it by this," and she held out the locket.

Keziah raised his head from his hands, and for a moment gazed at his wife in silence.

"He is Sam's boy," Amanda repeated.

"Sam's boy," Keziah said; "our Sam's boy, an' left without friends or home. I've been a brute, Mandy, not to see her. But it shall be different now, and I'll make up to the boy what I ought to have done for Sammy."

From this day Keziah was a changed man, and people often wondered at it. Though he could not atone to poor Sammy for his cruelty and neglect, and though his cruel treatment of his boy lived in his memory and haunted him through his few remaining years, his sorrow was sweetened with the knowledge of the good he was doing to Sam's boy.

"I missed my chance to lead a happy life," Keziah sometimes said, "by refusing kindness to them as needed it, but I am thankful that I come to see myself aright before it was too late to change my course and try to do something to amend my wrong ways. It's all owing to that little boy, an' I thank God for sending him to us."

Keziah was never more the cross, harsh old man the children feared, but, instead, he was their friend, and often they came to his store to talk with him, or rambled with him in search of flowers.

American County Courts.

As early as the year [illegible] the extent of settlement had become so great in Virginia that it was almost impossible to bring all legal causes to the capital at Jamestown, and inferior courts were appointed in convenient places to relieve the Governor and Council, who constituted the superior judiciary, of a heavy burden of business, and to render justice more accessible and less expensive to the settlers. With these tribunals began the establishment of county courts in America.

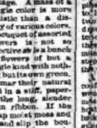
CONCERNING FLOWERS.

How to Arrange Them Effectively—Their Importance in All the Affairs of Social Life.

What more appropriate than flowers—silent messengers of love, gladness and sympathy? What can more delicately express the sentiments of the human heart? Poet, artist, sculptor—all lack that indescribable magnetism of arousing similar emotions within the human heart. Poetic effusion, chiseled marble and painted canvas, however grand and masterful, are devoid of that mysterious something which so appeals to the pathetic element in human nature. Only the simple speechless flowers have that nameless charm.

One who has never tried it can not know the pleasure derived from remembering friends with flowers. The attention is so trifling; yet how gladly it is received, particularly by those who have not the facilities for growing them. In the event of bereavement or illness appropriate flowers express sympathy more delicately than words. For social gatherings of any kind; parties, receptions, etc., the hostess is grateful for floral decorations. On such an occasion flowers can not be too profuse.

The characteristic beauty of any flower is best brought out by being arranged with nothing but its own foliage. A mass of a single color is more artistic than a display of various colors. A bouquet of assorted flowers is not so effective as is a bunch of flowers of but a single kind with nothing but its own green. In sending flowers do not mar their natural beauty by confining them in a stiff, paper-lace holder. Simply tie the long, slender stems with a white, satin ribbon. If the flowers droop readily, wrap moist moss and tin-foil around the stems and slip the bouquet into a soft, tissue-paper holder made as follows: Take a square of French tissue-paper of the desired size and tint, from the center draw it tightly through the hands; this creases it beautifully. Cut the outer edge in deep, irregular, zig-zag points. Slip the bouquet into this holder; the creased paper being elastic, it spreads out, showing the flowers while closely confining the stems. Try a bouquet of poppies or geraniums in this manner. The result will be surprisingly gratifying.

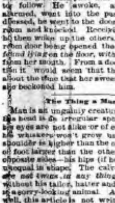


RED CLOVER IN STRAW HAT.

A charming way to arrange delicate tea-roses is to place them, moist cotton or moss about each stem, in a small work-basket. With a ribbon tie the cover back to the handles of the basket, disclosing the roses peeping from underneath in fragrant loveliness.

If flowers are scarce, take the fragrant red clover. It is a flower which is too often slighted. It is easily gathered, for the meadow is a crimson mass of honey-sweet clover blossoms, nodding their pretty heads with every gentle zephyr.

To be effective, the rural simplicity of their origin must be preserved in their arrangement. This is successfully done by placing them carelessly in a straw hat. The stems must be well wrapped in cotton and tin-foil, for clover droops quickly. For this purpose take a boy's ordinary straw hat, not too large. With pale pink and green ribbons tie a bow at the crown and bring up the ends to serve as a handle, at the same time holding the rim up in basket shape. The effect is very pleasing, and has the appearance of having just been gathered and thrown into the hat.



ARTISTIC ARRANGEMENT OF FERNS.

If enough flowers of any kind can not be procured the treasures of the woods must be utilized. Rich green ferns are always to be had in abundance. Arranged in the following manner they retain their freshness several days: Take a Japanese paper parasol and draw a ribbon about the lower edge forming it into a V shape; then fill with brakes, ferns and quantities of perrywinkle, or lovers' tangle. Each, or several fern leaves together, must be well bound with plenty of damp moss and tin-foil. To the handle of the parasol securely tie a ribbon for carrying or hanging. This arrangement makes a beautiful decoration for a bare corner or beneath the hall chandelier.

Whatever the flower—whether the simple blossom of the fields, the verdant growth of the wood, or rare hot-house roses—all serve the same admirable purpose of gladdening the hearts of friends. They are always acceptable, bringing good cheer, pleasure and comfort.

It may be an ideal morn of mid-summer. Go to some secluded spot where an unobstructed view of the rising sun may be obtained. His coming is heralded by fiery lines shooting out before. At last the splendid orient becomes visible. His warm, soft rays intensify the rare, fresh beauty of the rural surroundings. All nature is bathed in sparkling dew—like a shower of diamonds. Or the elements, instead of being passively beautiful, may be terrifically sublime in the intensity of their raging fury. It matters not to the flowers. Grateful for sunshine and shower they smilingly hold up their pretty heads waiting to fulfill their sweet mission in life—to be plucked for some one's joy.

On the battle-field, where war and carnage are raging, midst the tread of man and beast and the boom of cannon and gun—the humble heartsease continues to bloom, undisturbed, to make easier the last moments of a poor fallen soldier.

Whatever the occasion, be it one of gloom or of glee, nothing is so expressive of condolence or congratulation as is nature's bounteous gift—the speechless flowers.

ANNA HINRICHS.

PROFESSIONAL READERS.

A New and Pleasant Occupation for Gentle, Cultured Young Women.

As the elegancies and luxuries of life grow more common, the increase of wealth produces new needs which are constantly creating new employments, writes Garry Owen Gaines in the Country Gentleman. One of the latest of these, and to which women are admirably and specially adapted, is the vocation of reader to invalids or elderly people. In a number of cities ladies follow this as a business and make a good living by it, and it seems destined to be one of the increasing occupations of the future as education, intelligence and wealth become more general. There will always be invalids and always a troop of well-to-do old people for patrons, and the woman who can make herself useful in this way will not lack for employment. There is no school-room drudgery connected with it to wear her out, body and soul, before her time, as is the usual lot of teachers in our graded schools, but rather it is a delightful ministering to her intellectual peers, and one can readily imagine the work to be in entire consonance with the tastes of the most cultivated, refined lady who is forced to be self-supporting.

In many families among the wealthy classes there are aged parents, whose dim eyes can no longer see the printed page. Children are too busy and full of cares in this rushing American life, and grandchildren often too heedless, to stop their work or their pleasures to read to these forlorn old folks, who, though surrounded by luxuries on every side, actually suffer from starvation of the mind! Think, then, what a beam of light is this visiting reader, who forms the link that connects them with the bustling circles of humanity, of which they have been hitherto only a silent part—"the world forgetting, by the world forgot"—because they could no longer see!

Perhaps it is a blind or partially blind scholar, or one of literary tastes, who, but for the kindness of others—a kindness too often given grudgingly, to the shame of humanity be it said!—must ever sit in that darkness which is greater anguish than physical night. Perhaps it is a sick man or woman slowly convalescing, whose keen interest in the outside world has become intensified by long weeks of deprivation of the accustomed daily journal. To all such the visiting reader is a prize for which they are willing to pay a good sum.

Reading seems such an easy thing that doubtless many young women will catch at the prospect of a new and less laborious field than many of the paths trodden by impecunious womankind, but the fact is that good reading is one of the rarest of accomplishments. Hundreds of girls are good piano players, and creditable artists and painters, who will mangle an essay or poem beyond all recognition by its author, were he so unfortunate as to be present to listen to it.

There are some persons who read an anecdote or humorous sketch about as spiritedly as they would the Lamentations of Jeremiah, while scarcely one person in twenty knows enough to give the proper inflections, and therefore utterly fails to read conversational passages intelligibly. It is simply because the writer's meaning is not understood. We might almost say that readers, like poets, are born and not made. Lacking that subtle insight, that sympathy with the author, the possession or absence of which constitutes the difference between good and poor readers, they lack every thing, and all the schools of elocution and labor of voice drill in the world will not supply what nature has failed to give.

An hour or two spent in the cheerful morning room of a brown stone mansion reading the news of the day to a bright companionable old gentleman, then a brisk walk in the pleasant air to the house of some refined old lady or sweet invalid girl who is longing to hear the latest sermon of a noted divine or the choice things in the last magazine, certainly seems the very acme of the agreeable in the way of earning one's bread; but please to bear in mind, dear miss or madam who aspire to this profession, that to secure such places you must know your business thoroughly.

Know that if there is one thing more irritating than another to a sensitive auditor, it is to have a reader stumble over and repeat words, or spoil the pleasure of the entire article by ear-torturing mispronunciation. It is like sitting on needles and pins for nervous persons to be compelled to listen to botchy reading, to anticipate two or three seconds in advance of the droney voice and measured sing-song sentences just what will come next, and get themselves into a fever speculating how many times more you will come to a dead stop at an innocent comma, and thus mar the whole meaning.

A really fine reader has it in his power to confer so much pleasure on others that the wonder is why it has been allowed to almost become one of the "lost arts." The hostess of a country party blesses her lucky stars when she discovers among her guests one who knows how to read, feeling that she has secured an attraction as rare as it is pleasurable, and instances are not uncommon where a popular minister's hold on a congregation is his beautiful rendering of the Scriptures and the hymns.

In a greater measure, because reaching those who are cut off by age or sickness from the usual channels of information, does the visiting reader give enjoyment to others, and earn her daily bread as well, by means of a clear articulation, a sympathetic voice that carries the listener with her through moods, merry or tender, as depicted on the page, and, lastly, a quick appreciation and comprehension of the author's meaning.

A Lover's Strange Dream.

The Pall Mall Gazette records a lover's extraordinary dream. A girl at Hackney, aged nineteen, with her two brothers and a younger sister, were left in charge of the house while their parents attended a funeral in the country. In the evening the girl's sweetheart called. As she was alarmed at noises which she fancied she heard, he stayed at the house all night to reassure her. During the night he dreamed that he saw the girl walk past him beckoning him to follow. He awoke, and, becoming alarmed, went into the passage. Having dressed, he went to the door of deceased's room and knocked. Receiving no answer, he then woke up the others. On the bedroom door being opened the deceased was found lying on the floor, with blood issuing from her mouth. From a doctor's examination it would seem that the girl died at about the time that her sweetheart dreamed she beckoned him.

The Thing a Man Is.

Man is an ungainly creature at the best. His head is an irregular spheroid at best; his eyes are not alike or of equal efficiency; his whiskers won't grow uniformly. One shoulder is higher than the other, one hand or foot larger than the other—and this of opposite sides—his hips (if he has any) are unequal in shape. The calves of his legs are not twins in any thing but age, and without his tailor, hatter and bootmaker he is a sorry-looking animal. As for women, well, this article is not written to discuss their physical crookedness. If it was it would not be half the length that it is.

AN EARTHLY PARADISE.

Where Even the Wind Is Tempered to the Shorn Lamb.

Whatever may be the proportion of philosophic spectators and of conscientious opponents of gaming to inveterate gamblers and cursory punters who risk a few louis now and again, "just for the fun of the thing," the fact remains that Monte Carlo has become an earthly paradise, says the London Standard; that the gardens, with their subtropical vegetation, are enchantingly beautiful; that the views from the terrace are more than Neapolitan in their soft loveliness; and that the drive from Nice along the Cornice road and through Villefranche, Beaulieu, Roquebrune and Monaco is almost unequaled in its bright picturesqueness. The hotels of Monte Carlo, to those who know how to choose their domicile, are no more expensive than those of Nice; the resident doctors are skilled and moderate in their terms; and, if the population be not about the happiest to be found on the continent, the blame assuredly does not lie at the door either of the paternal Grimaldi or the more than paternal Banque de Monaco. The Monagasques pay no taxes, are subject to no conscription, enjoy the advantages of excellent paving, lighting, drainage and sanitation, and run no risk of being injured in pocket through the vicinity of the Casino, seeing that a paternal government does not allow the natives of the principality to play at the tables. Health seekers, again, are arriving at the conclusion that the climate of Monte Carlo is in winter warmer and more stable than that of Nice; that the cut-throat "mistral" rarely careers over the bay of La Condamine; and that the little town is altogether more sheltered than the great, blazing, windy, dusty, Mediterranean watering place. Then, again, for persons in really delicate health, the amenity of Mentone is easily accessible; and beyond, the Riviera in its Italian section, opens up a whole chain of delightful winter resorts between Ventimiglia and Savona which, twenty years ago, were never heard of in England. San Remo, Bordighera, Alassio and a score more pretty and genial seaside hamlets have now their regular equipment of wealthy patrons from England and the States, and every season spacious, elegant and clean hotels and "pensions" continue to spring up, superseding the artistic and pretty little "osterie" and "locande" of the past. Have the roulette and trente-et-quarante tables of Monte Carlo been exclusively, or even principally, instrumental in bringing to these smiling shores so many thousands of Anglo-Saxon pilgrims, or is it that the prime cause of the amazing popularity of the Riviera is its accessibility from England? Only thirty hours' traveling, including the steamboat journey from Dover to Calais, will now enable the valetudinarian or the pleasure-seeker to exchange the smoke, the fog, the sleet, the raw damp of the piercing cold of a London winter for the palms, the cactus and prickly pear, the oranges and olives and almond blossoms, the blue sky and bright sun of the Riviera. Is it to be wondered at, then, that princes, peers, politicians, people in society and people out of society, that all sorts and conditions of men and women who can put money in their purses, are flocking to the Riviera, notwithstanding the potential wickedness of Monte Carlo and its gambling rooms.

What's in a Name?

An exchange says: "We are, indeed, a happy, elegant, moral, transcendent people. We have no masters, they are all principals; no shopmen, they are all assistants; no shops, they are all establishments; no servants, they are all 'helps;' no jailers, they are all governors; nobody is flogged in prison, he merely receives the correction of the house; nobody is ever unable to pay his debts, he is only unable to meet his engagements; nobody is angry, he is only excited; nobody is cross, he is only nervous; lastly, nobody is drunk—the very utmost that you can assert is that 'he has taken his wine.'"

Beaconsfield as a Linguist.

The Quarterly Review admits that Lord Beaconsfield was "deficient in a knowledge of foreign languages." I should think he was! I suppose the reviewer never heard the story about him which still lingers among the waiters at the Kaiserhof. During the Berlin Congress he was breakfasting alone one morning, and he rang the bell. He knew not a word of German, but he had a sort of smattering of French. So it was in that language that he asked, or imagined he had asked, the waiter to bring him a footstool. Some time elapsed; there was much disputatious whispering among the waiters in the corridors outside. At length there entered waiter No. 1, bearing ceremonially a footbath, followed by waiter No. 2 carrying towels.

JOHN BRIGHT.

England has lost a [illegible] of [illegible] personal character and a statesman of decided practical ability in the death of John Bright.

Mr. Bright was a man of liberal views and honest purposes. His noble fight with Cobden for the abrogation of oppressive corn laws, which taxed the laboring man to benefit a favored few, very similar to some existing American revenue enactments, his grand and efficient support of the cause of our Union during the war of the Rebellion; and his active co-operation with Gladstone, the most illustrious Englishman of the present age, in furthering the principles of [illegible], make for him a splendid public record.

Still Mr. Bright missed a golden opportunity. He parted political company with Mr. Gladstone when he should have stood firmly by his side.

There was the mistake of John Bright. Had he joined heart and hand with his old friend Gladstone in endeavoring to secure for down-trodden Ireland the just boon of Home Rule, his reputation as a liberal English statesman would have been transmitted to future generations without a flaw.

UNPROTECTED LABOR.

According to the doctrines of the Republican party managers, the great and all important purpose of a high protective tariff is to increase the wages of American labor.

That was their incessant war-cry during the late Presidential contest, and thousands were deluded thereby.

Upon such a plea, with the aid of immense financial strength contributed by the real beneficiaries of tariff protection, capitalists not workingmen, they carried the election.

Have wages gone up?

To so expect was certainly within the bounds of reason, because the Republican party is in power, and its blessed war-taxation, bounty-bequeathing and surplus-accumulating tariff continues unabridged.

Yes, what do we hear?

From all over the land accounts of a heavy reduction in wages among the operatives of specially protected industries. Cotton-spinners of the East and glass-blowers of the West striking for just remuneration, but forced to yield or starve.

And the glorious [illegible] of political protection brightly shines.

Arrogant monopolists bask in its warmth and grow richer every day.

Where is Protected Labor?

As a general rule toiling, toiling, toiling for a bare living pittance.

Real protection means equal and practical encouragement to all classes of people and all interests, but no favoritism of any kind.

That expresses the doctrine of Democracy, which can be found recorded in the book of Tariff Reform.

ALL OR NOTHING.

Child's Play in the Council Arena.

The action of Councilmen Gallup, Moffett and Watson, Monday night, in voting against the applications of the hotels of the city, is not explainable in any way that is good, consistent or manly. They acted as spiteful as school girls, and with even less sense.

The first application considered was that of Otto Arend to keep a saloon. Councilman Myers, who THE PRESS last evening said has a great big mind of his own, voted against it—probably believing it was not a necessity to the public nor for the best interest of the city that there should be a [illegible] within a hundred yards of one another.

Thereupon Messrs Gallup, Moffett and Watson defeated by their votes every application that was brought up and that might otherwise have been granted. Because Mr. Arend, who has never been assessed a cent of taxes, and who can probably pack all his Plainfield interests and possessions in his trunk today and seek a business elsewhere without a cent of sacrifice—because he had not votes enough to grant him a license, Messrs Gallup, Moffett and Watson saw fit to obstruct the granting of licenses to even the hotel keepers who have thousands of dollars invested, and on whom the growth of the city depends more than on any others.

The position of these three Councilmen is most ill-judged and indefensible. The temperance members are unfortunately placed, as their votes reduce the city's income over ten thousand dollars without restricting the sale within its limits nor diminishing the evils of intemperance. But their position doesn't equal the spectacle of grown-up men voting against their own principles and the interests of the city merely because some one person cannot get a license to sell beer around the corner in Second street.

PLAINFIELD'S GRAND MONUMENT.

With the opening of Spring the project for erecting a soldiers' monument at the new Hillside cemetery, near Plainfield, begins to materialize. The committee from the two Grand Army Posts and from the cemetery board took the first fine day of the season to visit the ground for the purpose of selecting a lot. The committee consisted of L. V. F. Randolph and John E. Stewart, representing Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, Judge Robert Morgan, W. R. Williams and E. J. Olmstead, representing Major Anderson Post, No. 109, and Col. Mason W. Tyler and J. W. Murray of the cemetery board.

The joint committee were quite unanimous in the selection of the highest knoll of the cemetery tract as the most suitable place for a monument and burial lot. It is situated about in the middle of the cemetery property, nearly East of several fine monuments recently erected, and will, it is expected, be handsomely deeded by the cemetery association to the three trustees, and will be known as "The Soldiers' Monument and Burial Plot." It is to be 60 feet square and has a value of $1,500. The trustees who are to hold the title are Colonel Mason W. Tyler, John E. Stewart and Robert Morgan. It is expected that the monument to be erected will cost about $10,000, and earnest efforts will at once be set on foot by the representatives and friends of the two posts interested to raise the necessary funds and carry into execution this worthy project.

At a camp-fire of Winfield Scott Post, held on Tuesday evening, the above plan was reported by the committee who had been appointed with power in the matter, and the scheme as presented was heartily endorsed by the comrades.—Central New Jersey Times.

The Silent Voice to Lead Him.

(Daily Press, April 1.)

Some of the temperance members of the Council have gone so far in their intemperance as to address a communication to Councilman J. K. Myers informing him, from their short sighted view, how he should vote on the license applications if they are considered this evening.

Such assurance is certainly impertinent if not worse. The communication implies that Mr. Myers [illegible] eyesight, some insight, some judgment and some power to act for himself. Whereas he is a man with a great, big mind of his own, all the force of character necessary to form a sound foundation for an honest and consistent opinion, and with the courage of his convictions to back up his vote.

Proceedings for Divorce.

Messrs J. R. and N. English of Elizabeth, attorneys for Mrs. Henry H. Teeple of Bernards Township, in Somerset county, placed in the hands of Constable Moffett, last Thursday, divorce papers to be served on her husband, Henry Teeple, on the ground of desertion. Information which led to the whereabouts of the defendant is only known by those interested in the matter. Constable Moffett served the papers next morning, having followed the defendant into a store on Park avenue.

Mr. Teeple formerly resided in North Plainfield, where his parents still live. He was at one time employed by John Wanamaker of Philadelphia, subsequently he went to Boston, from which place he came to this city. His wife was a Miss Agnes Coon, and she is now living in Bernards Township, Somerset county.

The couple have two children, aged respectively 9 and 13 years. Mrs. Teeple claims that for the past six or seven years her husband has contributed nothing toward the support of herself or children. The writ is returnable on April 27.

UNJUSTLY TREATED WOMEN.

There are more than 4,000 public school teachers in New Jersey, and a little over 20 per cent. of them are men, most of whom are employed in the rural districts. In most of the cities only 12 per cent. of the teachers are males, and in Plainfield there is a solitary one. But they get the lion's share of the salary.

In the entire State the yearly average for male teachers is $[illegible].67, and for females $392.72. In cities the yearly average for males is $1,267.62, and for females only $640.36. The salaries for school teachers in New Jersey do not compare with those paid in many other States. We have a most efficient body of teachers, but compared with the compensation of other States they are poorly paid.

This is especially true of the female teachers in the primary schools, who have crowded classes and are expected to do the work of two or three teachers. If they fail to do it the children suffer. A public school teacher is a patient pack horse that never kicks. No account of the multiplied labor, for the public school teacher never goes on a strike. The labor question never penetrated the teachers' institutes except in the abstract way.

PLAINFIELD STILL HOLDS THE CUP.

The final game for the championship of the New Jersey State Chess Association took place Saturday evening at the rooms of the Plainfield Chess Club. The contestants were Mr. R. W. Pope of Elizabeth, and Mr. Clarence L. Murphy of Washington Park, North Plainfield.

The game commenced a few minutes before 8 o'clock. Mr. Pope had the first move and opened a Scotch Gambit.

The first few moves were according to book. Mr. Murphy made some bold ventures to wrest the attack from Mr. Pope but came out of the preliminary skirmish a couple of pawns behind.

Mr. Pope played in excellent form up to the 25th move when, not appreciating fully the designs of his antagonist, and being anxious to press his own attack, he allowed himself to fall into a snare, of which Mr. Murphy was quick to take advantage, and the game was soon at an end. Time 2 hours and a quarter. The score tells the rest of the story.

There was considerable interest manifested in the result of the contest, as many of Mr. Murphy's friends in this city and in Washington Park, where he resides, were anxious for his success. He is a young man who has not yet reached his twenty-first year, and is the son of the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, rector of Holy Cross Church. He is engaged in a large wholesale commission house on Broadway, New York. For a year or so past he has given but little attention to the game.

Some few years ago the New York World offered as a prize a watch to the one who would compose a two-move chess problem, solved by the fewest competitors.

Various problemists entered upon the contest, yet Mr. Murphy, then only sixteen years, won the prize. He promises to become a great chess player, and for one so young he has already displayed wonderful ability. His opponent on Saturday evening has long been known as a good chess player, and Mr. Murphy's victory over him is made all the more gratifying.

The State Championship Cup, a handsome silver ornament, is on exhibition in the front window of THE PRESS office. It has attracted numbers of admiring spectators during the day, all alluding to a certain extent to Plainfield's honor won by Mr. Murphy's pluck and skill.

A Plainfielder to Represent America in Paris.

Mr. D. A. Lowitz, formerly of West 6th street, this city, sailed on Saturday with his son, Bert, for Rotterdam, per Steamer "Veendam." Mr. Lowitz will represent several New York firms at the Paris Exposition. Mrs. Lowitz and her mother will follow her husband in a few weeks.

Plainfield Can Beat That.

The Monday Night Bowling Club of Westfield, played the third of the series of games with the New Jersey Bowling Club, of Jersey City, on Saturday evening, on Montgomery alleys, Newark. It resulted in a victory for the New Jerseys, they winning the game and the series by the score of: New Jerseys, 1,380; Mondays, 1,305.

Death of Mr. James Thorn.

Mr. James Thorn, an old and universally esteemed resident of this city, died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Sam'l P. Case, on East Front street, at an early hour Friday, in the 79th year of his age. The deceased had been in feeble health for a long time past, his death resulting from general debility. Several children survive him, among them being Messrs Alexander and Randolph Thorn of this city.

"Gemuthlicher Kegel Club Germania."

The above is the name of a bowling club recently organized from among the members of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein. The club met on Wednesday, Mch. 27, and elected these officers:

President—H. Baurand.
Secretary—John Richter.
Treasurer—J. P. [illegible]

Messrs John Messler, Chas. Myer and John Richter were appointed a Committee to draw up by-laws, and report the same at the next meeting.

A Birthday Surprise.

A few friends of Miss Lillie Milliken tendered her a birthday surprise, at the residence of her sister on East Second street, last Thursday, the occasion being the eighteenth anniversary of her birth. Refreshments and music, both vocal and instrumental, were indulged in. The presents which the young lady received were very appropriate to the occasion. After extending congratulations and many happy returns of the day, the guests departed for their homes, well pleased with the evening's enjoyment.

A Mirror Fell on Him.

Mr. Dennis O'Brien, the hackman, was walking alongside of a load of furniture which he was transferring from North Plainfield to this city, at the corner of Front and Grove streets, about noon Monday, when a heavy plate glass mirror fell from the wagon, striking him on the head. The mirror was broken; likewise Mr. O'Brien's head, and the broken glass penetrating through his hat, inflicted several deep scalp wounds. The injured man was assisted to a neighboring doctor's office, where the wounds were dressed.

Where He Comes In.

The Central Times says: "Three candidates for the Plainfield postmastership are prominently in the field. They are ex-Councilman C. M. Goddard, Assessor Brokaw of North Plainfield, and ex-Postmaster E. R. Pope." And the Bound Brook Chronicle asks: "Where does the editor of the news come in?"

Anybody in Plainfield can answer that. It's an easy one. He comes in at the very tail, with one man, and one man only, in the entire Colorado of the East to endorse him. That one is said to be a gentleman by the name of A. C. Baldwin who has ever since been trying to withdraw.

Where They Will Spend Their Vacation.

The Bryant school building closed Friday, and the teachers and scholars will have one week of solid enjoyment. All of the other schools closed also, for the usual Spring vacation, and many of the teachers and pupils will spend the time out of the city.

The following lady teachers in the Bryant building will pass their vacation days as follows: Miss Valentine, principal, will be at Saratoga; Miss Lewis will sojourn in Rhode Island; Miss Dean will rusticate at Munchy, Pa.; and Miss Morand will visit Troy, N. Y.

Janitor Hope says he will devote his time to "cleaning up," so as to have the building in perfect order when the ladies return.

Congregational Church Sociable.

The Congregational church people held a sociable in the Sunday School room, Friday night that was the cause of attracting a large number of the members and friends of the church and Sunday School. A feature of the entertainment was the singing by the double quartette consisting of the following persons: Messrs Van Arsdale and Randall, tenors; Miss May Kirkner and Miss Hattie Burnet, sopranos; Miss Carrie Kirkner and Miss Mattie Powlison, altos; Messrs L. Goodrick and B. T. Barnes, bassos.

Mrs. Andrews, a returned Missionary, delivered an interesting address, after which refreshments were served. The Sociable was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society, assisted by the Young People's Society.

A SUDDEN DEATH.

Mr. Henry J. Taylor, ex-Mayor of Jersey City, dropped dead on the the street, nearly in front of his son-in-law's residence on Broadway, about five o'clock on Saturday afternoon. His death was due to apoplexy. The deceased was about seventy-five years of age. He leaves a widow, three daughters and one son. One daughter is the wife of Alex Taylor, a well-known figure in Wall street. Ex-Senator Robert L. Livingston of this city, married a daughter, and it was at his house where the deceased and his wife were stopping.

Mr. Taylor was about town during the day on Saturday, apparently enjoying moderate health. About 4 P. M., he started to return home, and had nearly reached there when he toppled and fell on the sidewalk, a corpse.

The deceased was formerly a merchant in N. Y. city, and at one time he was elected Mayor of Jersey City on the Citizens' Reform ticket. He was at one time owner of the well-known Taylor's Hotel in Jersey City, and he was largely interested in the development of that city. Of late he has lived a retired life.

The Park Tennis and Whist Clubs.

Washington Park, North Plainfield has a Tennis Club, but their grounds on Willow avenue, have recently been purchased by Mr. Isaac Brokaw, and Mr. Edwin Overton, and while the club has been tendered the use of them as heretofore, the probability is they will buy a suitable lot, which will be made one of the finest tennis grounds in the State. The site has not yet been selected.

The Park has also a Whist Club, composed of well-known residents. They meet at one another's houses, and this innocent but interesting game is thoroughly enjoyed. Several of the members have been spending the Winter months in New York, but upon their return next month the club will no doubt have their regular weekly meetings.

The members of the Whist Club are: Mr. and Mrs. Augustus VanDeventer, Mr. and Mrs. Walter A. Haviland, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. P. Dupee, Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. McGee, Mr. and Mrs. Martin L. Cooley, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan S. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Waring, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel St. J. McCutchen, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Townsend, Mr. and Mrs. Edward St. John, Mr. Benjamin S. Day and Mr. Chas. E. Horn.

Kicked by a Mule.

Martin McDonard, a farm hand, employed on what is known as the Holly Farm, was admitted to Muhlenberg Hospital, March 27, suffering from injuries resulting from a kick by a mule. The man was at work cleaning the brute, when the latter kicked him on the hip. No bones were broken but the patient was considerably cut and bruised about the left hip.

The Record Broken.

Since Friday evening the record of 191 on the Olympia alleys, has been broken, and broken by a dark horse. Mr. Chas. R. VanWinkle scored 193 on Saturday evening. Captain Jim Davis of the Plainfield Club raised his own record, at the same time, to 186.

Saturday afternoon Messrs J. Frank Martin and Charles Stover scored 193 and 186, respectively, but they repeatedly stepped over the foul line during the game.

The Big Bowlers.

The record of 191 on the Olympia alleys, announced in these columns, is in danger every day of being broken. Those nearest to it now are, 185 made by Andrews of the Bowling Club, and 172 made by H. W. Stover of the Bicycle Club.

Afternoon of March 27, on the alleys, there were a number of limbs of the law exercising themselves. Their creditable scores were: W. R. Codington, 148, Chas. Reed, 143, T. J. Carey, 142, and W. L. Hetfield, 131.

Fire Entirely Consumes Mrs. Tracey's House at Westfield.

About 1 o'clock Saturday morning, the large Summer residence of Mrs. Emma L. Tracey, of New York, situated on the East side of Westfield avenue, in that town, was totally destroyed by fire.

The fire department was out in full force, but the flames had gained such headway before the alarm was given, that nothing could stop the conflagration. Fortunately the house was entirely detached from any other buildings.

Mrs. Tracey's son had been staying at the house for a week past, getting it ready for occupancy again.

Where to Hear Him Often.

EDITOR DAILY PRESS:—It may not be generally known that we have, in our midst a minister of the Gospel—the Rev. Edward Love—who, although engaged in mercantile business, is an eloquent and forcible preacher.

Sunday he occupied the pulpit in the Rev. Dr. Ketcham's church, and preached a sermon from the 29th verse of the first chapter of the Gospel of St. John: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." The sermon was full of instruction and comfort to believers; and persuading to non-professors of religion.

It is hoped that Mr. Love may be induced to preach frequently in Plainfield.

Death of Cornelius C. Boice.

The death is announced of Mr. Cornelius C. Boice, a former well-known resident of this city, which occurred at his home, No. 410 DeGraw street, Brooklyn, at a quarter after five o'clock, Friday afternoon, after a week's illness from pneumonia. The deceased was about 35 years of age, and leaves a widow and one child, the former being a daughter of the late Judge Gibby of Rahway.

Mr. Boice was a son of the late Cornelius Boice, whose estate on East Front street still bears his name, and where the deceased's mother now resides. At one time he carried on the drug business in North Plainfield, but subsequently he moved to Brooklyn, where he died yesterday, as above stated.

Reverence, Regret and Sympathy.

At a special meeting of the Plainfield Medical Association, held at the residence of Dr. J. T. Fritts, Wednesday, March 27, as told exclusively in THE PRESS of the next day, the following resolutions concerning the death of the late Dr. C. H. Penfield, were offered and adopted

Resolved, That we offer to his widow and near friends our warm sympathy in this hour of great affliction and sorrow.

Resolved, That we pay our respects to the deceased by attending the funeral in a body; and that this record be engrossed upon the minute book of this Society, and that copies be sent to the widow of the deceased and to the city papers.

Signed,
J. T. FRITTS,

Missionary Day at Trinity Reformed Sunday School.

Sunday was what is known as Missionary Day in the Trinity Reformed Sunday school and appropriate exercises commemorative of the day were held in the afternoon under the auspices of the Missionary Society of the Sunday school, of which Mr. H. S. Thatcher is President; Mr. J. C. VanDyke, Secretary, and Miss Jennie Wyckoff, Treasurer.

Rev. W. E. Honeyman who has been largely interested in missionary work among the Chinese in California was present and delivered an interesting address. Rev. Mr. Honeyman said among other things that about one-third of the population on the face of the globe are Chinese; the Chinese, he said, first invented printing; the mariner's compass; they first discovered the explosive powers of gun powder, and today their silk and Chinaware productions are unequalled.

The speaker told of his own personal experience with Chinamen in California, adding that they were quick and eager to learn, and are very grateful for favors shown them. He stated that about 400 Chinamen had been converted in California through the efforts of missionary work there.

Dr. Penfield's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Dr. Chas. H. Penfield, took place from the First Baptist church Saturday at 3 o'clock, P. M., and was attended by a large concourse of the sorrowing relatives and friends of the deceased. Members of Anchor Lodge, No. 149 F. & A. M., Jerusalem Chapter and other secret societies acted as a body guard en route from the house to the church. At the latter place the casket, of black cloth and oxidized trimmings was deposited at the foot of the altar, while the members of the immediate family, the city physicians and members of the several lodges occupied seats reserved for them in front on the left.

Messrs M. C. VanArsdale, R. E. Munyon and B. T. Barnes sang several beautiful selections, Miss Jessie Utter accompanying on the organ. Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes officiated and paid a fitting tribute to the departed dead, whom he eulogized in appropriate words. The reverend doctor also spoke words of consolation to the bereaved family.

The floral display was moderate and consisted of a beautiful floral anchor from Anchor Lodge, a broken column from Jerusalem Chapter, and a pillow from Mrs. D. Jones. The casket was literally covered with fragrant lilies. The pall bearers were chosen from among the members of the various lodges.

At the close of the service the remains were transferred to Hillside cemetery, where interment was made with masonic honors.

The clerk presented a claim of T. W. Morrison for $89 80, for advertising, not approved by the City Auditor. He explained that Morrison had been notified not to publish certain city official business, which he had printed on his own account, and the bill was presented for that work. The claim was returned with the Council's disapproval.

Mayor Male nominated Dr. Geo. W. Endicott as a member of the Board of Health in place of Dr. C. H. Penfield, deceased. The nomination was confirmed.

The monthly reports of the treasurer and collector were referred to the Finance Committee.

The following persons were declared duly elected firemen: Chas. C. Burnet, a member of Alert Hose Co., and C. F. Glaentzer and R. C. Searing, as members of the Truck Company.

The Overseer of the Poor presented his report, giving a list of the persons who are provided with shelter at the city's expense; also, a list of those entitled to aid from the city. The report was referred to the Alms Committee, and subsequently accepted and approved, Messrs Moffett and Watson voting "no."

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. Erickson from the Committee on Fire and Buildings, submitted the following estimates for improvements on No. 2 Engine house: John Chandler, $3,100; Chas. Gill, $2,100; J. Manning & Son, $1,854; C. E. Johnson, $1,850. The Committee recommended the acceptance of Mr. Johnson's proposition. The report of the Committee was tabled for the present, but later on it was resurrected, discussed at length, and the Committee's recommendation adopted, the Corporation Counsel being instructed to draw up a contract for the fulfillment of the agreement.

The same Committee to whom was referred the several petitions asking for permission to remove frame buildings, or to erect additions, reported in favor of granting the petitions of Messrs A. Love, W. Messerschmidt, H. A. Weber, P. Lynch, Chas. P. Sebring, H. McDonnell, Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes. The petitions were granted.

The Law and Ordinance Committee reported favorably on the communication and petition of Mr. F. E. Miller, and submitted an ordinance, which provides for licensing Summer hotels from May 1, to Nov. 1, at the rate of $250. The report was received, the ordinance read twice and adopted and ordered engrossed and advertised. Mr. Newhall voting "no."

Mr. Moffett, from the License Committee, reported that the liquor license application of Otto Arend was found to be correct, and Mr. Watson moved to grant the same. Mr. Marsh made a motion to lay the application on the table, which was lost. A vote on granting the application was then taken with the following result:

Ayes—Messrs Dumont, Erickson, Gallup, Moffett, Watson—5.

Nays—Messrs Dunham, Jenkins, Marsh, Myers, Newhall, Squires—6.

Mr. Marsh, from the Street Committee, reported on the petition of Mrs. Grace Ann Tingley, for permission to remove a frame building from West Fourth street, to a point on Madison avenue, near Ninth street. He offered a resolution, which prevailed, granting the request, provided, however, that the petitioner first get the written consent of all the property owners along the route over which the building is to pass, the same to be filed with the City Clerk.

NEW BUSINESS.

Mr. Marsh submitted an ordinance providing for the erection and removal of buildings. It was read twice, adopted and ordered engrossed and advertised. The same Councilman presented an ordinance providing for macadamizing certain streets as follows: East Fourth street, from Broadway to angle with Central Railroad; East Fourth street from Park avenue to Peace street; West Fourth street, from Central avenue to Liberty street; Madison avenue, the entire distance to a point about 500 feet South of 9th street; Richmond street, from Front to North avenue. Mr. Erickson's motion to lay the ordinance on the table was lost, and a motion to adopt it on its second reading was also lost, Messrs Dunham, Erickson, Jenkins and Marsh voting in support of the ordinance. Mr. Newhall did not vote.

THE LICENSE FARCE.

Mr. Erickson called up the license application of John E. Beerbower, and made a motion to grant the same. Following is the vote:

Ayes — Messrs Dumont, Erickson, Myers—3.

Nays—Messrs Dunham, Gallup, Jenkins, Marsh, Moffett, Newhall, Squires, Watson—8.

Mr. J. B. Miller's application was then called up, and lost by the same vote. James Connelly's application was the next to be snowed under, only Messrs Dumont and Erickson voting in favor of granting it.

The remaining applications were then taken up in the order named, and all were voted down: Chas. Bock, 9 to 2; Patrick Day, 8 to 3; James O'Neill, 10 to 1; (Mr. Moffett voting for it); John Rafferty, 9 to 2; Joseph Sullivan, 9 to 2; Chas. Smith, 9 to 2; E. P. Thorn, 9 to 2. The hotel application of Messrs Fred Caspar, Jas. H. Force and Jacob Blimm were all lost by the same vote, Messrs Dumont, Erickson and Myers voting in favor of them.

Mr. Erickson submitted a resolution to the effect that the Committee on Finance be requested to present an ordinance for the assessment of taxes for 1889, and in view of the fact that there will be no revenue from licenses for hotels or saloons, that this committee be instructed to provide for a levy of the maximum amount allowed by law for general purposes, such a levy being made necessary by the refusal of the Council to grant such licenses. The resolution was lost, Messrs Erickson, Gallup and Moffett voting in favor of the resolution.

Mr. Marsh spoke at length on the above resolution; he intimated that it was a planned scheme, and if adopted would unnecessarily burden the tax payers.

THE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Council then went into a Committee of the Whole to consider the appropriations for the coming year. The various Committees in the order named, asked for these appropriations: Alms, 4,500; Fire Department, $11,000; Police, Salaries and Election, $9,750; Lights, $8,500; Streets, $10,000; Printing and Stationery, $1,000; rent of City Jail, Council chamber, etc., $865; Board of Health, $800; Election expenses, $800; Sundries, $1,000. These amounts footed up a total of $32,715 for general purposes, which Mr. Dumont said was about $4,000 more than could be collected in the general fund. This led to a lengthy discussion. Mr. Marsh said that at the present time there are certain collectable taxes amounting to $10,000 and $4,000 more which is sure to come in for back taxes. He maintained that without the license fees $20,000 would be sufficient for general purposes, and made a motion which prevailed, that that amount be inserted in the tax ordinance.

Another lengthy discussion took place on the appropriation for Fire Department purposes. Mr. Marsh thought $8,500 was enough. $10,000 was finally decided upon as the amount for fire purposes. Mr. Newhall, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, recommended the adoption of an ordinance fixing these appropriations:

For general purposes	$20,000
Fire Department	10,000
Support of poor	4,000
Library	2,450

The ordinance was adopted on its second reading, and ordered engrossed and advertised.

A motion by Mr. Marsh to appropriate $1,000 for repairs on the streets was adopted.

The ordinance relating to the assessment and collection of taxes, changing the date of assessment from May 20, to May 1, in each year; and also the ordinance designating the streets through which the telephone company's circuit is to run, were taken from the table and passed on the third reading.

A motion by Mr. Erickson to reconsider the vote on the ordinance introduced by Mr. Marsh, providing for macadamizing certain streets, was carried. The ordinance was put on its second reading, adopted and ordered advertised.

The Auditing Committee reported on the claims sent in during the evening, together with a batch of poor claims amounting to $207.44, held by the Alms Committee at the last meeting, all of which were ordered paid.

Council adjourned at 12:10 A. M.

A New Street to North Plainfield.

Messrs William Sandford and Jeremiah Manning have purchased for $10,000 the large plot of land on East Front street running back to the brook on which the ball grounds of last year were located.

They will open a new street along the line between this property and the Harriott homestead. This street will be paved and curbed and cross the brook into North Plainfield. A number of pretty cottages will be built along it.

Mrs. De Revere Dead.

Mrs. Florence A. De Revere, wife of Mr. George B. De Revere, Jr., Proprietor of Taylor's Hotel, Jersey City, died of peritonitis early Thursday morning. She was 19 years old, and was married a year ago in June. She leaves an infant daughter, born Saturday previous. Her funeral took place at 10 A. M. last Saturday from St. Peter's Roman Catholic church, Jersey City.

Mr. Geo. B. De Revere, Sr., was formerly proprietor of the City Hotel in this city. Later he successfully conducted the Park House here, until the rent was raised to such an exhorbitant figure that he was obliged to remove to Jersey City. He is now proprietor of the Union Square Hotel, New York city.

—The result of the parlor sale Thursday afternoon and evening, at No. 17 Crescent avenue, was most satisfactory, considering that the weather was so unpleasant. Run Over by the Cars.

Herbert, the fourteen-year-old son of Mr. Lloyd N[illegible], was run over by the work train of the Lehigh Valley Railroad at New Market between five and six o'clock Tuesday. The boy was riding on the last car of the train, which was backing slowly at the time. He jumped off in front of the moving train, and the whole train passed over him. The injuries consisted principally of a crushed foot at the ankle.

The physician in charge has not yet decided whether amputation will be necessary.

Jealous of Bret Harte.

In the Equity Term of the Court of Common Pleas of New York, Tuesday, began the trial of the suit brought by Clara Louise Folsom, for limited divorce from her husband, John G. Folsom, the Bible House real estate dealer. Cruelty is the alleged ground for the separation.

According to the plaintiff's story, Mr. Folsom has proved himself an insanely jealous man, and has looked upon the most innocent and conventional conduct as cruelty.

Bret Harte, the author, whose family reside in this city, at one time occupied part of the house, No. 45 Fifth avenue, with Mr. and Mrs Folsom. The husband suddenly made up his mind to be jealous of the novelist, and upon one occasion when he found his wife conversing with Bret Harte he threw dishwater in her face.

A bountiful collation was served, and happy good-nights were said in the wee sma' hours of the morning.

REFORM CLUB ENTERTAINMENT.

The "Y's" gave an entertainment under the auspices of the Woman's Temperance Aid Society, in Reform Hall, Thursday, which consisted of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, and stereopticon views. The Hall was well filled with an intelligent and appreciative audience, and barring the antics of a number of overgrown boys seated in the rear, nothing happened to mar the evening's enjoyment.

Mr. John H. French, President of the Reform Club, presided, and announced as the first number on the informal programme, a piano solo by Miss Mabel Potter, which production was warmly applauded. Miss Nellie Morrison followed with a recitation, and Mr. Clifford McGee gave a violin solo, Miss McGee accompanying on the piano. He responded to an encore.

Then came a delightful soprano solo by Miss Amy Green, who, although unaccustomed to appearing in public, showed not the least sign of embarrassment, and sang her difficult piece in a truly commendable manner, and to the delight of all, as was evidenced by the hearty applause she received. Miss Potter was the accompanist.

Miss Morrison recited "Little Joe," and responded to an encore, after which Miss Barber contributed a piano solo. The young lady skillfully manipulated the ivories and wrought out charming music. Her selection was warmly received.

Mr. McGee contributed another violin solo, which brought the musical and literary portion of the programme to a close. Then came the "pleading act"—not for signers to the total abstinence pledge, but for funds to purchase a new piano—and President French told those in the audience to look well into their pockets and not mistake a copper for a nickel.

The usual collection was taken up, and after a series of stereopticon views were exhibited, the audience dispersed.

The entertainment given by the "Y's" was diversified in its nature, and should be repeated at short intervals. This noble band of young women will doubtless receive the support of the public in general, in their efforts to increase the Plainfield Reform Club's membership.

—Work on the new ball grounds at the corner of Richmond street and LaGrande avenue, will commence as soon as the weather will permit.

Mr. W. W. Coriell had the bird house in front of his residence on West Front street, renovated last week, preparatory to the arrival of the martens. The birds are expected to arrive any day.

Their 40th Wedding Anniversary.

On Monday, 25th ult., a genuine old fashioned surprise party was tendered to Mr. and Mrs. Abner S. Coriell, at New Market, upon the occasion of their fortieth anniversary of wedded life. To add to the pleasure of the occasion, besides the gathering of about 70 neighbors and friends, there were present many relatives including a goodly array of children and grandchildren.

The company had not forgotten to provide the concomitants necessary to make it a festive occasion, and the variety and quality of the refreshments would have adorned a wedding feast. Congratulations and good wishes were showered upon the couple in profusion, and at midnight they were left to commence their "forty first honeymoon."

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

The parlors of the Park House were filled to overflowing last Thursday, by members and friends of Unity Lodge, No. 102, K. of P. of this city, the occasion being the sixth anniversary of the organization of the lodge. The committee of arrangements had left nothing undone to insure success in the undertaking, and also to provide both comfort and convenience for the guests, which numbered about 175 persons.

Mr. H. J. Martin, as chairman of the committee, acted as Master of Ceremonies, which position he filled with efficiency. The programme was of a literary and musical nature, and opened with a solo by Mr. Lee of Jersey City, entitled "Anchored;" he also sang "The Song that reached my heart," during the evening.

Miss Allen pleasantly recited two pieces entitled "The Boarding School Miss," and "Peter Longpocket," which elicited warm applause.

Mr. McDonald of Jersey City gave several humorous recitations, and a quartette of male and female voices also contributed some excellent music. A harp solo by a member of the orchestra and a recitation by Mr. Herbert Thatcher brought the musical and literary part of the programme to a close.

Then followed the working of the knife and fork degree, and the guests did ample justice to the bounteous collation spread for them in the spacious dining room. After supper dancing was begun, and continued until the little hours in the morning.

The entertainment was a grand success, and the following gentlemen who constituted the committee of arrangements deserve great credit for the able and efficient manner in which they conducted the affair: Messrs H. J. Martin, Amos Andrews, Frank Humpston, Jos. Hawkins and Frank Putnam.

THE "DUTCH" AGAIN TAKE HOLLAND.

Probably more interest was taken among sportsmen in the live pigeon contest between Mr. Gus. Manitz, of Orange Valley, N. J., and the crack shot of the "Middlesex Gun Club" Charley Smith of this city, (although the former is also a member of that popular organization) which took place Thursday on the shooting grounds of Mr. John Erb, at Newark, N. J., than has occurred in some time among sporting circles.

About a year ago Messrs Manitz and Smith shot a match at 50 live birds each for $50 a side, on the grounds of the Jersey City Heights Gun Club, at Marion, N. J., in which Mr. Manitz scored 42 to Mr. Smith's 41. Charley has been itching for a return match ever since, and so yesterday they had it out as above stated with a result in favor of the German element by a majority of 2, as the following score will show. The return match was for $50 a side, 50 birds each, Hurlingham rules to govern. The following is the score:

MANITZ.

[illegible]
[illegible]

Killed—42, missed—8.

SMITH.

[illegible]
[illegible]

Killed—44, missed—6.

Referee—Oswald Von Lengerke, of Newark, N. J.

Judges—Daniel Terry, of Plainfield, and "Mit" Lindsley, of Hoboken.

In consequence of Mr. Smith's "old reliable" L. C. Smith gun being "disabled" and at the factory for repairs, because a charge of Schultz powder made it so, and also because the rejuvenated "reliable" did not arrive on time to Mr. S., although the maker wired that it had been reshipped on March 19 from the factory, Charley got his "Dutch" up and shot with a strange gun, which, by the way, is a good one and cannot be beaten, (L. C. Smith of course.)

Well, a large crowd assembled at the appointed place, and the friends of both parties were there in numbers to invest their shekels and condolences, but the Smith element found that the best they could do was $10 on Smith and $7 on Manitz, which evidenced that the German element was the favorite from the start. Manitz went to the score and killed his bird in fine style, then Smith killed his first and missed his second—an incoming towerer. Manitz led by one bird for some time.

At the end of the 25th bird the score was even. Then Charley got his shooting clothes fitted to him and made a straight run of 17. Mr. Manitz shot in his usual good shape but after losing the lead made a break by losing two straight. Smith had the hard luck to loose his 46th bird after it had been so hard hit as to drop dead out of bounds. He lost another the same way during the match. Manitz made some very pretty kills, in fact both did, but, on the whole, Smith had the worst luck in having swift and driving birds.

The winner, Mr. Smith, has already a trophy at his home in the shape of a mounted pigeon which won him a match previously with a renowned shooter. He secured the last bird shot by him in yesterday's match, and proposes to have that also mounted in proper shape, as an evidence of his skill with the gun. As the heading implies—the "Dutch" are ahead, and so is the "Middlesex" Club, for they furnish the young shooters to beat the ancients. For a proof of this witness the "Lever-Myers" match the same day where Lever—a member of the "Middlesex"—defeated easily the old-time shooter Moses Myers.

Their New Piano.

On Saturday a handsome new upright piano was placed in Holy Cross Sunday school building, by Mr. F. P. VanArsdale, from the factory of Francis Bacon of New York. For capacity and richness of tone, it cannot be surpassed. Experts have pronounced it as perfect as any piano can be. It is to be used in the Sunday school service and choir rehearsals.

Dunellen's Spring Election.

At the Borough election held at Dunellen, Tuesday, the full ticket was elected, and the appropriations also carried, as follows:

Dunellen Borough Commissioners for 1889, are J. W. Handren, C. Schepflin, P. W. Brakeley, E. J. Swackhamer, John Moynahan, J. P. Apgar, F. J. Richters. Appropriations: For Borough purposes, $800. Additional for roads, $500.

Only Temporarily Settled.

All assertions to the effect that the license question in this city is settled for one year or for one month, are untrue and absurd.

All the applications can be brought up again at the next meeting of the Council, and granted, if there are votes enough that way. Whenever six members of the Council choose to grant a license to sell liquor in this city, they can do so.

EFFECT AND CAUSE.

Ladies Insulted on the Streets and no Arrests Made.

A statement appears in the Elizabeth Herald that since the liquor licenses expired in this city no arrests have been made by the police. Such statement is true, but its heading, "Cause and Effect," puts a false face on it.

Rummers roam unmolested back and forth across the invisible line that separates that part of this place where no liquor is publicly sold, from that part where you can swim in it. If no arrests are made it is not because they shouldn't be. Two ladies coming from the performance at Music Hall, Monday night of last week, were spoken to by two drunken men on one of the main streets. This is the first time, probably, that ladies have been so insulted under the same circumstances since Plainfield was incorporated.

The article in the Elizabeth Herald implies that Plainfield's drunk-and-disorderlies have all reformed and drink no more. This is far from true. Saturday night a gang of them drank themselves beastly, cleaned house for a North Plainfield dealer, cut one another promiscuously with broken glasses and almost hammered a man to death with bottles. Yet there were no arrests.

We are not prepared to deny, however, that some honest men assert that no arrests are made just now because of the effect. But we must say that we do not believe the police would wilfully let the wicked walk in freedom for the sake of bracing up the falsehood that "there are now no arrests because the barrooms are closed, and all are sober"—and carrying their wager home in trunks, it is also said.

The city has seen periods of time when the saloons have all been open and no arrests made for drunkenness, much longer than since the saloons have been closed. What does that prove? Let us all—Chief Garey, the Elizabeth Herald, THE PRESS and everybody—be honest in the discussion of this question.

LEAF FROM LOCAL HISTORY.

The History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Plainfield, New Jersey. From 1821 to 1854.

(Communicated.)

In 1821 and '22 the first Methodist known to have lived in Plainfield, was a woman the wife of a shoemaker, by the name of Martin.

In 1824 John Briant, a young man, came here from Rahway, he was a Methodist, after that two Methodist families named Guion and Spiby came here to reside. These were soon gathered into a class and the Itinerants on Essex Circuit soon began to preach here.

In 1826 the society had so increased as to propose to build a church, but becoming financially embarrassed, and the society reduced to five or six, the matter was given up. The preaching place at this time was John Briant's carriage shop—situated on Front street, now occupied by W. W. Coriell's meat market—and continued to the time of building the first church.

In 1832 a church building was erected where the present church now stands. Size of building 30x40 feet, with a gallery. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Charles Pitman, in the Summer of 1832. Text 87th Psalm 6th verse: "The Lord shall count when he writeth up the people that this man was born there."

In 1833 Plainfield was made a station, J. A. McFarland the stationed preacher. He was an excellent pastor and the society increased to forty members.

In 1834 Edwin L. Janes was pastor. The increase of the society this year was small, but greatly strengthened. This year the Sunday school was established.

In 1835 George S. Wharton was pastor. The membership increased considerably but loss in pecuniary matters counterbalanced it. From 1833 to 1836 J. J. Matthias was presiding elder.

In 1837 Edward Sanders was pastor. Manning Force, P. E. Membership forty-two.

In 1838 Vincent Shepherd was pastor. He was reappointed. In 1839 he was successful in enlarging the congregation and did a good work.

In 1840 George F. Brown was pastor. A number of persons were converted, he also raised money to pay on the church debt.

In 1841 Alexander Gilmore was pastor. W. Burrows, P. E. This year the church was painted.

In 1842 and '43 Benjamin Kelley was pastor.

In 1845 and '46 Lewis R. Dunn was pastor.

In 1847 and '48 James O. Rogers was pastor. He commenced to build the present church July 1, 1847, size 50x65 feet. Dedicated June 27, 1848, by Bishop Janes, assisted by Charles Pitman and C. H. Whitacar. His text was Ezra 6th chapter 16th verse: "And the children of Israel the Priests and the Levites and the rest of the children of the captivity, kept the dedication of this house of God with joy." Cost of church, $10,000. Number of members, one hundred. There was a revival during this year and seventy joined on probation.

In 1849 and '50 William E. Perry was pastor. J. Winner, P. E. The parsonage was built in 1850. There was a revival. The membership increased to two hundred and sixteen including probationers. Conference collection, $111.60.

In 1851 Thomas McCarroll and A. Lippincott were pastors. Members, one hundred and ninety-two. Probationers, nine. Total two hundred and one. Conference collection, $70.00.

In 1852 Robert Givin was pastor. This year the land was bought for the present cemetery. Members, one hundred and forty-nine. Conference collection, $121.10.

In 1854 J. O. Winner was pastor. A great revival of religion. One hundred converted. Seventy-five joined the church. Members, one hundred and eighty.

The above is a copy of a memoranda, furnished me by one of the most active members of the M. E. church in Plainfield, in its infancy, who has long been deceased.

The Cyclone Bowlers.

Tuesday night the Cyclone Bowling Club of this city, was organized at the Olympia alleys. Mr. Roger F. Murray was chosen President, and Mr. Daniel C. Adams, Captain.

The Club has engaged the alleys for the exclusive use of its members, every Tuesday evening. Last night Mr. Slevin started the Cyclone record with 146, but that will soon be broken.

THE M. E. CONFERENCE.

The annual meeting of the Newark Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, opened in the M. E. church, this city, Wednesday. Several hundred clergymen will be present and take part in the proceedings, which will continue up to and including Tuesday, the 9th instant. The presiding Bishop, S. M. Merrill, and his cabinet, have established their headquarters at the City Hotel, and the other members of the Conference are being entertained at the hotels and private residences.

Tuesday the Examining Committee met in Vincent chapel, and examined those who applied for admission on trial. The first, second, third and fourth year candidates were also examined.

Wednesday's session opened with Sacrament of the Lord's Supper at 10 A. M., followed by the organization of the Conference. Mr. James McGee made an address, in which he welcomed the visiting clergymen into the city. Bishop Merrill responded to the address.

Mr. McGee said: "I desire to occupy a few moments in welcoming the brethern of the Conference to Plainfield, which includes North Plainfield, divided only by a small stream of water, but where they have good bridges, and when one gets across the promised land they will find things very different." He then spoke of the hospitality of the many in opening their homes for the members of the Conference. "I am pleased to see you all looking so well," he continued, "and hope you are comfortably quartered. Some, no doubt wanted to get near the church, and some near the Bishop.

"It is twenty-one years ago, (1868) since the last meeting in Plainfield. What has been wrought since that time? Some of you were but children then, fathers and mothers now. Some lives have passed away. In 1868 at the Conference in this city, Bishop Clark presided. Three years later he went to his home beyond the tide. J. W. Wiley elected delegate and four years later a Bishop, has also gone beyond the tide. We are all out on the ocean sailing and will go home beyond the tide in time. In 1868 the church had 265 members, now no doubt double that number."

Referring to the accommodations, Mr. McGee said: "We have done the best we could. Some have to sleep together. I remember Bishop Peck, who was very portly, saying: 'Well, I have one room, and two other brothers have another room. I do not know where you are going to sleep. I am always crowded in one room.' You brothers are all welcome and will have places for at least one week."

The Revs. Yerkes, Richards, Schenck and Lewis of this city's clergy, were present and publically introduced to the members of Conference, who arose in their seats and received them.

The Correct and Popular Styles

For a handsome suit this Spring will be a coat and vest cut from the new flat wale worsted with interwoven birdseye effects in solid colors, or with bright silk threads thrown sparingly through the goods. The new form of easy roll cutaway will be the coat, with silk braid edges and buttons.

The pants should be in light shades of Jaquard weaves with cut or shaded lines both prominent and subdued, but all shades should be of sufficient weight to hang gracefully and keep their form. Then you want a light silk or satin faced oversack in the handsome new colors and you are properly fixed.

George Watson & Co., the popular clothiers of 795 Broad street, four doors below Market street, make a specialty of these outfits, and finish daily all the sizes down to the extreme of half sizes, so that your fit may be perfect and exact. The prices are, for coat $10, vest $3, pants $5, oversack $10, suit complete $18, entire outfit $28, and you should see how handsome they look as they get them up, each garment a perfect copy of the most expensive custom-made work, from which they cannot be told when worn, and they will certainly improve your dress appearance, as you will see when you try them on.

$10, $12, $13, $14, $14.50 and $15 are their prices for their elegant Spring suits in all the new forms, but $13 is the price at which they furnish as handsome a cheviot suit as any merchant tailor can make you to order for $25.

Light and medium shades in pin checks and small shaded plaids, with beautiful subdued colors skillfully woven through the goods, with some indistinct stripes and more pronounced patterns will be the favorites this Spring, but the newest and best styles they can fit you out in for $13 for the complete suit and give you garments cut in the correct shape that cannot fail to please you, handsome, genteel and entirely free from all the usual ready-made look. Take a look through their immense stock before you buy—it may save you future regrets and you certainly will see many handsome cut garments that you cannot find outside of their concern, and when you have on a suit of their clothes you will know that you have the correct cut as laid down by the standard American fashion plate, to which their designers are the principal contributors.—Newark News.

The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

The effect of the first application was magical, it allayed the inflammation, and the next morning my head was as clear as a bell. One bottle has done me so much good that I am convinced its use will effect a permanent cure. It is soothing, pleasant and easy to apply, and I strongly urge its use by all sufferers.—Geo. That's big pay isn't it? Well, that's about what you'll save if you trade with us. HER OPPRESSOR.

HENRY WHITING, schoolmaster, found the above doggerel written on the blackboard in a disguised hand one morning. He promptly erased it and, in the [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible], [illegible].

When he assigned the composition for the following Wednesday afternoon [illegible] was to write a new Psalm of Life. [illegible] of hope? I know you are very young, as am I, for that matter, but I would wait for you as long as Jacob waited for Ruth were I sure you would be mine at the end."

[illegible]

She looked up with the old, daring smile, but there was moisture on her long lashes as she replied:

"He didn't die, after all! You see, there was nothing seriously wrong, and he had no real excuse for dying," and, taking a sponge in her hand, she quickly erased "The Psalm of Death." "No," she added, a moment later, "he didn't die, neither did she, but the chances are that she will suffer the loss of her heels by amputation after he has crushed them as much as he likes."

After four years of waiting, the master, then principal of a high-school, claimed his beautiful, merry-hearted bride, and made her mistress of a little home in the village nearest the country school-house on which she had written doggerels on the blackboard.

CLARA DIXON [illegible].

DRINK DID IT.

A Soldier Who Faced Death on the Field of Battle Only to Meet It in a More Terrible Form.

He was a common soldier of the Confederacy. Somehow he couldn't get on in the world. He had no luck. Standing with his back to the wall he watched the procession of prosperity pass by without even touching the garment of one in it. Then he would sit on the curbstone, his chin in his hands, and think of what? Of the past, presumably; of the future, fearfully. But he did not grumble. His ill-fortune he was accustomed to describe as equivalent to that of the man "who played seven-up all winter and never held a trump until spring, when it was a misdeal." The free drinks he obtained would start a first class saloon in a high-license town; but he was not a "bum." "Standing off" a bar-keeper was always an awkward action with him, and although he had done it ten thousand times, it always required a mental struggle and a suppression of pride. Raised on a farm, he was used to negroes; and what little money came to him was through running a plantation store and overseeing the hands.

Then he would drift to town, spend his cash and [illegible]. He was not lazy, and was willing to do anything honest; but his shabbiness spoke against him, and not even the influence of a stray friend could get him the second job. He was gray and hollow-eyed. To strangers he appeared venerable; to those who knew him he was "old Tom Jones," who could laugh out with an empty stomach upbraiding him and gleefully relate a war joke when the rheumatism was tearing his joints apart. The bar-room of a barrel-house was his sleeping apartment and his bed a chair, a privilege granted him by the proprietor, whose fowls he would "carve" when the ignorant fellow got them in a badly-tangled condition. One free lunch a day kept him from starving.

"Old Jones [illegible] howled up somewhere last night," said the porter to himself. "He's sleepin' like er baby ever' sence two o'clock this mornin'. Hey, old man! Lunch's ready! He never failed ter wake up fer that soun'. I say," shaking him, "it's eatin' time. Get up an' have some soup."

The "shake" threw the old soldier's head backward. It hung over the chair, and rested there.

The coroner's inquest called it heart disease.

CHARLES S. BLACKBURN.

He Was No Beggar.

"Prisoner, you were beastly drunk last night, and disorderly, too. What explanation have you to offer?"

"I couldn't stand prosperity, your honor. That's all."

"What good luck have you been having, Patrick?"

"A fine gentleman gave me a half dollar last night, and it upset me. They usually give only a penny or a nickel."

"Are you a beggar, as well as a drunkard?"

"Neither, your honor. I holds out my hand, sometimes, and rich people drop money in to it. That half dollar upset me."

Eras of Universal Learning.

Learning and the arts flourished among the Greeks, especially under Pisistratus, 537 B. C., and again under Pericles, 445 B. C.; and with the Romans under Augustus, at the commencement of the Christian era. Greek refugees caused the revival of literature, sculpture, painting and wood-carving in Italy, particularly after the taking of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453, and the invention of printing shortly before the Renaissance period. Leo X. and his family (the Medici of Florence) greatly promoted learning in Italy in the sixteenth century, when literature revived in England, Germany and France.

ROCK CREEK.

[Special Correspondence.]

THE Rock creek valley, which Congress has almost decided to take for a National park at Washington, has been famous ever since the capital was founded for its natural beauty. Rock creek is not a large stream, though in many parts of the West it would be called a river. It is in all about thirty miles long, and it empties into the [illegible] an acre, the entire appropriation for the land being a million and a half. It will not cost half of this to make a park immediately available for a pleasure-ground by the building of a few good roads. This being done a great deal of the territory adjoining the park will be available for building sites for people who want to live out of town. The aim is to make this park a rival, if not a superior, of the famous Fairmount Park in Philadelphia, which embraces the valley of the Wissahickon.

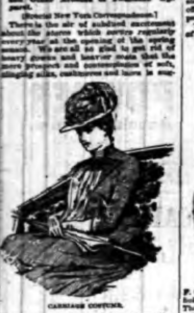
FASHION LETTER.

Shop-Keepers, as Well as Shoppers, Welcome the Dawn of Spring—Spring Hats and What They Are Like—Walking Suits and Other Articles of Feminine Apparel.

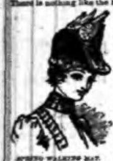
[Special New York Correspondence.]

There is the air of subdued excitement about the stores which occurs regularly every year at the opening of the spring season. We are all so glad to get rid of heavy gowns and heavier coats that the mere prospect and contemplation of soft, clinging silks, cashmeres and laces is suggestive of sunshine and out-of-door life, and so glad are we to welcome back this same spring that we forget or ignore the discomforts of midsummer and our subsequent longing for one breath of cool air. But our past winter has not been so charming from an atmosphere stand-point that we can waste any regret at its departure.



CARRIAGE COSTUME.

And surely the spring is hailed with delight by the shop-keepers. People are bound to buy then if at no other time. There is nothing like the bright, strong sun for bringing out defects and weak places in our wardrobe. We have been cherishing the idea that the gown worn last fall can be resurrected to do at least second duty, but alas! on reinspection there is always something wanting. So we hie us to the store, and woe betide the slender purse, the definite plans and resolutions of economy. They all fly to the winds and we promise to settle it with our consciences and economies some other way. Do we? or is that only one of the foibles of shopping womanhood.



SPRING WALKING HAT.

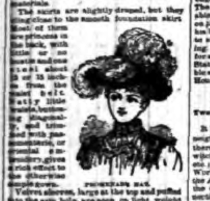
Many of the old favorite shapes in millinery reappear in the early spring styles, though hardly recognizable, owing to the different mode of trimming. Every thing is broader and lower than for the two past seasons. Provision has been made for our changeable climate, and felt and velvet toques and Princess bonnets are trimmed with garlands of the earliest flowers.

A gray felt toque is decorated with a bandeau and half wreath of arbutus blossoms and a moss green velvet of the same shape has clusters of delicate May roses. Flower-crowned bonnets will be worn with early spring costumes for dressy occasions, but for street there are many new simpler styles. The walking hat illustrated here is of fine brown straw turned up very high on one side and faced and trimmed with velvet and natural wings.

The large promenade hat is of black velvet and black ostrich plumes. Rather a trying amount to carry, but successfully done by many of our New York belles. The more pronounced summer styles are not yet on exhibition.

The importer's freshly-opened boxes display an enticing array of new passementeries, applique ornaments and embroideries. These, in different degrees of elegance, are used for all kinds of dresses. Street costumes of the directoire style have a band of embroidery at the foot of the underskirt and the bottoms of the panels, and a rich insertion in the bodice. Reception dresses have the whole front studded with sequins and pendants of various kinds with corsage garniture to match.

Stripes and plaids are still a prominent feature of new, light-weight woolen goods. These are combined with plain materials, and dispute for supremacy with the newer bordered fabrics. It is difficult to imagine any thing more elegantly simple than [illegible]



PROMENADE HAT.

Velvet sleeves, large at the top and puffed into the arm hole, are seen on light weight cloth gowns, with collar and skirt-band to match.

The spring morning carriage toilet shown herewith is of fine gray serge, with jacket fronts of white and gray checked velvet. The plastron is of white bengaline. The hat is gray chip, with clusters of pink roses at the front and back and gray illusion drawn over the whole.

The inexhaustible variety of corsages still goes on surprising the world of fashion. Many new designs are already here, and still more pretty novelties are being evolved for the beautiful summer fabrics.

The smocked blouse in new shades of India silk and surah will continue to be worn with contrasting skirts. Also the tucked and brier-stitched blouse.

Party dresses for very young ladies still incline to the [illegible] skirt of one or more thicknesses, an empire sash and a low corsage that fastens on the short shoulder seam, thus giving a [illegible] back and front [illegible] by buttons or lacing. [illegible] tulle in black and delicate shades is a pretty novelty for this model.

The old, old fashions of our grandmothers are being dragged from the garret as fast as the fortunate possessors of a grandmother can discover them, and one of the revivals of that period is trimming tulle or silk dresses with several rows, in graduated width, of what used to be called [illegible] of old-fashioned soft silk or satin. The effect is really quite pretty.

White is to retain its place as the most fashionable rage for elegant wear. Among the materials offered by our best houses are satin striped bengaline, pompadour silk with silver and gold brocade, mousseline de soie [illegible], faille, [illegible], armure, silk warp Henrietta, India silk, delicately embroidered, crepe de chine, India muslin with delicate tracery of metal threads.

Besides these for evening wear, white crepe and cloth will be much worn for other and less festive occasions.

Grecian draperies are much worn for house dresses. In the back, however, the fronts do not reach from collar to hem, the full back breadths being shirred on to the end of the bodice. Many of the empire dinner gowns have a demi-train, with crossed fronts and straight skirts.

A Bright Policeman.

A policeman in a neighboring city was lately taken before the mayor on a charge of having slept on his post, and failing to extinguish the city lamps at daylight. The policeman admitted the charge, but said that he would make amends to the city for the cost of the extra gas by thereafter extinguishing the lamps enough earlier to more than make up for it.

Grandmother's Laws.

A fond grandmother tells the following story of a grandchild: "As aunt was talking to her of God's laws and of obeying them, [illegible] the child surprised her by saying: 'Well, it is a good deal easier to obey God's laws than it is grandma's—she has so many.'"

No Country in Hers.

"Oh, for a lodge in some vast wilderness, some boundless contiguity of shade!" he exclaimed.

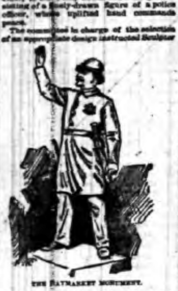
"Excuse me," replied Maud. "If I can't live in the city I won't marry you, Mr. [illegible]. Good day, sir!"

"DEDICATED BY CHICAGO."

The Haymarket Monument Will Be Formally Unveiled May 4—Work Now in Progress on the Statue and the Pedestal—Programme of the Exercises of the Day.

Workmen are busily engaged in molding the figure of the great bronze police officer which will surmount the pedestal now being constructed on the haymarket. The contract calls for the completion of the statue on or before April 15, and the firm having charge of the work anticipate no difficulty in so doing. The design is the one for which the Chicago Tribune gave the prize in a competitive contest. Mr. Frank Batchelder, of St. Paul, submitted a design consisting of a finely-drawn figure of a police officer, whose uplifted hand commands peace.

The committee in charge of the selection of an appropriate design instructed Sculptor F. Gelert to prepare a design with Justice holding aloft the law as the central figure. The model was prepared and submitted. After many discussions the committee decided to accept the Chicago Tribune's design, and Mr. Gelert embodied the idea in an artistic model.



THE HAYMARKET MONUMENT.

The monument will be unveiled Saturday, May 4, the third anniversary of the Haymarket tragedy. The exercises will be simple and impressive. General Joseph Stockton has been appointed to take charge of the exercises. The police will form at the city hall and march to the monument. The original idea was to have a grand procession, in which hundreds of societies would participate, but this was not deemed appropriate. The exercises at the monument will consist of vocal and band music, after which Mr. R. T. Crane, on behalf of the Committee of Twenty-five, will present the monument to the mayor as the official representative of the city. The oration of the day will be delivered by Hon. Leonard Swett.

THE INSCRIPTIONS.

The committee has spent some time in deciding what inscriptions to use around the base of the pedestal. Some were in favor of chiseling only the names of the seven victims of Anarchist hate, others thought that the names of the sixty wounded and maimed should be included, while several were in favor of including the names of the two hundred officers who bravely faced the bomb-throwing mob that fatal night. It was finally decided to place under the statue of the officer these inscriptions:

IN THE NAME OF THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS, I COMMAND PEACE.

On the reverse side:

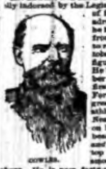
DEDICATED BY CHICAGO, MAY 4, 1889, TO HER DEFENDERS IN THE RIOT OF MAY 4, 1886.

The first inscription is the exact language used by Captain Ward a moment before the explosion of the dynamite bomb. On the adjacent sides of the pedestal will be carved the coat-of-arms of the State of Illinois and the United States of America.

The West Division Street Railway Company has agreed not to run cars on Randolph street during the exercises, and it is calculated that twenty thousand people can stand within range of the speakers' voices.

Congressman Cowles.

Mr. Cowles, who has been so enthusiastically indorsed by the Legislature and people of his State for the adroit way in which he has forced to the front the proposition to remove the tax on tobacco, is a strong figure in the House. He has been a member since 1885, being first elected to the Forty-ninth Congress. He is a tall, athletic-looking man. Nearly all of the hair on his head is in his beard, which is long and patriarchal. The top of his head is as smooth as the shining shore. He is now forty-nine years old, a native of North Carolina and educated in his own State. He entered the Confederate service as a private and came out of the war a Lieutenant-Colonel. He was twice wounded—once through the body, in 1862, [illegible] and has a strong personal following.



COWLES.

DAYS OF WITCHCRAFT.

Two Executions on Gallows Hill, Hartford—The Ducking Test.

It has been supposed that Salem and the neighboring Massachusetts settlements [illegible] witchcraft of those dark years (1691-92, etc.), in which this shocking mania of Old World superstition burst out on this side of the Atlantic. It has even been denied that the delusion ever gained a foothold in Connecticut; and the reports of executions in Connecticut have not only been denied, but have remained to all but close students a very doubtful matter at most. But we suspect, says the Hartford Times, that this is an erroneous view of the subject, and that Connecticut was really not so very much freer from the horrible superstition than her sister colony of Massachusetts bay. A good many old women were popularly accused of a criminal "familiarity with Satan," and some of them certainly were tried for that sin—and, if the truth must be told, there was more than one execution for witchcraft in Connecticut. But the Connecticut delusion, though it seems to have been earlier than the similar misfortune in Massachusetts, never did reach such shocking proportions, nor go to such extremes as that. There were two executions here in Hartford in or about 1662 of two women, Greensmith and Barnes, convicted of witchcraft. The former, we think, made an extraordinary confession after she had been convicted of the truth of her "familiarity with the devil," as the customary charge in such cases was worded. Her confession—which is not fit for print—showed at least a robust and most fertile and peculiar imagination. It is one of the strange features of that witchcraft mania, here and in Massachusetts, that so many of the persons who were convicted were ready to confess the truth of the charge made against them. It must have been an illustration of unconscious psychologizing, by a great wave of surrounding atmosphere of fanatical superstitious delusion which reigned for awhile in those places, and which made the accused wretches really feel that they had done the evil charged upon them, and which their excited imaginations added to and broadened out into the wildest grotesques of monstrous fantasies and absurdities. The scene of the Hartford hangings was on the commanding summit near the head of Vernon street, not far from Trinity College (on that remarkable ridge or dike of trap-rock, naturally placed for a geographical marvel), on top of an [illegible] portion of Connecticut. The locality was for more than a century thereafter known as "Gallows Hill." We do not know that any other witches were hanged there; the delusion seems to have been [illegible], and to have been followed by more executions in Fairfield County—where it was raging later, simultaneously with the mania at Salem—in 1692.

In the Times of August 8, 1850, are several columns of an account of Connecticut witchcraft, written by William L. Stone to the New York Commercial Advertiser, of which he was then the editor, and from which paper the Times quoted it. It seems to be only a part of Stone's long account, and it was obtained when he was editor of the Connecticut Mirror, here in Hartford, from a [illegible] bundle of old manuscripts upon which he chanced to come in looking over a large lot of ancient papers that had been brought to light from the old garret of the Wyllis mansion. Wyllis was the old Colonial Secretary, and naturally would be in the way of having charge of such old papers as these, which were in a separate packet, labeled "Witchcraft Trials," and that was what attracted Colonel Stone's attention and led him to a careful study of the papers. What afterward became of them we know not; but the extracts so fully made by Stone are important as throwing light on the particulars for Connecticut in the history of the witchcraft delusion. The indictments of one Mercy Disborough from the Times of 1850, Colonel Stone judged, were of the customary sort in witchcraft cases; testimony to the mysterious and supernatural character of the persecutions and confessions wrought upon sundry very innocent persons living in that neighborhood. Mercy Disborough was one of a number of witches thereabout—two of whom at least were indicted at the same time—in the only court of oyer and terminer ever organized in Connecticut, to wit: Mercy Disborough and Elizabeth Clawson. Goody Clawson escaped conviction, but Mercy Disborough, of Compo (in the present township of Westport), was not so lucky. Both were bound, head and foot, according to the good old English custom, and pitched head first into the water. The test was that if the accused sank and drowned, it was prima facie case of innocence. If she floated, she was clearly a witch and must be executed. Mercy Disborough and Goody Clawson both floated—"like cork"—nor did one pious servant of the Lord succeed in pressing the former under, albeit he did dutifully and stoutly try. The Clawson woman, however, and we believe one or two other witches, were acquitted; but Mercy Disborough was not so easily let off. She had sorely afflicted divers persons by supernatural pinchings, prickings and still worse punishments. But there was some hitch in the proceedings; there was another trial, and though she was again convicted, it is pretty well ascertained that for some occult reason she never was executed. The Times says, editorially (1850), that one whole family, named Godfrey, in Fairfield County, were hanged for witchcraft, and that one witch was burned in Hartford—but this latter statement was an error. Witchcraft, a mixture of superstition, paganism and distorted Christianity got its definite character from the old doctrine of Satan. In the vain ponderings on the origin of evil, the constitution of the will, and such problems, the superstition of the Middle Ages rose like a foul exhalation and swept over England and Germany. The world was subject not to one God, but two—and "the Devil" had a power only second to that of God, and the power, which had enabled him to seduce Eve, qualified him to lead astray her descendants. There was one wizard to every hundred witches; so the men oftener escaped accusation. But what a frightful time it was—when any malicious or half-psychologized woman could accuse any other of her sex, and have her tried (and very likely convicted) of such monstrous things! It seems astonishing that convictions of witchcraft were reached in England as late as 1736—and executions in Germany almost as late as the beginning of this century.

Biddy Maloney's Brat.

"Whose little girl are you, and where do you live?"

The beautiful eyes were raised from the contemplation of some especially fine mud pies. The kindly voice of the lady stirred the tender but dormant chords of love in the baby heart; but she mutely looked up and never said a word.

"Whose little darling are you?"

"I'm Biddy Maloney's brat, I am. I hain't nobody's darlin' an' nobody's little girl."

"Why, how shocking! You beautiful child, where do you live?"

"Oh no, marm, I guess not. You ain't goin' ter tell Biddy Maloney her 'good-for-nothing brat' is makin' mud pies. You can't ketch me that way. I know my biz."

The lady passed on. Biddy Maloney's brat was incorrigible.

"Betcher life, Lige Lupkins. Betcher life there's snow place like home. It's a cold day for you," and she swiped him over the head with one of her own home-made pies.

Jeffersonian Simplicity.

"Papa, what is Jeffersonian simplicity?"

"That, my son, is baby food for weak politicians whose stomachs are soured on the present."

"How do they use it, papa?"

"They use it as poultices for weak minds."

Spring Disorders

Shattered nerves, tired brain, impure blood, debilitated system, all are the natural outcome in the Spring. A medicine must be used, and nothing equals Paine's Celery Compound. We let others praise us—you cannot help believing a disinterested party.

Brigadier-General W. L. Greenleaf, Burlington, Vt., writes: "I have used Paine's Celery Compound on several occasions and always with benefit. Last spring, being very much run down and debilitated, I commenced taking it. Two bottles made me feel like a new man. As a general tonic and spring medicine I do not know of its equal."

"I have used two bottles of your Paine's Celery Compound, and it has given entire satisfaction as an appetizer and blood purifier."

T. L. BERNER, Watertown, Dakota.

Paine's Celery Compound

is prescribed by physicians, recommended by druggists, endorsed by ministers, praised by users, and guaranteed by the manufacturers, as a spring medicine which will do all that is claimed for it. Use it this spring, and see how quickly it tones you up.

Purifies the Blood.

Full accounts of wonderful cures made by Paine's Celery Compound after other medicines and the best physicians had failed, sent free. There's nothing like it.

CATARRH [illegible]

THE EXILE IN CANADA;
Or, The Boodler's Lament.

I wandered to the river's bank
 And looked across to where,
Upon the other side, I saw
 The lights reflected there.
And, as I gazed, a longing came
 To reach that place once more,
And walk upon the good old soil
 I'd often trod before.

Last night I dream'd that once again
 I saw the old, old home—
Where oft, when I was but a lad,
 My wandering steps did roam—
I'd crossed unto the other side
 Of this wide, running stream;
Alas! I woke in full delight,
 To find it but a dream.

Oh, could I but retrace the years!
 And backward go once more,
I would not then be cursing fate
 Upon this barren shore.
What recks it that I have the gold
 Wherewith to pass all time?
Since I must while away the years
 In this most wretched clime!

Ye stars that sh'ne so bright to-night,
 In yonder vault above,
How merrily ye're looking down
 On friends that I do love.
Would I were there; but yawns a gulf,
 Wide as eternity!
The sheriff's arm, the broken trust,
 Doom me to misery!

So, here an exile I must stay,
 On this cold, barren land;
No sight of home, or kindred dear,
 No grasp of friendly hand;
With gnawing thoughts of keen remorse,
 Like specters, ever near;
Nor one kind smile, nor welcome glance,
 My lonely life to cheer.
—H. McGrath, in America.

HIS NOTIFICATION.

How Thornton Executed His Commission.

"She'll have to go; ain't no way out o' that. She'll have to skip," said Dave Kinney. He squinted in a cross-eyed manner at the cracker-crumb on his tawny, scraggy beard, and transferred it carefully to his mouth. There was a wedge of cheese on his left knee. When the Fence Corners School Board—originally Fossett's Corners, but thus aptly abbreviated—held a meeting, it was, by general agreement, in old Hanks' grocery, where crackers and cheese, and mayhap a herring, might relieve its tedium. But to-night there was an alleviating interest.

"About the size of it," said Silas Saunders. He preferred tobacco, and rolled a quid under his tongue. "This ain't no place for her here. Why, I wouldn't answer for the consequences if she staid; there ain't no tellin' what might happen, ner what devilitry them boys might be up to. Look at Corny Rourke, six foot two or three if he's an inch, and chuck full, chuck full, chuck full! He's always be'n the one to put the teachers out, and there ain't no doubt but what it's his idee this time. Barricadin' the school-house right out bold first day o' school; now, who but Corny'd 'a' thought o' that?"

There was something of contemplative admiration in his tone.

"Goin' to be done, whoever's doin' it," said Kinney, exploring his cracker-bag. "Goin' to git in at eight o'clock to-morrow mornin' an' shut up the door and fasten the windows, and any teacher that gits in 'll have to git in through the key-hole or a crack; what they said."

He had told it before; He had called the meeting for the purpose of telling it. But it was interesting to dwell upon.

There was an impressive silence.

"Wall, we'll have to give her notice. You're jest the one to do it, Thornton—eh?" Saunders observed to the third member of the board. He was himself uneasy. "She got along fust-rate, summer term," he added. He appeared to feel a vague and wholly impotent regret. "Needs the money, should judge."

"She needn't 'a' made no calculations to teach no winter term here—not to Fence Corners," Kinney responded, with some contempt. "If there hain't be'n a winter for five years but what there's be'n a rumpus, and gener'ly school shut up, w'y, she needn't 'a' looked for there goin' to be."

It was unanswerable, but the store-keeper entered a weak suggestion over his motley counter.

"I should think that gang ought to be broke up," he said.

He expected no rejoinder, and got none. The School Board's attention centered upon no such whimsical irrelevancy.

"Reckon you're the one to notify her, Thornton," said Saunders, again.

He wriggled uneasily on his stool.

Thornton sat motionless. Whether in fact or by a trick of the ill-burning lamp on the counter, his good-looking face with its heavy, light moustache, appeared pale. He sat with his arms crossed on his knees and his eyes on the floor, silent.

"Jest so," said Kinney, with an air of impartial decision. "You can git it off better 'n Saunders or me, Thornton. You're a better lookin' man, anyhow, and you're better rigged up," he concluded, with politic amiableness.

They made an attempt at a careless dismissal of the subject. Kinney got up and threw his cheese rind in the stove. Thornton passed his hand over his mouth and swallowed hard.

"You can jest put it easy," said Kinney, encouragingly. "You can tell her jest how 'tis, and how it's for her own good, and ain't to be put off ner avoided. You can tell her she done first-class, summer term. W'y you can tell her jest what you're a-mind to," cried Kinney, magnanimously.

Their colleague arose. He was a tall and powerful young fellow, but there was an odd laxity in his movements now as he went toward the door. He held his hat-brim to his lips, too, and turned his face away from the light. Hanks stared after him till the door closed.

"I s'pose you've found out that Jim Thornton's about the bashfulest feller in town, ain't you?" he queried.

There was no response.

"And you've prob'ly suspicioned, same as other folks, that he's kind o' sweet on the school-ma'am, or would be if he dast!" pursued the store-keeper.

The School Board was silent.

"Wal," he concluded, with a grin, half of disgust, half of admiration, "you couldn't 'a' hired me to be'n that mean to a yeller dog—not to a yeller dog!"

* * * * * * *

Thornton made his way up the road through a warm and lightly falling early snow that whitened and softened and beautified it, dark as it was from the infrequency of buildings and bushes with the frozen ground. He forgot to put his hat on till he met a man in a wagon, who stared at him. His face and hair were damp with melted flakes. He went slowly, almost creepingly, for there was in his heart a terrible, sinking dread of what he must do. It was almost more than he could master.

Where was she? Bissel's; he knew she boarded at Bissel's and it was not far; he could see the light through the snow-laden trees. The pain at his heart was all but physical; he winced, and kept his hand on his nervous mouth; there was a twist in his eyes, and it grew into tears. He was not surprised at them, nor ashamed of them; he wiped them off mechanically with his rough, strong hand. He did not know whether they were from pity of her or of himself; he knew not which was the stronger within him; he was not clearly conscious of either, but of a dull unhappiness such as he had never known.

He looked down at his clothes with faint shame; they were not his best ones. He had a ready-made suit at home, but these his mother had made. He wished they looked better. The light in Bissel's window cast his long shadow on the white ground. It wavered there, shrinking and lingering; then it pushed on and up to the door.

It was not the custom in Fence Corners to rap; it would have been looked upon as a useless formality. He stepped into Bissel's large, scantily furnished, rag-carpeted best room.

He gasped as he stood there. He had vaguely hoped for a little reprieve, but she sat there by the lamp, alone, bending over some work. She rose at his entrance, and came forward a little to offer her hand; but he did not see it, and she dropped it back in awkward haste.

"Won't you take a chair?" she said.

She brought one forward. Thornton sat down. He dropped his hat as he did so, and picked it up with a red face. Then he sat still. He would have tried to speak, but he knew he could not; his tongue felt thick and immovable.

"It's snowing, ain't it," said the school teacher; she bore the marks of diffidence herself in her timorous voice and look.

Thornton nodded; it was all he could do. He stared at her fixedly, almost vacuously. [illegible] and strove to anchor herself to something. Once he had spent an evening at Bissel's, on the occasion of a sociable, and taken her hand in one of the games; once he had overtaken her, in a wagon, on her way to school and given her a lift. That was all. He thought it might have been less hard for him if there had been something more, but that was all his morbid self-distrustfulness had allowed him.

The ticking of a clock on a corner-stand filled the silence. It was a ruffled, nickel clock, and it ticked so loudly as to force itself upon them.

"That's my school-clock," said the teacher. "I am all ready for to-morrow. There are my books over there with it and the register."

The school director dropped his miserable eyes to the faded stripe in the carpet at his feet, but he did not see it; his hat shook with the trembling of his hands.

"I've be'n thinking how many I'll have, likely," the school-teacher went on. His misery imparted itself to her in a degree of nervousness, and she let her work drop. "I had twenty-five this summer; there's always more winters, ain't there?"

He managed to say yes. His eyes were wandering about the room now, his lips parted as if for air. He saw a new pane in the window, clumsily puttied—a camphor bottle left on the melodeon—a break in the cane seat of a chair—a small tub filled with white asters still in bloom. He continued looking at these.

"They're real late, ain't they?" said the girl. "They're mine. I potted 'em myself and I guess they'll last best part of the winter; I've heard they will, took care of. Do you want one?"

She put down her work and went and picked one. Then, with a shy laugh, she took her scissors and went back to them.

"May be your mother'd like a few; she hain't got 'em, has she?" she said.

She made a bunch and tied it with her black thread. Thornton watched her; a slight girl in a cheap and well-worn dress, her dark hair in a girlish braid, and her eyes mild. Who she was, but who shall tell what he was! His agony rose, culminated as she turned to him; he clutched his hat till its stiff brim cracked. She was coming toward him with the flowers.

"There, may be she'd like a few," she repeated, faint-heartedly; but he did not hear her. He felt his face aflame like fire, and a choking in his throat. He struggled to speak, and did make an inarticulate sound, at which she looked at him in wonder. He looked up at her pitifully—and then fell stumblingly on his knees at her feet and buried his face in her skirt, and groping for her hands, pulled them down till they pressed his throbbing head and rested there, her happy, wondering tears falling upon them.

"Bashful!" said Dave Kinney to Hanks, the store-keeper. "I'd like to know what's your idee o' bashfulness. W'y, Jim Thornton walked out o' this store that night and up to Bissel's straight as a string, and told that school-teacher that, owin' to circumstances that he didn't have no control over, she couldn't have the school this winter, ner likely there couldn't nobody else neither, but if it'd be any consideration to her, she could have him; told her that right up and down, and didn't make no bones of it. If Jim Thornton's bashful, w'y, the feller that ain't's what I'd like to see."—Emma A. Opper, in Leslie's Newspaper.

AT SECOND HAND.

A Man's Passion for Books and a Boy's Passion of Barter.

"There used to be one man," said the second-hand man to a Lewiston (Me.) Journal reporter, "who came down to see me very often. He hasn't been around for a month, and I think must have moved away. He was a queer chap, and no mistake about it. He worked in the Auburn shoe factories, and, I've heard said, made good wages. But he had a liking for old books, and about every week he visited my library out there in the corner in search of something new that was old. His great hobby was books pertaining to agriculture. If he could get hold of any of those Board of Agriculture reports he was just happy. To me they are dry reading, but with him they were food of keen relish. I guess he's moved off now, but he must have a mighty collection of old books with him. He has bought enough in my store to supply all the farmers in the State with agricultural statistics."

At this point in the conversation a small boy came in. He had in his hand a pair of skates. He wanted to trade them for a sled. "Do you know that every boy is a born trader?" asked the man of stories, after the boy had gone out. "Yes, sir, by the time a boy is five years old he begins to trade and dicker and swap. It's general, and I never saw a boy who wasn't so inclined. They'll dicker any thing. I have a chance to see something of it. Before ice and snow came they were all crazy for marbles, and they'd swap any thing for them. Later it was skates they wanted, and now the skating has gone they're trying to swap their skates for sleds. So it goes. Every thing in its season. It's fun to watch them maneuver. Some of them are pretty bright fellows and make some sharp trades."

NEW YORK LETTER.

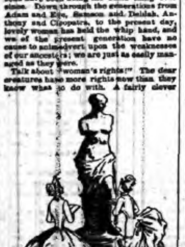
An Interesting Chat Concerning Women of To-Day.

Women of Ancient and Modern Times—A Philosophical Discourse on Feminine Beauty—Advancement of the Sex—Women of the Future.

[Special Correspondence.]

I HAVE been devoting considerable of my valuable time of late to the study of feminine beauty. I do not mean feminine beauty as seen in individual instances, but beauty in the abstract as exemplified by the gentler sex. I do not suppose that any male reader will attempt to controvert the broad statement that a truly beautiful woman is the loveliest object in existence. We have Biblical authority for the fact that after the Creator had finished every thing else He made woman as His crowning work. Adam immediately fell upon his knees before her and did exactly as she bade, and Adam's sons and grandsons have been doing the same thing ever since. Down through the generations from Adam and Eve, Samson and Delilah, Anthony and Cleopatra, to the present day, lovely woman has held the whip hand, and we of the present generation have no cause to animadvert upon the weaknesses of our ancestors; we are just as easily managed as they were.

Talk about "woman's rights!" The dear creatures have more rights now than they know what to do with. A fairly clever woman can wield more influence, political, social or moral, than ten men, if she only knows how to use her power. And as women are becoming better educated, are taking a broader interest in public matters, in literature and art, I do not wonder that mediocre men are beginning to cry out against the competition. We have only to glance at history to see what may be the legitimate outcome of this improvement in women. Civilized man stopped advancing some hundreds, perhaps thousands, of years ago. There were as great statesmen, philosophers, and as polished gentlemen in China three thousand years ago as there are in America to-day. Egypt, Greece, Rome before Christ and Europe in the Middle Ages produced men as able in every way as the men of to-day. But the women of those ages and countries never had a fair chance to compete with the men. They were kept at home, illy educated and but little regarded except as toys to enliven a leisure hour.

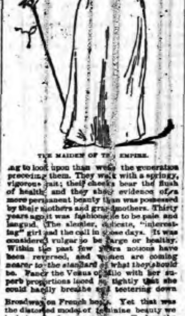


THREE STYLES.

When a woman of those times had courage to break down the barriers of custom which hedged her about she was regarded as a marvel. It is only within the past one hundred years that women really began to make any progress, and, considering the generations of prejudice and past suppression she has had to overcome, what remarkable progress she has made! A few years longer and it will not be a question of "women's rights," but of men's rights. They can accomplish now, almost, any end they strive for, indirectly; what will it be when they have the power to enforce their purposes directly!

Which observation leads me back to my original subject of woman's beauty. Brains being the same, a beautiful woman has ten times the influence of a homely one, and I have made the alarming discovery that women, as a sex, are growing more beautiful as well as more brainy. Walk up Broadway any pleasant afternoon—and there is no better place in the world to see beautiful women than this same Broadway—and you will realize the truth of my statement.

The younger generation of women are more graceful, better formed, more pleasing to look upon than were the generation preceding them. They walk with a springy, vigorous gait; their cheeks bear the flush of health, and they show evidence of a more permanent beauty than was possessed by their mothers and grandmothers. Thirty years ago it was fashionable to be pale and languid. The slender, delicate, "interesting" girl had the call in those days. It was considered vulgar to be large or healthy. Within the past few years notions have been reversed, and women are coming nearer to the standard of what they should be. Fancy the Venus of Milo with her superb proportions laced so tightly that she could hardly breathe and teetering down Broadway on French heels. Yet that was the distorted model of feminine beauty we had twenty-five years ago. To-day the girls walk, ride, row, play tennis, yes, and box and fence, too—and they can't do these things trussed in stays and perched upon three inches of heel set under the middle of the foot. There has been a gradual yet sure evolution in the matter of fashions as well as in education, and fashion has had more to do with it than any thing else.

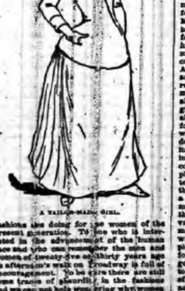


THE MAIDEN OF THE EMPIRE.

The vagaries of that same fickle goddess during the past twenty-five years have been something wonderful, and it is still more remarkable that women have been willing to submit to the dictation. Just a few, among my bald-headed readers, will remember the crinoline which made such immense hips that, with the puffed-out skirts and long, tight waists, a woman looked like a peg top stuck into a pincushion. In those days a woman took up more room in an omnibus or on the sidewalk than half a dozen men, but the far-spreading, inflexible hoops seemed to keep the men at a distance, and that was the reason, I fancy, that the crinoline was discarded and another fashion in figures was adopted. We have passed through the various gradations of the "Grecian Bend," the "eel-skin" gown and all the distortions of figure and sense until now we are threatened with a revival of the costumes of the First Empire, a style which, as far as I can make out, consists of almost nothing at all. It is hardly suited to our climate, but it is certainly more classical in its lines than any thing which has preceded it. We are getting used, at our dinner parties and at the opera, to see women scantily clothed—above the waist—and the bathing dresses at the summer resorts have been steadily growing more and more decollette at the other end.

But it requires a good figure to stand the laconic costumes of modern times, and perfect circulation and exercise are requisite for a good figure. High-heeled shoes must be discarded because they throw all the work upon the muscles of the front of the leg and after a time the calf moves around in front, to the utter destruction of all symmetry. The same is true of the upper portion of the body; a woman who laces tightly can not have a fine neck and shoulders, the circulation is cramped and their development is arrested. Go to the opera and you will see the results of this cramping process. Women with great red arms which look as if fresh from the wash-tubs, and women with lean and parchment-covered neck and shoulders bare them ruthlessly to the gaze of an unsympathetic public. I like brevity, but judgment should be used, and unless a woman has really fine neck and arms she should beware how she uses too much economy in making her waists. I always have a wild yearning to drop a plate of ice-cream down the spine of some more than usually uncled dowager, or to splash my champagne on her arms. Perhaps it is inherent depravity in me which prompts such desires, perhaps it is because I know that the uninviting anatomy should be covered with something.

It is in the modern "tailor-made" girl that you will see the finest development of physical womanhood and of mentality, too, for that matter, despite the jeers of the newspaper wits. A healthy mind in a healthy body is what higher education, more sensible amusements and less idiotic fashions are doing for the women of the present generation. To one who is interested in the advancement of the human race and who can remember the men and women of twenty-five or thirty years ago an afternoon's walk on Broadway is full of encouragement. To be sure there are still some traces of absurdity in the fashions and we can not help wondering why women do this or that. The high hat at the theater is an absurdity and a vulgarity which is surely doomed, and the big bustle is shrinking most satisfactorily. A few years ago they were much larger than they are now, and then at times they would fetch loose from their moorings and slew around to leeward, or get unhitched in some way and would wobble in an alarming fashion that led the horrified observer to fear that the fair dame was about to part with that portion of her anatomy. But the dumuers, as they call it now, has come to quite moderate proportions and a fashionable woman is no longer obliged to perch sidewise on the edge of the seat when she sits down.



A TAILOR-MADE GIRL.

How they endured the tortures of such costumes at any time is puzzling enough. But women are strange creatures and their motives should not be too closely scanned by the coarser masculine mind. Men often flatter themselves that women dress for their approbation or to compel their admiration. But this only shows man's conceit and ignorance. As a matter of fact women have a profound contempt for man's opinion on the subject of dress, and so far as I can judge, the dear creatures array themselves for the purpose of attracting or exciting the envy of other women. The handsome toilettes seen at matinees and lunch parties are a proof of this. Fashion is in any event a curious thing and it must be some one more astute than I to account for its vagaries. In the meantime men deplore, and writers satirise the extremes and the cynical old bachelors discuss the whole question, in the smoking-room, over their cigars and cognac.

The fact is, that unless a man has carefully studied the matter, he knows very little about it. And after he has studied it, it becomes a greater mystery to him than ever before.

GOLD IN ARIZONA.

Rich Discovery of the Yellow Metal Recently Made in That Territory.

The miners, Harry Watton, Robert Stein and Michael Sullivan, are all well known in Arizona, having been engaged in searching for nature's hidden wealth for many years, says a Harrisburg (A. T.) correspondent. After monumenting their respective claims the two former returned to camp to prepare the proverbial beans, bacon, bread and black coffee on which the prospector thrives, while Sullivan lagged behind on the hillside. Pretty soon he saw a curious-looking stone. It was about five inches long, three inches wide and an inch thick, and though dark in color it had yellow streaks and ridges intersecting on its surface that made his heart give a sudden jump. He stooped and picked it up. It weighed about three pounds, and he saw at a glance that it was solid gold. He considered that to be a pretty fair afternoon's work, in view of the fact that gold is worth $301 45 a pound, so he returned to camp and partook of his beans in silence. After supper, as the three lit their pipes and drew around the camp-fire in the gathering darkness, he drew out his gold specimen. By the flickering firelight they recognized it at once as the royal metal, and were wild to know where he had found it. But Sullivan was astute. He had not picked it up on one of his own claims, but nevertheless he wanted "some of the pie" himself, so he said: "Look here, fellows! We three are out in these mountains all by ourselves, and I say let us hang together. If you will both agree to consolidate our nine claims and work as partners I will show you where I found the gold." The consolidation was made, and it then turned out that the gold had been picked up on Watton's claim, within six feet of a hole he had dug that very afternoon. He had named the claim the "Gold Hill," and it did not belie its name.

The next morning the three fortunate men, already millionaires in imagination, repaired to the spot, and during the next two or three days picked up on the surface of the ground nearly forty thousand dollars in gold in lumps of from twenty pounds downward. It was several weeks before the startling news reached the city of Phoenix, the nearest point of supply, but when it did come and spread onward to Tucson and Tombstone, and into California, an immense rush of prospectors and miners commenced, that is still increasing. Hundreds of mining claims have since been taken up, for this district, so long unnoticed, turns out to be absolutely impregnated with the precious metals, and within a radius of ten miles of the bonanza numerous large bodies of gold, silver, copper and argentiferous galena ores are being assiduously worked. Of these, however, no explicit account can be given as yet, as no final results have been obtained.

FIGHTING WOMEN.

To Them England Owes Much of Her Greatness and Strength.

In warlike times when battle was the business of life and victory over a foe the highest honor that could be had, when home in the true sense there was none, and when castles were less houses for pleasant living than strongholds to shelter raiders and resist assault, women were as heroic as their age. If they were not so accurate in their aim as the archers, of whom it was said every English bowman "bore under his girdle twenty-four Scots," they knew how to man the ramparts and defend the bridges as well as their lords themselves. Womanliness in the bower, dignity in the hall, courage in the castle—that was the whole duty of these noble women of a rude but manly age, and to their example, their influence and their shaping power as mothers England owes much of her greatness and half of her strength. Letting Boadicea pass as an example of the feminine fighting blood, we find in Dame Nichola de Camville an early specimen of the war-like political woman. She took the royal side in the famous war with the Barons and held Lincoln Castle against Gilbert de Gaunt, first for King John and afterward for Henry III., till the battle called Lincoln Fair broke her power. The beautiful Countess of Salisbury, she who was so ardently beloved by the third Edward, was another instance of feminine daring, in her case coupled with the loveliest and most gracious sweetness. Black Agnes was again a heroine, of the virago type, and Queen Philippa, Queen Margaret, and others of the same kind honored their adopted nationality by their courage and devotion. Meaner women were as brave. In a skirmish at Naworth (1570) Leonard Dacres had in his army "many desperate women who there gave the adventure of their lives and fought right stoutly." And at the end of the last century and the beginning of this about half a dozen women on the whole enlisted as privates in the army, and "pulled their pound" as gallantly as men. Miss Jennie Cameron, Scotch and Jacobite, was another example of the fighting women with whom nature had stumbled and spoiled the original design.

AMERICAN APPLES.

They Have Gradually Become an Important Article of Export.

The American apple has become such an important item in English markets that the British fruit grower has been roused and the British economist has been stirred into speech and action may follow. A writer in the London Horticultural Times (Mr. Sampson Morgan) furnishes a mass of figures, from which it appears that, in 1888, 811,410 barrels, containing 2,434,230 bushels of apples, were imported into England from this country, in addition to thousands of tons brought from various parts of the continent. England is paying out over $40,000,000 a year to foreign fruit-growers, and more than $500,000,000 yearly for imported food products—more than half of which, Mr. Morgan contends, could easily be raised at home. The value of imported fruit was four times greater in 18[illegible] than in 1845, and has grown to be nearly ten times as much in 1888. And yet with all this increase of supply, prices have not fallen. As the Kent farmers have realized handsome profits on apples, and on the nearly-related fruit, pears, the further development of the industry is urged. The writer also insists on the superiority of the English fruits over the same varieties raised abroad. On this point there is opportunity for discussion, but every observing man will echo the writer's appeal that the great demand for fruit be utilized by extending its culture so that a half of the population, instead of being driven into the already congested cities and towns, shall find employment in fields and orchards. It is interesting to note that the writer insists on the superiority of the home-grown fruit as a reason for increasing the product, and makes no appeal for "protection" against the fruit raised in countries where, for various reasons, the cost of growing and marketing is less. It is stated by the same writer that grapes, as well as pears and apples, can also be produced in this country for less money than in England. The suggestion that fruit raising be pushed in order to give healthful employment to thousands of men who now pine in cities is as pertinent in the New as in the Old England.

WOMEN WHO WORK.

A Picture of Their Industrial and Social Conditions.

The Results of the Labors of Two Women Who Have Interviewed Seventeen Thousand Female Workers in the Chief Cities of This Country.

One of the last acts of the late Congress was to authorize the publication of the fourth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, which is devoted entirely to the condition of working-women in the United States. The compilation of the statistics and information embodied in the volume, says the New York Sun, are due to the endeavor of two young women, working with slight assistance from one man, under the direction of Mr. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, and with the purpose of presenting an authentic picture of the industrial condition of working-women of the day, to furnish a valuable addition to the history of the times which should be absolutely true, and to gather data for its scientific bearing upon social problems. When Mr. Wright was in charge of the Bureau of Statistics he conceived the idea of making a report of the working women of Boston with respect to their home as well as shop conditions, and to this end he had 1,000 representative working-women, including the semi-professional women, interviewed personally. At his appointment as Commissioner of Labor by President Arthur he determined to extend his investigations to other cities, and accordingly all the representative cities from New England to the Mississippi river, and as far south as New Orleans, as well as the large cities on the Pacific coast, where working-women are congregated in large numbers, have been visited and the condition of their working people very thoroughly looked into and accurately reported. The gathering of this information required the greatest tact and sagacity, for working-women are, as a rule, extremely reserved, too proud to confess their actual needs and deprivations, suspicious of interviewers and antagonistic to any thing that suggests charitable interference, fearful of compromising themselves, and sometimes intimidated by employers and superintendents. In spite of all this, between 17,000 and 18,000 women have been interviewed and visited not only in the shops but in their homes, and the bulk of the work has been accomplished by the two women to whom it was relegated.

They have together visited Boston, Brooklyn, Buffalo, Newark, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Paul, and St. Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New Orleans, Atlanta, Savannah, Charleston, New York, Indianapolis and Richmond, remaining from three weeks to five months in each city, according to the number of the working women and the difficulty in obtaining the desired information. They would go into a strange city alone, pick up such information as they could concerning its industries by consultation of the census and questioning the people they met, and then proceed to interview the employers, and if possible to gain admittance to the workrooms. This was frequently denied them, and the addresses of the women also refused. Then they would quietly visit another establishment, and, sooner or later, were sure to find some one who had worked in the factory or shop to which they had been refused admittance, and who could tell them its condition, as well as the addresses of some of its employes. Frequently, too, they found the employes and employers arrayed against each other in most hostile relations, and to gather the desired information from both sides required infinite tact and diplomacy. The days were thus devoted to the collecting of information, the evenings to making out the written reports of the same, and Sundays were spent in visiting the working people at their homes. Sometimes in interviewing a trade they would visit every house in a street, for operatives in the same branch of labor are inclined to group themselves in the same neighborhood. Their interviews consisted of learning the nativity, age, conjugal relations, age at which work was begun, effect of work upon health, wages and hours, work previously done, if differing from that engaged in at the time, from every woman they visited. From nine to ten per cent of employes in a shop or factory were visited. When once the working-women became satisfied that their inquiries came with kindly rather than charitable or reformatory motives, they talked freely and intelligently on the subject and allowed the figures to be copied from their little pass-books in which was the actual amount of wages they received after all fines and other expenses demanded by the employers had been subtracted. Employers frequently allowed their pay-rolls to be copied, and from the two accounts the correct average will be made.

One of these remarkably bright and interesting young women, who is from the South and requests that her name be withheld, says as a result of her two years' investigation:

"While I find many serious evils in the working-woman's condition, I also find a brighter side than is popularly believed to exist. Women work under a great disadvantage from want of proper training. The less desirable portions of the work are assigned to them, and an infinite number of influences besides the capacity of employers affect their wages. Immigration, while it tends to build up the country, reduces the rate of labor very materially. The unfortunate conditions under which women work and amid which they live are often owing to the meanness of landlords in refusing to make needed repairs or build sanitary tenement houses. But I also find working-women on a much higher plane than they were ten or fifteen years ago, and many of them attained independence by their unaided labor. Where there were formerly but 25 occupations open to women there are now about 400 in which money may be earned. I find that many of them go to work at fourteen, live well, dress well, and sometimes save. Families in which there are many daughters live very nicely off the aggregate income, very often, especially among foreigners, owning the houses in which they live. They invest their savings in a variety of ways in different places. In St. Paul they buy lots and speculate in real estate; in Indianapolis they invest in the building and loan association, and in Boston put their funds in the savings banks. As regards their moral condition, it compares very favorably with that of women in other walks of life, and considering their exposure and temptations, I should call it better. They are a heroic band, constantly exhibiting evidence of brave endurance, unparalleled devotion and patient self-sacrifice, and the only difficulty with them is that they do not know their own value and can not lay aside personal considerations for the sake of the welfare of the masses."

THE AMERICAN BOY.

His Irreverence as Well as His Generosity Illustrated by Two Anecdotes.

J. T. Trowbridge, in an article in the North American Review, both criticises and praises the American boy—criticises his irreverence and disobedience, praises his conscientiousness and generosity when these qualities are appealed to in a way to bring them out. To illustrate he tells two clever stories, which he says are true. The first illustrates disobedience and disrespect, and shows how American parents are apt to encourage them. "It is Sunday evening," and a western farmer is smoking his pipe on the back porch, while young Josh, his namesake and heir, is playing with the dog in the yard. Old Josh takes his pipe out of his mouth and remarks that it is time for young Josh to go for the cows. The junior makes no reply, but keeps on teaching Coonie to give his paw. Then the senior repeats his observation, to which he manages to give a little more of the tone of a command.

"'I tell ye, Josh, ye must go for the cows.'

"'I don' wanter,' grumbles young Josh.

"'Quit yer foolin' an' go along!' says old Josh.

"'I shan't,' snarls back the junior.

"'I tell you to go,' exclaims the elder.

"'I tell you I won't,' mutters the boy.

"'Wal, never mind,' says the father, 'mebbe they'll come home.'"

The other story gives a more agreeable picture. It must be said, however, that this boy was only six years old. What he would develop into can only be surmised. "He had a cake," says Mr. Trowbridge, "a portion of which his cousin Minnie coveted. She accordingly reminded him, as she was fond of doing when she had a point to gain, of what 'the Bible says' about doing to others as we would be done by. 'Now you know, Willie, if I had the cake you would want half of it.' Willie hesitated a moment between inclination and a conviction of duty, and then said, honestly: 'I should want all of it.' With tears in his eyes, but resolutely choking down his grief, he handed over to her the entire cake, which she walked off complacently nibbling."

CITY'S DANGER.

The Press of April 17.

[illegible]

To make their school house
But Johnston, he
And Stanbury,
With Dr. Coles' Committee,
Cared less for safety than for pelf,
And laid the matter on the shelf.
(Painted by permission.)
School District No. 24, is in a row.
Well, rather!

Bosom friends cut each other dead, and young Dr. Coles, one of the most prominent citizens of Scotch Plains, has found himself the object of the bitterest attacks of half the village. As some said, "he's been receiving it on all sides." Old time antagonists have made-up with each other, and the opposite political leaders of the fiercest stripe have made common cause. E. M. Johnston and William C. Stanbury joining hands to oppose the new school house!!! "The same day were Pilot and Herod made friends together, for before they were at enmity between themselves."

The cause of all this jumbling up of village affairs is nothing less than the proposition to build a new school house. The matter was voted upon last Tuesday evening. Mr. Robert L. Thomas was made chairman of the meeting. He had enough to do, for the building was packed even to the stairs. The Trustees reported that the school house could be built and the necessary land bought for seventeen thousand dollars—an amount considerably less than the limit fixed at the last meeting. But Dr. Coles—the young Doctor—had a series of carefully prepared resolutions which he desired to read. To do this occupied considerable time, as the resolutions were of length. They were to the effect that the Trustees should consider the feasibility of repairing the old schools, and see whether, by a careful and judicious system of wings, extensions and other pleasing excrescences, the old building might not be made to hold together for a few years longer. It was proposed that the Trustees should make their report at the end of a month. Now what makes Dr. Coles' resolution so funny is the fact that the consideration of the question there asked for is the very thing that the Trustees have made their special attention for a great many months. The resolutions, however, did not get so far as a vote.

Then came the tug of war. The proposition was made to appropriate seventeen thousand dollars for the purchase of a lot and the erection of a new school building.

Well, the advocates of the new school house had expected to have to fight, for it, but they had not expected such a bitter contest as took place. The opposition had left no stone unturned—not satisfied with the average voter of sound, dependable mind and memory, they had gone into the highways and hedges and gathered together the poor and the halt and the maimed and the blind, and still there was room. Every dead-beat, every idle loafer that could be found in the street was brought in to swell the crowd. I don't mean to say that the opposition was all of this description, for Mr. William B. Stanbury, Mr. William C. Stanbury and many other gentlemen equally public spirited were found in the anti-school contingent. Mr. Barry Cook was also numbered among them. Mr. Cook stated that he had been educated in a much worse school house than ours, so he didn't want anything better. Mr. Cook, thought as did many of his friends, that "this town was gettin' too high-toned," and that the attempt to encourage the public school should be nipped in the bud. Mr. David F. Hall, the senior Trustee, explained the state of affairs; he said that it was impossible to do anything with the old school house except at very great expense; that things were now at such a point that the building was positively dangerous, so that in one way or another, something must be done, and that quickly. Mr. Hall said that he had a child sick at home from the defective sanitary arrangements of the building.

But all this would not prevail against the highways and hedges. The question was put to a vote, and although there were sixty-eight votes for the appropriation, the people of Fanwood, to their eternal honor be it said, voting solidly for the new school house, the opposition having been previously primed up for the occasion, marched steadily up to the desk, and their combined strength defeated the appropriation by fourteen votes.

A very simple thing, wasn't it?

And yet Dr Coles' friends don't recognize him now, and Mr. Nicholl and Mr. Stanbury don't speak as they pass by.

And when we look at it, it was a rather small piece of business on the part of the village.

With a corps of able and industrious teachers devoting all their energies to the welfare of the school, and with a Board of Trustees which had worked most arduously at the District's business, and in the most satisfactory manner—with all this, the people of the District refused to provide a proper school building for their children, and all because they might have to pay therefore a slight additional tax. They apparently thought that disease was cheaper than school, and as they had to have one or the other, they took the cheaper.

The fun of it is that it is going to cost the District all the more in the end, for unless they hire some men and horses to hold it up, the school building must before many years have passed, fall to pieces, cave in, give up the ghost. All the patching and extending and Coles Committees in this World, can't hold the old frame together very much longer, and nine thousand dollars have been sunk in it already.

When that day of dissolution shall come, a new school-house will be built, and then there will be an assessment worth speaking of.

And in that day shall the Collector of taxes call upon Henry Cook, and upon William C. Stanbury, and upon Dr. Coles, and the rest of the opposition, and they shall open their purse-strings, and there shall be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Meanwhile, these little social differences continue, and the school has to be disbanded every now and then on account of improve aid. The teachers talk of resigning altogether; although it is hardly forty-eight hours since, people are beginning to be sorry they didn't vote for a new school house.

ANNUAL VISIT.

The small attendance of members of Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, at their rooms, Monday night, was not very creditable. The occasion was the annual visitation of grand officers, and guests from other councils were also present. Supreme Representative, Past Grand Regent Clarkson was there, and also Grand Secretary Alberts, Grand Chaplain Pedder, and District Deputy Grand Regent Kerr. Regent Drummond of Jersey City, was one of the visitors and so was E. C. Treadwell, Regent of Fanwood Council, and Past Regent Wm. Corey, Orator John Robison and Warden John G. Cook of the same Council.

Interesting exercises occupied the early part of the evening, and later a collation was served in the large rooms below. More speeches were made, and the good things to eat were also thoroughly enjoyed.

festivities offered are these:

Easter Monday, grand ball by the Park Avenue Social Club at The Crescent, and an invitation ball by the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, in the Society's new Hall on Somerset street.

Tuesday evening, April 23, first anniversary of Wetumpka Lodge, No. 3,402, Knights of Honor, at Reform Hall.

Friday, April 26, Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., will observe the 70th anniversary of American Odd Fellowship at The Crescent.

Several other entertainments of a miscellaneous nature are being arranged, and private parties by the score will take place.

BOROUGH COUNCIL MEETING.

The Borough Council for 1889 met and organized Friday night, with the following members present: Mayor Cooley and and Messrs Buckle, Bettman, Emmons, McGee, Needham and Smalley. Judging from the amount of business transacted, and but little of that really important, it would seem to indicate that some of the members came prepared to transact the business for the year, all on the opening night.

In calling the Council to order at 8:30 P. M., Mayor Cooley said that it was with pleasure that he performed that duty: he hoped that everything would work harmoniously throughout the year. The minutes were read and the Council proceeded to business.

PETITIONS AND COMMUNICATIONS.

From property owners on Jackson avenue, agreeing to pay $300 towards the cost of macadamizing that avenue from Somerset street to Westervelt avenue, a distance of 1,646 feet. Referred to Street Committee.

From property owners on Duer street and vicinity asking for a walk in front of property at No. 70 Duer street. Ref.

From the Board of Health, asking for an appropriation of $300; also requesting Council to place to the Board's credit the money assessed last year. The latter request was granted by resolution, later in the evening.

From property owners on Westervelt avenue, agreeing to pay $270 towards macadamizing that thoroughfare from Brook to Grandview avenue. Ref.

These claims, together with an old bill of T. W. Morrison, $14, were presented, referred and subsequently ordered paid by warrant:

Mayor Cooley then announced the following committees:

Street—Messrs Smalley, Buckle, Bettman.

License and Marshals—Messrs Emmons, McGee, Smalley.

Laws and Ordinances—Messrs Bettman, McGee, Needham.

Auditing and Finance—Messrs Buckle, Needham, Smalley.

Salaries, etc.—Messrs Needham, Emmons, Bettman.

Fire, Water and Lamps—Messrs McGee, Buckle, Emmons.

Mr. James K. Arnold was, upon resolution adopted, elected Clerk for the ensuing year; salary $150. Mr. Smalley voted "no" on the resolution.

The monthly reports of the Collector and Clerk were received and filed.

Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed was re-elected, salary same as last year. Mr. Thomas McDonald was elected Borough Marshal, Mr. Smalley voting "no." His compensation was fixed at $450.

Mr. McGee, from the Fire, Water and Lamps Com., submitted a communication from Warren Engine Company, asking for a release from further duty, said release to take effect April 3d, inst. Mr. McGee said that a committee from the Company had held a conference with the Fire, Water and Lamps Com., and that the Company's proposition had been accepted and the release granted. He further stated that the Chief had been instructed to have horses in readiness to haul the apparatus in case of fire, and also to make temporary arrangements with an engineer to run the engine. About $50 worth of repairs was needed on the house and apparatus. The report was received.

An ordinance introduced by Mr. Bettman, fixing the salary of the Assessor at $500 and the Collector at $700, was later called up, read twice and laid over for amendment.

Upon motion adopted, Messrs J. W. A. Damerachs, Clark Mundy, W. Pangborn and George Conover were elected special Marshals.

Mr. Smalley, from the Street Com., reported favorably on the petition for macadamizing Jackson avenue, and a resolution by Mr. Emmons authorizing the Street Commissioner to proceed with the work as soon as practicable, was adopted.

The Mayor and Clerk were authorized and empowered to negotiate a loan of $800 for work on the streets, and the Printing and Stationery Com. was authorized to procure stationery and a warrant book for the Clerk.

A resolution by Mr. McGee, requesting the Com. on Stationery and Supplies to ascertain the probable cost of re-furnishing the Council chamber, said Com. to report at the next meeting, was adopted.

Mr. Emmons presented a resolution authorizing the Street Committee to contract for not exceeding 1,000 tons of crushed stone on the best terms obtainable. A long discussion followed, and the resolution was finally lost.

Mr. Needham's motion to reconsider the vote on the Jackson avenue petition was also lost.

Mayor Cooley stated that Chief Doane of the city fire department, was unwilling to have the alarm bell rung in the city in case of a fire in the Borough. Mr. Smalley insisted upon the passage of a resolution introduced by himself, authorizing the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee to provide some means for sounding an alarm, regardless of the cost. Mr. Bettman offered an amendment to the effect that the committee look into the matter and report. The resolution was adopted as amended.

Mr. McGee called attention to the crippled condition of the Fire Department, and as a member of the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, asked for authority, by resolution, to make the necessary repairs above referred to. The resolution was adopted. The retiring Marshal was requested to surrender all of the Borough property in his possession, and the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee was requested to recruit a new fire company, and submit the same for the Council's approval.

The newly-elected Marshal was ordered to notify all persons holding hack, peddlers' or partmen's licenses, that the same have expired and that a renewal of the license is necessary.

A petition for a crosswalk at the intersection of Park place and Vine street, was referred to the Street Committee and the Council adjourned at 10 o'clock.

—Next Sunday will be observed as Palm Sunday. Spring bonnets will be ready to pick on the following Sunday.

street—will decide in a few days whether they will build a chapel on their property.

In all probability the matter will be decided in the affirmative, and a commodious and convenient, handsome, well-lighted and ventilated building will be erected during the Summer, after the style of Bethel chapel at Fifth and Washington streets.

No Fire Protection.

The fire which started in the treptile work near the carpet factory early Monday morning, threatened serious consequences at one time. The factory is said to be practically without protection in case of fire, and a single bucket was all that could be found in which to carry water. During the day the building is filled with girls, most of whom are engaged on the upper floor, and on their account alone, the building should be equipped with some fire extinguishing apparatus. There is an abundant supply of water near the factory, but the absence of hose renders that useless. The proprietors will doubtless attend to the matter now.

NAUGHTY HENRIETTA.

The New York papers of 4th inst., report that two servant girls, sisters, named Emma T. and Henrietta Francis Day, have been arrested at Summit, N. J., for several absolutely wanton attempts to burn buildings at that point.

Although the eldest is but 19 and her sister 16, they coolly admitted having applied the match to several houses in which there were sleeping people, adding that it was fun to see the blaze.

Henrietta also says: "We fired Drake's laundry in Plainfield, for which young Wm. VanNest is serving a term in State Prison."

As to the latter confession, it is probably false. This girl, however, worked for Drake all the time; but the VanNest boy himself claimed that he did the deed, and told Chief Doane and Chief Carey so. The evidence was subsequently found just as he said, to prove everything the boy confessed.

Henrietta Francis Day's reputation for veracity was never of the highest in this city. She was conspicuous here for her love of the "average" young man's company, and her wildness. On Dec. 6, last, she appeared before Justice Nash and accused Wm. Dagnall of assaulting her. The Justice with good judgment, dismissed the complaint.

The List Completed.

THE PRESS April 3, published a list of the pastors who have served the M. E. church in this city from 1821 up to 1854, together with a historical sketch on the rise and progress of the church. Today we complete the list of pastors, beginning with Rev. S. W. Hilliard, who was the pastor in 1856.

In 1858, Rev. Geo. Winson was pastor; in 1860, Rev. John Atkinson; in 1862, Rev. S. Armstrong; in 1863, Rev. E. A. Day; in 1864, Rev. A. M. Palmer; in 1866, Rev. G. H. Whitney; in 1868, Rev. William Day; in 1871, Rev. J. R. Bryan; in 1874, Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut; in 1877, Rev. Wm. Day was reappointed, in 1880, Rev. T. H. Stockton; in 1883, Rev. Alex. H. Tuttle; in 1886, Rev. Dr. J. B. VanMeter; in 1889, Rev. Charles B. Mitchell, the present pastor.

Thus it will be seen that Rev. A. M. Palmer who was pastor in the M. E. church here in 1864, is the present Conference Treasurer, as noted elsewhere. Several of the clergymen who formerly officiated in this city, are also in attendance at the Conference.

The remaining debt on the church of $6,200 was paid in the Spring of 1866, by Rev. A. M. Palmer. During that year the church was repaired at a cost of $2,200, and the edifice was burned on the morning of the re-opening.

FOUND DEAD.

John C. Randall was found dead Monday morning on the second floor of the Schepflin building. He had on his hat and overcoat and held in his hand the cord connecting with the curtain of the window beneath which he was lying.

He had been the faithful night watchman of the big clothing factory for fourteen years, and even death had not brought about any neglect of his duties. The lights were found turned out and the fires under the boilers started. Death was due to heart failure and probably occurred about four o'clock as at that time he would be preparing for the coming of daylight.

The engineer of the factory arrived at his usual time at the boiler rooms, found his fires all right and got up his steam. The office boy coming later discovered that he could not get in the front doors and went to Watchman Randall's house, 8 Madison avenue, for the key. Then it was learned that Randall had not returned.

Mr. A. W. Waldron, subsequently unlocked the doors and a search of the building was made. Randall was found in the sample room on the second floor.

He was between 74 and 75 years of age and had been failing for some months, yet would not give up his duties although his employees had often told him he could. His wife died about seven years ago, but he leaves two daughters—one Miss Nettie Randall, and the other the wife of Charles H. F. Randolph, the miller.

Plainfield Loses a Second Game with Westfield Bowlers.

The second game of a series was bowled between a team of the Plainfield Bowling Club, and the "Monday Nights" of Westfield, on Gale's alleys at the latter place, Monday evening.

The Westfielders first frame showed five strikes, and being on to the curves of the alleys they could keep up that kind of bowling all the evening without an effort. The Plainfielders in their first frame, however, only got three strikes and three spares, while such bowlers as Kish, Reed and Dunn made bad breaks at the start.

No matter how well the balls were bowled, the tricks of the alleys were too much for Plainfield, and the game resulted as follows:

Sheriff's Sale of Borough Realty.

The nine unfinished brick buildings on the west side of Grove street, near the brook, together with the large residence corner of Prospect place, also the barn, and grounds, which have a frontage on Grove street of 250 feet, and 185 on Prospect place, will be sold at sheriff's sale at Somerville, on Saturday, April 20th, next. The mortgages on the entire property amount to about $23,000.

He Ought to be Arrested.

There is a worthless fellow going about the streets in this city and North Plainfield, applying for pecuniary assistance. We do not hesitate to say that the fellow is unworthy of attention. His mode of operation is to apply to a house, present a letter, and ask for a remittance to purchase medicine for malarial cure. In some instances the man was successful, in others, he was unsuccessful.

Mysterious Grave Openers in Westfield.

Two reputable citizens of Westfield, passing along Fairview Cemetery, the other evening, heard the sounds of digging, but could discover no one within the grounds.

An examination the next morning showed a freshly opened grave in the paupers' plot, but whether the intention was to steal or bury a body, is not known.

Reform Hall.

Reform Hall was filled Sunday evening. President French being at his post of duty, as was Mr. Vanderbeek and a full choir. Prayer was offered in an impressive manner by Rev. Mr. Miller of the Methodist Conference, now in session here. Besides Mr. Miller, the speakers of the occasion were all clergymen of the M. E. church, namely Rev. Messrs Dockham, Diverty and Parsons. Ably and eloquently did they plead for temperance and religion, and earnestly each of them denounced as the terrible evil of the age the liquor traffic, and declared Prohibition to be the only sovereign cure. The audience listened throughout with devoted attention, frequently responding "amen."

At the Services Sunday.

Rev. E. M. Garton, a member of the Newark M. E. Conference, now in session in our city, and pastor of the Bound Brook M. E. church, preached in the Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning. His subject was: "The acceptance and spread of the Gospel of Jesus Christ in Samaria." His text was the fourteenth and fifteenth verses of the 8th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, and his discourse commanded the close attention of the large audience present.

At the evening service, the Rev. W. S. McCowan, of Madison, also a member of the M. E. Conference, delivered a practical sermon on the necessity of "Growth" in grace and knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, taking his text from the 18th verse of the 3d chapter of 2d Peter.

Marriage in Hunterdon Rather Exciting.

A perfectly legitimate and proper marriage between two entirely reputable people in this town, on Thursday last, was made the occasion of a most scandalous and high-handed outrage upon decency by a large "calathumpian" party, which gathered in front of their residence in the evening with a lot of "horse fiddles," tin pans, large sheets of old tin roofing and other noisy accompaniments and disturbed the whole neighborhood with their insane orgies until nearly midnight.

They climbed upon the porch roof, pried open the windows, rang the door bell, kicked and pounded the door with clubs, piled boxes and old boards on the portico, littered the lawn with bricks and sticks, tore down an entire panel of fence, built a bonfire in front of the house, and, worst of all, gave loud expression to the filthiest and most obscene personalities directed against the bride. That law and decency was shamefully violated and the good name of our town made to suffer, every good citizen agrees.—Hunterdon County Democrat.

FOOTLIGHT TWINKLINGS.

At the New York Theatres.

Manager McCaull is producing the "May Queen" at Palmer's theatre this week with his usual ability, and his operatic company is better than ever.

"The Marquise" is drawing crowded houses at the Lyceum theatre. The play is admirably acted by Mr. Frohman's company, and the best possible use is made of the material the actors have to work upon. Mr. Lemoyne and Miss Cayvan have strong parts, and are the central figures in the play. The mounting is in the usual careful style of this theatre.

Manager Rudolf Aronson is pleased with the grand reception of "Nadjy," and announces that on its 250 performance he will have the buffet floor open for occupancy. One must secure seats weeks in advance to get good places.

Manager Sanger is now lamenting that the arrangement with Francis Wilson for the production of "The Oolah" at the Broadway will compel him to withdraw "Little Lord Fauntleroy" early in May. Orders for seats for the opening night of Mr. Wilson's company are numerous, and indications are that "The Oolah" will have a memorable first night.

The beauty of the new Union Square theatre is still the principal topic among theatrical people. The house, beyond doubt, is a jewel. The audiences are large and fashionable at every performance of Miss Helen Barry's "A Woman's Stratagem," and the brilliancy of the auditorium, set off by the delicate decorations of the house, and enhanced by the handsome costumes of the audience, has seldom been equaled in this country. Miss Barry's acting as the Countess d'Autreval has hit the public taste, and has made a success.

READ HOW
GEO. WATSON & CO.
Intend to Divide PANTS among their Customers as Presents.
At this season of the year, when we are making large quantities of light CASSIMERE PANTS, some will get soiled, and others will show slight imperfections in weave or color, that is not seen in cutting. We also have PANTS returned for exchange, where mistakes have been made in getting the proper size, and often have two or three odd pants left out of a lot when we stop filling up the sizes. These slight blemishes in no way affect either the looks or wearing qualities of the PANTS, but with our plan of offering only for sale, precludes us from putting them in stock.
ABSOLUTELY PERFECT GARMENTS
We tried the plan of giving these PANTS away to our Customers last Saturday night, after 9 o'clock, but found that it would not do, as the rush was so great that we had to lock our doors, and it was impossible to pick out our Customers, besides few could get a correct fit. As we intend to divide these PANTS weekly, STRICTLY AMONG OUR CUSTOMERS, or those who now become customers, we have adopted a new plan, which will be made known on application. We intend to make it WORTH A HIGH PREMIUM to be a customer of our house, as you are sure of getting the BEST STYLES OF CLOTHING at the LOWEST PRICES anyway, and stand a fair chance of having a handsome pair of PANTS just your size SENT HOME TO YOU AS A PRESENT, when you least expect it.
Call or write for a circular giving full information of how you can register and come in for your share of these PANTS distributed weekly among our Customers as presents.

A WORD ABOUT OUR CUSTOMERS.
OUR CUSTOMERS, and we number them by thousands, are as intelligent and agreeable a lot of people as it is possible for a merchant to desire. Most of them have been dealing with us for years, but every season we add to their number. They come to us because they are wise. They know what they want and where best to get it. They do not expect impossibilities, but they have a well-placed confidence that our experience, resources and capital will be so employed that it is to their interest to deal with us. THEY ARE CORRECT. We make it a special part of our business to see that no dealer shall be able to treat our customers, in price, quality, style and excellence of goods, as well as we do.

Among some of the effects of his uncle, the late Thomas Stillman, Lawyer Wm. M. Stillman has found an exact and interesting map of Plainfield in 1832 when its inhabitants numbered about 700. Every detail of the town is marked out and all the houses located.

In speaking of a probable change in the lay-judgeship of Union County, the Elizabeth Journal says, editorially: "A man who adorned the bench has certainly filled this position for the past five years. Judge Harper is such a man." That is great praise from a partisan paper of the opposite party.

Mr. Norman W. Penfield one of the proprietors of the Daily Press of Asbury Park, was in this city recently, and expressed in the office of the DAILY PRESS of Plainfield his admiration of the place. This commendation coming from one who has a part in the establishment of the brightest paper on the coast, is worth something. Mr. Norman Penfield knows a good thing when he sees it.

Miss Kittie M. Shafer—the skillful stenographer and type writer who has proved herself such a valuable acquisition to the law offices of Jackson & Codington, and such a necessity to the prompt transaction of their extensive practice—was graduated at the head of a class of 140 in the Packard Business College, New York. ANXIETY FOR THE CITY'S SAFETY.

A Special Meeting of the Council Called.

The article in Tuesday's PRESS regarding the city's danger of being saddled with judgments and increased taxation, has created intense excitement.

President Dumont has called a special meeting of the Council for next Monday evening. Mayor Male, also, thoroughly realizes the facts set forth by THE PRESS, and the solid men of the city discuss nothing else on the train.

[illegible]

The handsomest paper in the State, and one of the newsiest, the Elizabeth Journal, came out yesterday increased in size again, and is now the largest of New Jersey's dailies.

It is forcibly edited by Mr. Charles C. McBride, and a large part of its success is due, as well, to Mr. Aug. S. Crane the able business manager. Then, besides, no local news escapes Mr. Joseph Lowden, and he knows how to present it to the Journal's extended list of readers.

A Methodist Dominie's Fall.

The wife of a prominent Plainfield grocer, threw a banana peel on the sidewalk in front of her husband's store, Wednesday, April 3, and a gray-whiskered delegate to the Methodist Conference, stepped on it.

But that was not what the Central Press referred to in these words of last week's issue: "The graceful poise of many forms has already been seen upon the better of the city's highways." The Central Press was speaking of the city's equestrians.

Wooden Wedding.

About eighty-five of the relatives and intimate friends of Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Boice tendered them a surprise party at their home in South Plainfield, on Tuesday, April 2, the occasion being the fifth anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Boice's marriage. Rev. A. Armstrong, one of the guests present, addressed the audience in a very pleasing manner.

The festivities were enlivened by some choice selections by Prof. Soper's Cornet Band of South Plainfield. Those present enjoyed an evening of unexceptionable pleasure, and the guests were unanimous in wishing the host and hostess long lives of happiness, health and prosperity.

The success of the undertaking is largely due to Mr. and Mrs. C. Brantingham, who arranged the preliminaries and left nothing undone to have the affair crowned with success. In this respect they were eminently successful.

A Very Cute Mode of Swindling.

A most ingenious swindle is being worked by a traveling peddler in the small towns of the State. He carries a bottle of medicine, a box of salve and a bottle of "perfumed disinfectant," and the whole lot costs a dollar. He particularly urges the merits of the disinfectant, and says that when the cork is left out the stuff diffuses a pleasant and healthful odor through the house.

He leaves a sample bottle to be tried, and slyly slips the cork out, leaving the open bottle behind. The liquid is very volatile, and consequently when the peddler calls again in a few days the bottle is about half empty, the stuff having evaporated. He demands fifty cents for what has been "used," and is so vehement in his demands that he generally gets it. He is reaping a harvest of half-dollars.

Look out for the swindler. He may visit Plainfield. Keep the shot-gun loaded and file the dog's teeth.

OBITUARY.

ADELIA S. VANWINKLE.

At noon Monday occurred the death of Mrs. John H. VanWinkle, wife of the ex-Mayor of North Plainfield and daughter of the late Mrs. Gerome Pack who died on Jan. 6. Although Mrs. VanWinkle had been in a very critical state for the past few days, her death was sudden and somewhat unexpected.

A surgical operation which it had been necessary to perform during Wednesday afternoon of last week, had been so successful, and the after symptoms so favorable, every expectation of her recovery had been cherished. A professional nurse was in constant attendance day and night. This morning, however, at six o'clock, a change for the worse occurred.

Mrs. VanWinkle leaves a widower, and one son John H. VanWinkle, Jr., twelve years of age.

Now All Together and Up Goes the Building.

As is well known by our people, the Young Men's Christian Association has had a building committee at work for some time. The members of this committee are: Chas. W. McCutchen, D. E. Titsworth, Edward St. John, Wm. D. Murray, H. O. Newman, Henry A. Mc Gee and Chas. T. Kiesam.

They have had a number of meetings and have carefully considered all the availing building sites in town. The result of their investigation and discussion has been a unanimous decision in favor of the lot No. 55 and 57 East Front street, nearly opposite Peace street. This lot has been purchased by the Association, and the Association building will be erected there. The lot is 81 feet front and 250 feet deep, being, as Mr. D. F. More, the State Secretary, says, the largest lot owned by an Association.

It is the intention of the Committee to call upon the many friends of the Association who have promised to subscribe to the building fund, and get them to say at once what their subscription will be, so that a sum of money equal to the value of the lot may be secured in the next two months. If this can be done, and no one doubts but that it can, the $27,000 now subscribed will be used in the erection of the building, the remaining funds being secured while the building is going up.

It is hoped that the friends of the young men will make it possible for them to break ground in the near future.

PLAINFIELD'S S. P. C. A.

A meeting to organize a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, was held in the office of the Chief of Police, Tunis J. Carey, Friday morning, at ten o'clock. The meeting resulted in the election of the Rev. T. Logan Murphy as permanent President of the Society and Wm. A. Coddington as permanent Secretary.

The following gentlemen were nominated and elected Vice Presidents: Mr. Julian Scott, 1st V. P.; Mr. S. E. Flower, 2d V. P., and Mr. W. J. Leonard, 3d V. P. Mr. Tunis J. Carey was unanimously elected Treasurer of the Society and Wm. A. Coddington was made Counsel.

After the above officers were elected the following names were proposed and elected members of the Society: Messrs Job Male, A. C. Baldwin, G. Schepflin, Hugh M. Gilligan, John F. Wilson, Jos. B. Miller, Wm. Krausse, M. M. Dunham, Sinclair Stuart, Hon. John Ulrich, W. R. Codington, C. A. Marsh, B. J. Shaw, Benj. A. Hegeman, Jr., Harry Werner, A. L. Force, Geo. W. Rockfellow, Peter M. Demarest, J. S. Cotter, Andrew Leve, Sr., P. Thorn.

The Society instructed the Secretary to correspond with the Superintendent of the State organization and obtain the names of the kindred societies. It was moved and carried that the organization be known and designated as "The Plainfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals."

—It is expected that propositions will be presented at the next meeting of the Borough Council for a system of Water supply and hydrants.

The Great Work of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterians.

The yearly meeting of the members of Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, was held in the church April 3, and largely attended. The annual election was a unanimous one, and resulted in the choosing of Elders John Leal and William H. Sampson to succeed themselves, and the re-election also of Deacon Stephen R. Struthers.

The pastor, the Rev. William R. Richards, read the report of the Ladies Aid Society. This society had distributed during the year, $9,260 among home and foreign missions and other charities.

Superintendent Henry B. Newhall gave a report of the affairs of the Sunday school. The membership was 365, and there had been no diminution in spite of the loss of the Sunday school rooms.

Mr. Stephen A. Ginna, Superintendent of Bethel Mission, reported that the membership had grown to 170, and that the school was in a flourishing condition. The Rev. Mr. Lee, who has been called to minister to the people of the Mission, was introduced and his very pleasing remarks were attentively listened to. He created a most favorable impression.

Superintendent Henry C. Squires of Hope Mission, reported its membership about 235. The capacity of the building had been increased until it was now three times its original size. It is open Saturday afternoons and every evening, and encouraging work is being done in every branch.

Mr. Frederick Moon, Superintendent of Warren Mission, told of the great work that had been accomplished and was being continued there.

Mr. Charles Place, President of the Board of Trustees, gave a brief and interesting history of the church building from its beginning. The value of its property is now $130,000. In 1878 $68,000 had been paid, and the entire balance of indebtedness was wiped out five years later.

Mr. Stephen R. Struthers spoke for the Deacons. $450 was raised for the poor of the church during the year, of which but a small part remained in the treasury.

The session, through its Clerk, Mr. John K. Van Arsdale, reported the church membership to be 698. There had been raised for benevolent purposes, $11,000; and for church expenses, $10,000. The members were then dismissed with a benediction, and a congregational meeting was called to discuss the changing of the position of the church organ.

Architect Oscar S. Teale submitted plans for the placing of the instrument in the gallery to the right of the pulpit and in full view of the congregation. It would be sunken in the wall—only projecting the diameter of the pipes—but with sidepipes toward the pulpit so that none of the sound should be lost.

Mr. John W. Murray, for the trustees, submitted many reasons for the change. The room in the present organ gallery would allow for ninety more sittings, at least, which were very desirable. The names of a number of people were kept upon a list awaiting just such accommodations.

Mr. Philip Swain, Mr. H. Raymond Munger and Mr. W. Wallace Howland spoke against the change, and Messrs. Horace Kimball, H. Otis Newman, Chas. A. Hunter and William H. Sampson in favor of it.

An effort was made to postpone the settlement of the question, but as two week's notice of the present meeting had been given it was thought as good a time as any other. An amendment by Mr. Murray to the effect that the Trustees be authorized to remove the organ from its present position to one beside the pulpit, was carried.

A rising vote of the pew-holders of the church, showed 89 in favor. The opposition was so small it was not counted. Every member of the choir voted for the change.

Exciting Athletic Contests and a Success in Every Way.

Five hundred ladies, gentlemen and young folks of both sexes, gathered in The Crescent, last Thursday and thoroughly enjoyed the interesting and exciting programme of athletic sports that had been prepared by the following Committee of Arrangements of the Plainfield Bicycle Club: F. L. C. Martin, Chairman; E. L. Walz, Jr., Townsend Rushmore, Chas. W. Sandford, Howard J. Runyon, George C. Martin, Jr., T. S. Burr, Geo. W. Morrison, and Robinson Pound.

Every event passed off promptly and smoothly under the efficient service of these officers: Manager, Townsend Rushmore; Judges, A. G. Slevin, Fred W. Walz; Referee, Dr. J. H. Cooley; Timer, Geo. W. Beebe; Starter, Howard J. Runyon; Clerks of Course, Robinson Pound, W. D. Morgan, W. H. Milliken, J. A. Worth, James C. Field.

There were enough competitors in each of the events to make the contests exciting, and everybody—the entries, the audience, and even the band—kept up an intense and personal interest throughout the evening, so that the entire affair was a great success and satisfaction for all. The band was especially enthusiastic. It blew marches, and polkas till you couldn't rest. In fact it was almost impossible to make the musicians stop and take a rest themselves. At one time after ringing the bell at them, and shouting and waving handkerchiefs without success, Mr. Howard Runyon fired his pistol directly at the leader and then the music stopped.

The opening parade by the Club led by Captain F. L. C. Martin, was a very pretty sight in spite of the presence of a rider in a black swimming suit and a derby hat, among the others uniformed handsomely in gray. The 70-yard dash was contested by J. P. Munn, E. L. Walz, Jr., J. W. Sandforn, R. F. Murray, L. J. Krom, L. W. Serrell, and H. W. Beebe. Walz won in 7½ seconds, with Sandford close on his heels.

The competitors in the sack race finished in the following order: F. P. Van Buren, F. L. C. Martin, J. W. Sandford, and R. F. Murray. The quarter-mile run was won by Mr. David Waits of New York, with nobody against him but Mr. J. A. Cooper.

Messrs R. F. Murray, F. L. C. Martin, G. W. Morrison, H. D. Morrison, F. P. VanBuren and Geo. C. Martin, Jr started in the slow bicycle-race, but all were out except Murray, VanBuren and H. Morrison before half the distance was covered. VanBuren won the first and Murray the second prize, but through some misunderstanding the second was ruled out. Later in the evening another race was arranged for the second prize, but Murray would not enter and it was won by H. Morrison over W. H. Milliken, E. L. Walz, Jr., and G. W. Morrison.

The half-mile run was won by L. J. Krom, with H. W. Beebe second. The three-legged race was won by F. L. C. Martin and Geo. C. Martin, Jr. H. W. Beebe and E. L. Walz, J., with only a poor start, were second. L. Krom won the hurdle race; H. Morrison, second.

The tug-of-war between M. S. Ackerman, H. W. Beebe, J. P. Munn and F. P. VanBuren of the Plainfield Club, and a team from the Elizabeth Wheelmen consisting of G. C. Pennell, F. C. Gilbert, A. F. Bellinger and L. B. Bonnett, was a very exciting event. Plainfield got the first and third pulls and secured the banner. The building rang with cheers in which the Elizabeth boys heartily joined.

The prizes for the different contests consisted of silk umbrellas, canes, gold sleeve buttons, pocket knives, scarf pins, and alligator wallets. Mr. T. B. Finley, who gave a marvellous exhibition of fancy riding and feats on two wheels and one, received a handsome traveling bag from the Club.

A Delegation to be Proud Of.

Representatives will be present from the United States, British Provinces, Gt. Britain, Germany, Sweden and Switzerland.

Mosher, Chas Smith; 2d Asst—H. Voorhees; 3d Asst—P. Marron; Representatives to Relief Association—Ed Mosher, H. M. Sherwin.

Discussing a $7,000 Club House.

About twenty-five members of the Plainfield Bowling Club were present, Tuesday, at a special meeting held at the residence of Mr. J. A. Haynes. The meeting was called by President Ernest C. Kieb, to consider the method of raising funds for the purchase of a site and the erection of a Club House, and also to take the preliminary steps towards the incorporation of the Club.

Upon motion the President appointed the Hon. John Ulrich and Messrs Charles Reed and J. B. Martine to immediately take the legal steps necessary for the incorporation of the Club.

A Committee was also appointed consisting of President Kieb and Messrs J. T. Fritts, George W. Rockfellow, A. W. Waldron, John M. Crane, Seymour G. Smith, Charles Leggett, John Ulrich and C. Craighead, to devise ways and means of securing a Club House or procuring the money to build one. Also to consider the matter of sites for the purpose.

What Our Poor Cost Us.

Mr. Jenkins as Chairman of the Alms Committee had a report which was not submitted at the Council meeting, Monday April 1, from the Overseer of the Poor, J. Oakley Nodyne, showing the amounts expended for the support of the city poor, exclusive of the salaries of the Overseer and City Physician, for the several years from 1884 up to the present time. The report shows that during the year from February 1, 1884 to February 1, 1885, there were 35 families receiving aid from the city, and the total cost for the year was $2,614.17. The following year there were 43 families on the list, and the total cost of maintaining the poor that year was $3,438.81. For the year 1887, eighty families and single persons received aid from the city, and the total cost was $4,450.40. The Hospital expenses that year amounted to $513. Last year with seventy families on the list, rent being paid for 35, the total cost was $4,337.79. The Hospital expenses last year amounted to $294.86. From the statement it is shown that the amount paid out in support of the city poor, has not been in proportion to the increase of the number receiving aid.

WAYLAID BY HIGHWAYMEN.

At about five o'clock Tuesday afternoon one of the most bold and dastardly attempts at highway robbery which has ever taken place in this city, was perpetrated on the Central Railroad track just west of the Plainfield avenue crossing,and in the rear of the Potter Press Works.

At that hour, a dry goods peddler, whose name we are unable to ascertain, was crossing the railroad track at that point on his way from South Second street to Front street, when he was set upon by two men, grabbed by the throat, and thrown to the ground. The peddler had the presence of mind to drop his pack of goods and show fight. He struggled heroically, meanwhile shouting for help, and when assistance approached the two men, one of whom is described as a tall and slim man, about twenty-five years of age, wearing a light overcoat and slouch hat, disappeared, running through a hedge in the direction of Front street.

The peddler is well-known in this city, which place he has visited regularly on Tuesday and Thursday of each week for several years past. While in the city, it is said, he is in the habit of stopping with a family on East Fourth street. The man came out above day and made a tour of the Fourth Ward. Late in the afternoon he stopped to talk to a gentleman on South avenue, and had just left him, on his way to town, when he was accosted and assaulted as above described.

The peddler is a harmless fellow, but always carries a considerable amount of money with him. It is supposed that the villains were acquainted with this fact, and sought an opportunity to waylay him at a convenient point.

The minutes of the meeting of March 6, 1889, were read and approved. The treasurer reported the sum of $1,518.51 to the credit of the general fund.

Ahorn, and six volumes of Appleton's Encyclopedia of American biography, the gift of Mr. Job Male were ordered received, and the thanks of the Board to be extended to them by the Secretary for the same.

The following bills were approved and ordered paid:

Salary, librarian, $50; janitor, $40; expenses, $1.30; W. H. Williams, periodicals, etc., for two months, $17.26.

On motion the librarian was requested to ask Mr. Williams to add the Mail and Express to the list of daily papers with which he now supplies the library.

On motion the thanks of the Board were extended to Mrs. John D. Runyon for her gift to the Art Gallery of an oil painting, painted by herself, and the Secretary was directed to convey the same.

The report of the librarian for March was read, approved and ordered on file.

A collation will be given the delegates and invited guests at the Republican rooms on East Front street. It is desirous that the citizens will respond in their usual generous manner when the committee calls on them for a donation.

This Morning's Fire.

Sparks from a passing locomotive set fire to the trestlework in the rear of the carpet factory on South avenue, about 5 o'clock Monday, A. M. and did about $200 damage. The flames communicated with a wooden bin in which was about $100 worth of waste, all of which was totally destroyed. An alarm was sent out, and in five minutes' time the department apparatus was on the spot. The firemen experienced but little difficulty in extinguishing the fire.

Improvements on Another Branch.

The N. J. Central promises to have all the improvements on the Newark and New York branch completed by May 1. The street bridges in Newark have all been rebuilt in wrought iron, and the Passaic River draw is completed as far as the iron work is concerned. The company has purchased a large tract of land in the lower part of Newark for additional freight facilities, and ten new and fast engines have been ordered for the Newark branch.

March 16—Isaac Brokaw et ux. to J. W Powell, property in North Plainfield, $3,400. Esther and John Allen to Tillie R. Schenck, property in North Plainfield, $725.

THE LONG AND SHORT OF IT.

The irrepressible John Peiffer of Westfield, was found guilty April 3, in the Court of Special Sessions at Elizabeth, of stealing the halyards from State Senator Miller's flagstaff at his handsome residence in Westfield. Peiffer was hired by Senator Miller to rig the halyards and thought it would be a capital piece of enterprise on his part to steal them and thereby get another job.

Judge McCormick imposed the full penalty of the law, three months in the county jail, and Peiffer appeared very much surprised and dejected. The value of the halyards is about two dollars, but Senator Miller paid a reward of $25 to Detective J. M. C. Marsh, for capturing the thief.

Positively Delicious.

So delightful to the taste are HAMBURG FIGS that they could be placed upon the table for dessert, and no one would suspect that they were more than very superior crystalized fruit. This property is what makes them so popular with ladies and children for the cure of indigestion and sick-headache. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. Mack Drug Co. J. G. Miller, Agent, Plainfield.

ONE DOLLAR A MINUTE!

That's big pay isn't it? Well, that's about what you'll save if you trade with us. For five minutes spent amid our stock will demonstrate that you can save at least five dollars on a suit comparing our prices with what they ask for similar goods elsewhere. Hardly anybody's time is worth a dollar a minute if we except, perhaps, lawyers and plumbers. And this rule applies with equal force to Overcoats, to single garments and to children's clothing.

Perhaps you think that Winter goods will not be needed now. If we supposed the weather of the past week or so was to continue, we would offer a line of Pongees and Seersuckers. But Overcoat weather is near and the tardiness of the season favors the buyer. Come in and see if it isn't so.

WOMEN OF WEALTH.

What a New York Lady Has to Say About Them.

The Incredible [illegible] They Could Carry Out If They Should Decide to Combine—A Gigantic Aggregation of Wealth and Enterprise.

There has recently been printed a list of American women whose combined fortunes aggregate the magnificent sum of $[illegible], writes a New York correspondent of the Chicago Tribune. [illegible]

[illegible]

"Many millions of that vast sum of money is locked up in diamonds," said a prominent New York lady to the writer in discussing these wealthy women, "and the thought occurs to me that these women might revolutionize the commerce of the country by a combination of their wealth into one gigantic company! What might they not accomplish with such an enormous power working in one direction?"

"From these figures it will be seen that this proposed Woman's Trust, or whatever it is to be called, overshadows the great Vanderbilt fortunes [illegible]

THE man who is said to have built the first rolling mill in the United States is in Atlanta, Ga. In 1826 Major Watson built at Boonton, N. J., the first rolling mill in operation in this country. SAN DIEGO, Cal., has just completed a great flume. It extends from the western slope of Cuyamaca mountain, where there is a reservoir at an elevation of 4,500 feet. The length of the flume is about fifty miles, and it cost $900,000. There are 300 trestle bridges and eight tunnels along the line, and 9,000,000 feet of lumber were used in the construction. The amount of water on hand [illegible] gallons, enough to supply the city and county four years without renewal.

FIGHT WITH CATAMOUNTS.

Three Plucky West Virginia Boys Kill Two Immense Specimens.

A dispatch from Edray, Pocahontas County, W. Va., says: "A story comes from Black mountain, near this place, of a terrific battle between three farmer boys and two big catamounts which is worth telling. Charley and Tom Flinn, aged respectively fourteen and sixteen years, accompanied by another boy, named Ned Phillips, about seventeen years old, were crossing Black mountain on their way to the Phillips farm, about six miles distant, when in the densest part of the mountain, they suddenly came across two full-grown catamounts feeding upon a sheep they had just killed. Two of the boys were armed with a hoe and a common iron farming rake, while the third had nothing. They were brave boys, however, and determined to drive off the brutes, really expecting little or no resistance, but in this they were badly deceived, as, when they approached, the immense cats, with bristling hair and glistening fangs, began to growl and snarl in a vicious manner.

Perceiving that they were in for a fight and had no way out of it, the third lad quickly cut himself a stout hickory club, when all three approached the animals. The catamounts didn't wait an attack, but boldly advanced upon the boys. The large one sprang at Phillips, who struck it with the blade of the hoe as he sprung aside, and as the cat landed on its feet it received another severe blow on the back of the neck from the hickory club in the hands of the younger Flinn boy.

In the meantime the elder Flinn boy had his hands full, as the other catamount had made for him. His spring would have carried him squarely at the boy's face had not the latter jumped to one side, receiving a terrible clawing on the left shoulder and several bad scratches on the cheek as it passed. The rake now did good service, the lad succeeding in sinking the iron teeth deeply into the catamount's back as it landed.

The fight, begun in this manner, lasted fully five minutes, and ended in the boys killing both animals. When the fight was over it was found that young Flinn's clothes were torn into ribbons, while he had received a serious bite on the right leg and several painful scratches on his arms. Tom was by far the worst hurt of the three boys, having received a number of severe scratches on his right shoulder and face, two severe bites through the hand and arm, and a badly torn leg. Young Phillips was torn across the back pretty severely, and would probably have been killed had not the force of the cat's blows knocked him down, causing the brute to fall clear of him, when it was dispatched with a club in the other boy's hand. After an hour's rest and tying up their wounds as best they could, the boys returned to the Flinn farm, dragging their game after them. The cats weighed forty-four and forty-one pounds respectively, and are declared to be monsters of their species.

He Couldn't Spank Her.

"My dear wife, I wish that you would be more careful in your conversation before the children."

"I am always careful. What do you mean, sir?"

"Only this, my darling. Little Maudie this morning, when I refused her a quarter, said: 'You are getting stingier and meaner every day of your life, John Smith.' And is so like her mother that I did not have the heart to spank her."

The Ablest Man.

"Who is the greatest man in the House of Representatives?"

"I know, papa. I know. It is Mr. Randall. Ain't it?"

"No, my son. It is not Mr. Randall. Guess again."

"Is it Mr. Carlisle, or Mr. Mills, or Mr. Reed, or—"

"No, it is neither one of them. Every man in the House is the greatest man. Ask them individually and see."

Vain Remonstrance.

Jack was waiting for his wife to get ready for the theater, and impatiently exclaimed:

"For goodness sake, Mary, why do you have six buttons on your gloves? It takes you forever to get started. Wouldn't two buttons do just as well?"

"No, dear; if there were only two buttons that would leave four vacant buttonholes. Now just tie my veil—that's a dear man."—Minneapolis Tribune.

Nothing to Hinder.

"Miss Mamie has invited me to call on her," said Hyssop.

"I wouldn't go to that house again for a small fortune," returned De Jinks, "and I wouldn't advise you to either."

"But you see, my dear fellow, she mentions in a postscript that her father has the [illegible] and somebody has poisoned the dog."—Judge.

Pursuit by Hue and Cry.

This was the old common-law process in England of pursuing "with horn and with voice," "from hundred to hundred and county to county," all robbers and felons. Before the adoption of this method the hundred (the community) was bound to make good losses occasioned by robberies committed within its limits, unless the felon was captured; but by subsequent enactment it was made answerable only by damages caused by general assemblies. The pursuit by a law-breaker was aided by a description of him in the Hue and Cry, an official gazette established for advertising felons in 1710.

THE FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

What the Conductors of the County Business are Doing.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., March 7, 1889.

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union, held on Thursday, March 7, 1889, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard, and Freeholders Bryant, Doty, Donahue, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Thompson, Vanderveek, Van Saun, Wright, Whaley, West—16.

Absent—Freeholder Roll.

The minutes of last meeting (omitting list of bills ordered paid) were read and on motion approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—At a meeting of the committee on centennial celebration, held last evening, I was directed to extend to your honorable body a cordial invitation to participate in the exercises at Elizabeth on the 29th day of April next, on the occasion of the reception of President Harrison, in connection with the centennial celebration of the inauguration of President Washington.

Very respectfully,
C. ADDISON SWIFT,
Secretary.

Elizabeth, N. J., March 7, 1889.

On motion of Freeholder Kleinhans received and accepted.

From County Attorney:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—You will probably recollect that about two years ago George M. Stiles and Thomas Forsyth, ex-sheriffs of this county, commenced suits against this board to recover jail fees, etc., alleged to be due them by reason of their being deprived of the possession of the jail during their respective terms of office, and the jail being placed in charge of a warden by this board, which act was held by the supreme court to be unconstitutional, and that said jail should have remained in charge of the sheriff and he to have the benefit of the fees, etc., to be derived therefrom.

Since the commencement of these suits, neither of the plaintiffs have filed any declaration, owing partly to the death of the former and the negligence of the latter or his counsel.

I have now received a communication from the counsel of the administratrix of Mr. Stiles and from the counsel of Mr. Forsyth, offering to settle their respective suits or claims on the payment by this board to each of $100; on receipt of the same they offer to give a full and complete release of all claims or demands against this board and county. In arriving at a conclusion in regard to this matter, the board should take in consideration the probability of their being successful in their respective suits and also the expense attached thereto in defending the same.

I deem it my duty to state that so far as their being able to recover anything against the county is concerned, I am of the opinion that they would not be successful. While there may be a color of right to recover something, I have been unable to discover on what grounds they expect to obtain judgment so far as I have examined into the cases. There might be some evidence adduced to show their right that I am unaware of, and there may be possibly one or two items which the courts might hold they could recover, but it would be very small and in my best judgment they could not recover even there. The expense in defending these suits will undoubtedly be a much larger amount than the sums offered in settlement. There is a vast amount of work to be done in examining the books of the warden, drawing up the pleadings, preparing for trial, etc., and it would surely cost the county a considerable sum of money to defend these suits.

In addition I will state for the information of the members that boards of chosen freeholders or other public or municipal corporations have power to settle claims alleged to be due, when in their opinion it would be advantageous and a saving to the county to do so and the parties presenting claims have some foundation or color of right to their claim.

Very respectfully,
C. D. WARD,
County Attorney.

Dated March 7, 1889.

On motion of Freeholder West received and ordered to be laid on the table until next meeting of the board.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—At the last meeting of your board a number of bills were referred to me for my opinion as to the legality and correctness of the same; most of them were for justices' and constables' fees claimed to be due, but before referring to them particularly I wish to state that the act under which it has been the custom for to tax the fees and costs of these officers has been declared unconstitutional.

The act to which I refer was a supplement to an act entitled "an act constituting the courts for the trial of small causes," approved April 6, 1871. Revision page 263, Section 120.

The decision declaring the same unconstitutional was made by the Court of Errors and Appeals in the case of Lane vs. Bain, 20 Vroom, 672, etc., consequently under this decision the justices and constables are entitled to only such fees as are allowed under the act entitled "an act concerning fees and costs." Revision, page 406.

I have prepared a statement showing what fees and costs the justices and constables are entitled to under the law as it now stands, in all criminal cases, and propose to mail each one a copy as soon as I can have them printed.

In regard to two bills of Louis F. Wadsworth, one of which is for $4.40 and the other for $5.50, I would respectfully report that the same should be disallowed for the reason that the costs are not taxed in accordance with the fees to which they are now entitled. The costs taxed under the above act are declared to be unconstitutional as aforesaid. If they had been properly taxed in accordance with the law as it now stands they should be allowed, as the prosecutor has approved of them as proved by the act of last year.

In regard to two bills presented by George Neil, one of which is for $24.05 and the other for $18.55, also a bill presented by William E. Pease for $15.[illegible], I also respectfully report should be disallowed for the reason above set forth disallowing the bill of Louis F. Wadsworth, and also for the reason that the costs in said bills have not been itemized and directed by law. These bills have also been approved by the prosecutor, and if said bills are properly itemized under the present law and then approved by the prosecutor, I should then report in favor of their payment.

In regard to a bill of Vincent W. Nash of $10.[illegible], I have also to report that most of the same should not be allowed on the ground that no indictments were found in the cases mentioned, that the fees and costs charged therein are in excess to what he is now entitled under the present law; if the same was proper in other respects and also that the prosecutor has not approved of the same under the act of last year. There are, however, several items for issuing warrant under the disorderly act to which he is entitled to receive, if separated from the rest of the bill. There is no decision by Judge Dixon as stated by him allowing these costs in the manner claimed by him.

In regard to the bill presented by the city of Rahway of $6.04, I will report upon at the next meeting.

Dated March 7, 1889.

Very respectfully,
C. D. WARD,
County Attorney.

On motion of Freeholder West received and recommendations adopted.

A CURIOUS FAMILY.

In a Fit of Anger a Son Remains in a Room for Fourteen Years.

There is no more peculiar family than the Gleens, two sisters and a brother, who live in Urbana, O. According to the Van Wert (O.) News, all are unmarried, and John, the brother, is a study. There were once three boys. The father was odd. He would never go in debt. Once he went to buy the boys a coat each, but his money gave out, and he only got two. He told John the circumstances, and said that he would get him one next time. John got mad, said he need never buy him one, and that he would never wear one as long as his father lived. Going to his room, John remained fourteen years without a coat, and no one ever saw him out of that room. His meals were sent to him and he sat there and read and thought.

When the father died John came out, put on a coat and went to the funeral. The Gleens are Scotch-Irish. The coat-of-arms ornaments the silver, china and front door. The old man had money and bought largely of land, and the estate is one of the most valuable in Champaign County. After the father died, the children, none of whom ever married, although all have been carefully educated, decided to have the whole house frescoed. For ten months an artist worked at the house, and the walls and ceilings are covered with grotesque figures, serpents and animals.

John got mad once about these decorations, and shut himself in his room for four years, coming out to attend the funeral of the brother who had provoked him. Mary, the youngest sister, has charge of the finances now. John is sixty-five years old, and blanched white by his confinement.

The Dead Brought to Life.

Prof. Fee, of Bridgeport, Conn., has invented an artificial pair of lungs which he uses in restoring life in cases of drowning and asphyxiation. He is experimenting on a pet rabbit, and has already drowned it and restored it to life eleven times. The rabbit has also been suffocated by the fumes of burning charcoal until all signs of life were extinct. The professor then attached his patent bellows to the animal's mouth and forced oxygen into the lungs. The returning suction drew out the deadly gases, and the artificial respiration produced a muscular contraction and expansion of the lungs until life was restored. Prof. Fee claims that his invention will save human beings as well as rabbits.

IN THE BOWERY.

A Graphic Pen Picture of This Portion of Gotham.

There may have been a time in the dead and forgotten past when the Bowery was a portion of the primeval forest, when the cool shade of the arching trees robbed the sun of its scorching power, when the birds in the swaying branches caroled their melodies to the lonely shepherd or the love-sick swain. But it is not so now, alas! it is not so! The only verdant thing to be found in the Bowery of to-day are the green-goods men and the greenhorns from out West or from the old country. The fragrant perfumes from aromatic flowers are replaced by distressing odors of sauerkraut, ancient limburger and decayed vegetables. The twittering of the song-birds has been succeeded by the shrill voices of dime museum touts, the unearthly yells of Italian peanut men and the sulphurous oath of the professional loafer.

The giant trees of the forest have disappeared forever, and in their stead great iron stanchions spring from the curbstones—the supports of the Third Avenue Elevated railroad, over which the cars meander all day, carrying tired and overdue passengers, some seated, others standing and the majority swearing in the choicest dialect at the tardiness of the "rapid" transit.

The sylvan lawn, where once the shepherd reclined with his crook beside him, has given way to the malodorous saloon, where, in the absence of the shepherd, the crook is still to be found looking after the sheep and investigating free lunches at the side counters.

The shepherdesses of the past have descendants who wear more clothes and less modesty than their predecessors. They also attend to the sheep, wherever found, and their name is legion.

The Bowery birds are mostly of the hawk species, with an occasional sparrow or two thrown in.

The balmy dew which in days gone by used to fall from the fragrant leaves of the wide-spreading branches is now succeeded by the rusty moisture which falls from the iron girders on a rainy day.

No, my friends, countrymen and lovers, do not go to the Bowery expecting the name to indicate its character. It is a place of teeming life, bustle (male and female), hustle, rustle, muscle, trade, peanuts, bum lodging-houses, fraud and bad whisky. In it you will find banks, tanks and cranks, shoppers and coppers, stores and horses by scores, dry goods, fly goods, lie goods and rye goods, woolen wear, cotton wear, hardware, earthenware and other ware. It is a place for news, dues, loss, noise and views. It is the home of fights, lights, sights and "tights." It is full of banks, crooks, spooks and spooks. It harbors freaks, sneaks and squeaks. It has the call for "tail" gals. It hath a flourishing appearance; it doeth much business; it is noted among the thoroughfares of the world, but it is nothing like its title indicates.—N. Y. World.

They Were Hard.

"Miss Rosfula, will you please direct these envelopes for me some time to-day?" and the chief of division laid the work upon her desk.

"I s'pose I'll have to," she haughtily replied, as she took her pen and commenced the task.

"Here, Thomas, I'll give you half a dollar if you do this work," she said to a colored messenger, as soon as the chief was gone from the room. Thomas complied, and Miss Rosfula resumed her official tatting and yawning. Lady clerks work hard for their living.

The First Public Theater.

The first theater, that of Bacchus at Athens, was built by [illegible] 500 B. C. Marcellus' Theater at Rome was begun by Caesar and dedicated by Augustus, 13 B. C. Prior to that time dramatic readings and recitations were enjoyed only by the wealthy.

A Will and a Way.

"Where there's a will there's a way," and she sighed a sigh in the gloaming.

"Yes, Minette, where there's a Will there's a way to matrimony. I am the Will and the way," and he stepped out of the darkness to her side and kissed her.

THERE is an old proverb which says "there is nothing like leather." The man who made this wise remark evidently never saw a Welsh rabbit.

IS THERE ANYTHING NEW?

Prettinesses That Are Truly Novel the Present Season.

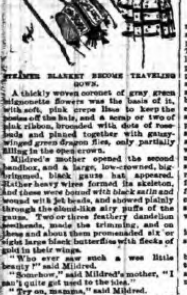
Such Are Turn Down Collars, and Embroidered Lace Cloaks, and Collapsible Bonnets and Parasols Which Are Jointed Like Fishing Rods.

[COPYRIGHT 1889.]

What is there really new?

Mildred is a bright girl and yesterday she had a bright idea.

Mildred is the household tyrant, albeit justice is tempered with mercy in her rule. She gowns herself and gows her mother, and yesterday her fiat went out that both of them must be hatted and bonneted for the Easter season. Mildred and her mother visited a high priced milliner, and a few hours later two interesting bandboxes were deposited at the door. Mildred untied the baby ribbons fastening down one cover and lifted a tiny humming bird of a capote into view.



Is There Anything Truly New

STEAMER BLANKET BECOME TRAVELING GOWN.

A thickly woven coronet of gray green mignonette flowers was the basis of it, with soft, pink crepe lisse to keep the roses off the hair, and a scrap or two of pink ribbon, brocaded with dots of rosebuds and pinned together with gauzy-winged green dragon flies, only partially filling in the open crown.

Mildred's mother opened the second bandbox, and a large, low-crowned, big-brimmed, black gauze hat appeared. Rather heavy wires formed its skeleton, and these were bound with black satin and wound with jet beads, and showed plainly through the cloud-like airy puffs of the gauze. Two or three feathery dandelion seedheads, made the trimming, and on these and about them promenaded six or eight large black butterflies with flecks of gold in their wings.

"Who ever saw such a wee little beauty?" said Mildred.

"Somehow," said Mildred's mother, "I can't quite get used to the idea."

"Try on, mamma," said Mildred.

"Let me see how yours looks," said Mildred's mother.

The young girl lifted, not the hat, but the bonnet, and the older woman set, not the bonnet, but the hat above her hair. Mildred looked triumphant, Mildred's mother wore a perplexed, slightly apologetic air.

"There's hardly a bonnet in the market that's not too youthful for a married woman," said Mildred.

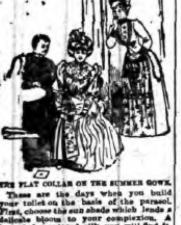
"My daughter thinks," said Mildred's mother, "that we elders will have to change places with the young people this season."

This is a true story accurately related, and it stands for a decided reversal of the usual order of fashions. The new bonnet is impracticable for the matron, if she be more than a twelvemonth or two married. Its smallness and piquancy and babbyish coquettishness make it positively laughable as a frame to serious faces with experience of life looking out of the eyes. The new bonnet is a girl's bonnet, while the wide brims and puckered veils of the round hats offer grateful assistance to complexions that have begun to fade.

The bonnet to the bud, the hat to the blown; that is something truly new.

What else is novel under the sun? You would never guess what has happened to the parasol.

The Pompadour stick, as the spring sap starts in the twigs, has grown longer and longer until now it projects fully eighteen inches, two feet in some specimens, beyond the cover. All very good, my lady, for a walking stick, before the sun gains power, but how about the trunk in which you must pack it when you start for Newport or Bar Harbor? Will you build a lean-to extension? A screw point or two does away with the necessity. Your parasol can be taken apart and doubled and then it will voyage to the ends of the world.



THE FLAT COLLAR ON THE SUMMER GOWN.

These are the days when you build your toilet on the basis of the parasol. First, choose the sun shade which lends a delicate bloom to your complexion. A brocaded or printed silk you will find it, very probably, instead of the solid colors of years gone by. Match it, match it exactly, match the lace which flounces it, for your promenade gown. Match it again, as to tinting, for your bonnet, and match it, if you are exacting in dress matters, for the gaiters of your low cut walking shoes. So shall you be a woman correctly attired.

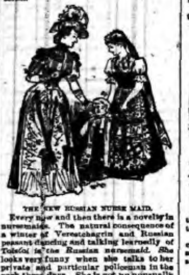
Last summer we submitted, submitted in July, to the pillory; this season we rebel. A dressy young friend has a gown, "lately landed;" it came up from the wharf yesterday. It is made of a sheer blue "ring cloth," so called because two breadths of it can be drawn at once through a finger ring. It is made with a gathered waist and belt and full skirt, with wide band of embroidery at the bottom. At the neck the bodice stops exactly where the standing dog collar used to start from. A simple cord is the finish, supplemented by a frill of dainty lace nearly six inches wide, lying down on the shoulders all around and leaving every curve of the pretty throat exposed. There is a great revival of plaited muslin collars of the shape lately appropriated to children, of flat embroidered collars and of the real lace collars pointed back and front which were the pride of our mothers in the days when they wore starch undersleeves.

There are two new cloaks. One is the cloak which pretends to be a short wrap worn over a walking gown. The same dressy friend started this morning to go out in a hurry. "But I can't wait for you to get off that tea gown and into a street dress," said the scribbler, who is always on the wing.

"But it's only to catch up my hat and cloak," returned the young person.

And then it was the scribbler's turn to open eyes while gazing on the peculiar garment which the young person buttoned on. It was a long street redingote in reality, close behind, loose in front, with hanging sleeves of a fine seaweed green cashmere. It hid the tea gown completely, but the miracle of it was the braiding. The entire top of it was embroidered in a sprawling arabesque pattern with black silk cords, giving the appearance of some pretty openwork material adjusted over the gown. The sleeves were actually doubles, the braid being joined in a passementerie pattern and falling away, partially open, from the cashmere beneath. Below the waistline the same policy had been adopted, the braid being formed by delicate hand embroidery into loose panels fastened at the top only and representing the slashed back and sides of an incapable wrap. You would have said to look at this wise young woman that she was an attractive blonde who had achieved for herself an attractive spring promenade wrap and gown.

The other new wrap is a pleasant cloak in lace, unlined, the most beautiful thing, for weather when you don't need any cloak at all, that has been brought out in years. It is to all intents and purposes a black chantilly circular. It is shirred at the neck all around and shirred upon a ribbon sash at the waist line behind. It has no sleeves. In front it falls loose and open, the fronts being weighted, not to give on the sometimes boisterous zephyrs, by a border of jet trimming on each side. The more costly cloaks are woven in one piece with a deep border in a different figure at the bottom, which is run with three or four rows of black ribbon. These lace cloaks are meant for wear over black or colored silk gowns, showing every detail of the dress through the transparent material.



THE NEW RUSSIAN NURSE MAID.

Every now and then there is a novelty in nursemaids. The natural consequence of a winter of Verestchagrin and Russian peasant dancing and talking learnedly of Tolstoi is the Russian nursemaid. She looks very funny when she talks to her private and particular policeman in the park these days. She is got up unusually swell. She wears a full skirt of dark red silk or woolen with a peasant bodice in black velvet and lace. The apron is her especial glory. It is a very handsome apron which is considered especially appropriate to her, an apron of four worked stripes, two of gray linen, one of blue stuff and one of red, separated by gray, pillow-worked insertion darned with red. Running flower patterns are worked in cross stitch on the stripes, and the strings are of red and white ribbons. With this very foreign get up is seen a muslin cap with full ruche, plaited crown and flowing sarcenet ribbon ends. She doesn't talk Russian very often but she looks as if she did, which after all is much the same thing.

The steamer blanket for summer travel is made up this season into a regular striped blanket travelling gown.

There is another attempt at the collapsible bonnet, but though novel it will not take because all the bonnets are as small as saucers and the collapsible article finds no mission to fulfill.

ELLEN OSBORN.

Fashion Notes.

Among flower pins the pansy is still easily a first favorite.

New card cases are of ivory overlaid with filigree silver.

The oddest of new card receivers is a bronze owl's head slightly flattened.

An emerald-set frog with diamond eyes is the quaintest of new lace pins.

Dull blue sashes are in high favor in Paris for wear with gowns of nettle green.

Anything or everything but the commonplace is allowed by the fashion of to-day.

A handsome scarf-pin for half-mourning has a jet gone set with two pearls for the head.

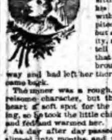
THE LITTLE STAR.



THEY all called her "The Little Star." One cold, stormy winter evening when Jack Dawson came down from his mine he found a little girl sitting by the door of his cabin shivering with cold and crying piteously. She was but a mite of humanity, and all she could tell of herself was that a woman had brought her a long way and had left her there to wait till she came back.

The miner was a rough, drinking, quarrelsome character, but there was in his heart a soft spot for the weak and suffering, so he took the little child into his cabin and fed and warmed her.

As day after day passed, and the weeks slipped into months, and no one came for the child, Jack began to form a strong attachment for her, and as he was always kind and gentle with her she grew to love him as a father. There were no other children in the camp, and the rough men all loved the "Little Star," and would do any thing to please her.

Two years passed away, and it came winter again, and a terrible storm set in. For days the snow fell, and the winds caught it up and drifted it into great heaps along the foothills and filled the gorges and passes. The miners were driven out of the mines and drifts, and the small camp became unusually noisy and boisterous, and day and night the saloon was filled with a drinking, quarrelsome crowd who spent the hours in wild carousals. Often the quiet of night was disturbed by the loud cursing and wrangling of the men as they disputed over a game of cards, and sometimes the cracking of pistols was followed by agonizing shrieks or dying groans of the poor, luckless victims.

One evening Jack Dawson and some more of them got into a quarrel over a game, and from words they soon came to blows, and in a little while pistols were drawn and shots exchanged promiscuously. Just at that moment the "Little Star" came in search of Jack, and one of the balls, missing its aim, sped on and found a lodgment in the breast of the child. Above the din and noise there went up a piercing scream, and they looked around in time to see the small figure waver for just one moment, then reel and fall to the floor. In an instant there was a hush, and a deathlike stillness reigned.

"My God, it is the Little Star, and we have killed her," and Jack dropped on his knees at her side and called her name over and over and plead with her to open her eyes and speak. Past differences were forgotten and the men gathered around and looked with sad eyes and blanched faces on the little form so white and still. Then some of them brought blankets and made a bed on the bar and they took her up gently and laid her on it. For a long time she lay quite still and a faint smile played over her lips.

Then the doctor came, but after he had seen the wound he shook his head sadly, saying:

"It is a bad shot, and she can not last long. She is going now."

"Don't say that!" Jack cried, starting up. "You must not let her die. You must save her. See how quietly she sleeps. My Little Star, wake up and tell us that you are going to live!"

Slowly she opened her eyes and looked about till they rested on Jack, and then as a bright light spread over her face she reached out her hand to him. He bent down close to her, and in a voice low and husky asked:

"What is it, Star?"

Once or twice the lips moved but no sound came from them.

"Give her some water," the doctor said, and they wet her parched lips, and for a little while she revived.

"You are not hurt?" she asked, eagerly, as she held Jack's rough hand in her own tenderness.

"No," Jack said, "but you are, and I wish it was me instead of you."

"I am glad," she went on, "for I was afraid they would hurt you, and I came to take you away."

"I wish you hadn't come."

That was all Jack could say, for his voice grew thick and husky and his heart was heavy.

"You have been good to me," she continued, "and I couldn't think of your getting hurt. I love—you—and—I—wanted—to serve—you."

The lips ceased to move and the tired eyes closed. The little hands lay folded across her breast and the lips parted in a sweet, satisfied smile.

"She is dreaming," some one whispered.

"May be she is seeing the angels the preacher was telling about up at the cabin last Sunday," another remarked, softly. "Mother used to talk about them in the happy old days back there in the East, but it's been so long ago that I'd forgotten about it till the preacher brought it all back to me. I expect Little Star is seeing the angels now, and they may be coming to take her away."

Nobody replied a word, but there were eyes and cheeks moist with tears, as the men stood about gazing silently on the dying child and recalling incidents of innocent, happy childhood.

"Boys," Jack spoke at last in a voice strangely soft, "she's been an angel lent to us for a little while, and now she's going to her rightful home. This is no fit place for such as she is, and she'll be happier and better off up there. But because I am, boys, I loved the child as fondly as ever a parent loved his own flesh and blood, and it is hard to have her go this way."

The eyes opened again and the little hand reached out to Jack.

"I am going away directly," she said, "to that beautiful place the preacher told about. I see the angels coming, and they are so bright and fair. I hear them singing such beautiful songs. Can you see them, all so happy and bright? Listen, they are coming nearer, and the singing grows plainer and sweeter. It is so glorious and grand. See how clear and warm the sun is shining.

"The clouds and the darkness are all gone away and the sunlight is falling on the mountains and in the valleys. See how it lights up the land where the angels come from. It is a pretty place and I shall be so happy there, with the flowers all in bloom and the fields and pastures so green and cool, and a beautiful river of clear, sparkling water flowing through the valleys. They used to sing about it up at the cabin of Sundays. Listen, the angels are singing about it now."

For a moment she remained in a listening attitude, then in a voice weak and wavering she joined the angels in singing:

'No night in that beautiful home,
No shade on its glory is seen,
The wonderful river of water of life
Flows soft through the meadows of green."

Her voice grew weaker and fainter as she approached the end, and the last words were scarcely above a whisper.

"I am too tired to sing now," she said, and for a little while she lay still. The men thought the end had come, but after awhile she opened her eyes once more, and drawing Jack closer, she said:

"It is a bright place, and there are so many happy people there. I see your mother there, I know it is her, for she looks so much like the little picture you used to show me, only her face is fairer and happier now. You—must—be—good—and—never—forget—your—Little—Star. Good-bye—good—"

The eyes closed, the lips ceased to move, and they knew that the Little Star had fallen asleep never more to wake in this life.

It was a long time before any one spoke or moved, and as the men gazed on the still form there came trooping up out of the shadow of the past pictures of homes away back in the East with the loved ones there—the patient, kind old mothers, the loving wives and the innocent, happy children whom they had not seen for so long, and they wondered if they were all living still, or if the good angels had come to bear some of them away to that beautiful home Little Star had talked about.

They buried the Little Star under the pines down by the river's edge where the wild flowers bloomed, and where the birds came every summer day to carol their songs. The miners followed her to the grave, and never did the dead have truer, quieter mourners than they were.

Jack went away, and it was years before they heard of him again, and then they learned that he was living a quiet, sober life. They said it was the Little Star who led him to it, and they were right.

TOM P. MONTFORT.

Fond of Fresh Air.

In our grandfathers' days there were no heaters or base-burning stoves; open fireplaces scorched a person's face, while his back slowly froze, and a fire in the bedroom was an abomination.

There is many a man living now who can remember, when a boy, cracking the ice in the basin for his morning wash, and dressing in the atmosphere of zero. Modern sanitary laws prescribe that houses shall be heated from top to bottom, and statistics show that we live longer than our forefathers. But the lovers of fresh air are not all dead, by any means.

A notable example is Queen Victoria, who is so fond of fresh air that she sleeps with open windows in the dead of winter, and during the daytime her apartments at Windsor Castle are so cold that her attendants and visitors are almost frozen.

The Empress Maria Theresa, of Austria, was more peculiar in this respect. Her apartments were rarely heated, and her writing-table, even in winter, was close to the open window, and the snow frequently fell on the paper which she was writing.

But these examples do not prove anything as to the healthfulness of cold, since, while Victoria is seventy years old, Maria Theresa died at the age of forty-five.

THEIR SILVERY TONGUES.

Mrs. Connor Thinks that Woman is a Natural Orator.

She Would Have Her Respond to Toasts and Enliven Social Occasions by Her Glittering Repartee—Training Women to Make Speeches.

[COPYRIGHT 1889.]

It is up in one of the cubbyholes of editorial rooms in the top of a big Vesey Street building, New York. The woman who is talking lifts to her visitor one of those striking faces whose unusual beauty is accentuated by prematurely white hair.

"Women are the born speakers of the human race. Once they overcome their ignorance and timidity they and the world will find this out."

At the Sorosis banquet two or three weeks ago they called Eliza Archard Connor the feminine Chauncey M. Depew. To liken one person to another carries with it comparatively little meaning, but Mrs. Connor who won her spurs as literary editor of the New York World, is the best known woman journalists of the country, and is gaining a wide repute in these days of after-dinner sallies for bright and graceful speeches which are the delight of her auditors.

Mrs. Connor cherishes a dearly beloved theory. It is expressed in the sentence above quoted. She believes to the fullest extent in the silvery tongue of the sex feminine. She has even taken holidays from newspaper writing to instruct beings in bonnets in the art of thinking on their feet and making extempore social addresses. In the millennium, she is convinced, half or more than half the wise and witty speakers in the great world's parliament will wear gowns. To the symposium of opinions on the true sphere of woman she brings her contribution, women are natural orators and it is a part of their mission on earth to sway public opinion by their eloquence, aided by the battery of bright eyes and fair countenances.

She swings about in her revolving chair and her eyes light with interest. "Women have the gift of language and its power. They are more often witty than men. Their repartee glints and sparkles. They are dowered with the emotional nature, the quick, generous feeling, the poetry and the imagination which belong to the oratorical temperament.

"There is nothing which stand in their way but nervous timidity, and that, indeed, it is lifting a mountain to remove. But is it not time that this mountain was cast into the sea? In their charitable and their educational and literary organizations women need the power of ready speech more and more every day. See a woman attempt to introduce a simple resolution in a public meeting, a meeting called in furtherance of some philanthropic scheme in which she is intelligently interested. The feathers on her bonnet quake, her voice is husky, her knees visibly knock together and one cannot look without pitying. See a group of women attempt to organize and conduct a meeting. They know nothing of parliamentary usage, and in ten minutes they are in a tangle. It is gall and wormwood to observe how the reporter covertly laughs at them in the paper next day. But women have brains, they can learn. Once set on the right track the ease with which they walk in it astonishes themselves."

"Could you suggest any training which would help a women to speak in public?"

"It takes no little training to speak in private, and society would be all the better for a revival of the art of conversation.

"A convenient list of 'don'ts' ought to hang beside the toilet table for ready reference while one is putting on one's best gown.

"Don't talk about your housekeeping trials.

"Don't talk about your servants.

"Don't talk about your babies.

"Don't—this very emphatic—don't talk about your physical ailments. Don't make a sewer of people's ears to pour diseases into. I remember listening one day to two women who met in a railway station. One talked about her head, then the other about her teeth, then the one about her stomach and so on. My head reeled and I was nearly ill before they got through. These are such occult influences at work as might spread an epidemic in that way.

"Don't manifest any curiosity about people's personal affairs. I remember once at the second meeting a woman asked me if my teeth were my own or false ones.

"Don't say anything unkind.

"These are the six prohibitions. Cultivate a spirit of sympathy, is the first and most important of the affirmative directions. Try to feel a genuine and warm hearted interest in people, and without knowing it you will radiate an influence such that will naturally unfold to you. In this way you may be sure of pleasing, and to please is a great part of a woman's mission. You will gain, too, the best each person can bring you of entertainment and information. Your social success will be assured.

"For a more specific rule read a good daily newspaper through from beginning to end every day and so keep yourself abreast of current events. I recommended this course to a lady in one of my last winter's classes who came to me afterward naively delighted. 'Why,' said she, 'it gives me something to talk about in the evening to the gentlemen.' She had been married fifteen years and it had never occurred to her to keep posted on topics in which the men of her house [illegible] were interested. I can count on my fingers the women of my acquaintance who regularly read the papers.

"Study the telegraphic news especially. Note what is said of public men and public measures, and have an eye to all discussions of social, economic and reformatory questions, matters which are becoming woman's special field."

"And for more public discussions."

"Still, study the newspapers. One of the first requisites for after-dinner speaking or social addresses or work on the platform is to keep, on topics of the day, completely au fait."

"And for special preparation."

"Nearly all women learn to stand." The revolving chair was pushed to one side, and a figure of unusually fine proportions was on its feet. The hands were clasped awkwardly in front, the body bent a little backward, one shoulder and one hip were a trifle higher than their fellows.

"Do you see anything ungraceful in this attitude? This is the way a woman who feels for the first time strange eyes fixed on her almost invariably stands."

The hands let go each other and dropped easily to the sides. The figure poised forward instead of back, chest up, hips withdrawn to subordinate position, weight on the balls of the feet instead of the heels. "This is the way she ought to stand. The novice moves her arm from the elbow," and a funny, familiar, awkward little feminine gesture provoked a smile. "The beginnings of grace are not possible until one learns that every arm movement must be controlled from the shoulder. A gesture of the forearm only is as awkward as the jerky motions of the marionette or the flapping of a seal. There is no swing about gesticulation taken from the elbow, it has no curves. Neither must the arm be extended to its utmost length unless one would give the impression of fatiguing rigidity. It is a safe rule to allow the elbow to be bent slightly." The easy sweep which followed illustrated the words. "One can't go into the details of voice culture or gymnastics or daylight will be gone and leave us entangled in the Delsartian system.

"What the speech shall consist of depends altogether on the topic and the occasion, but it is usually safe to begin by telling a funny story. That puts your audience into a good humor and secures your more serious points a hearing. A story from your own experience is apt to take better than any other kind."

"Is not presence of mind while introducing a resolution or seconding a motion of practical value to a far greater number of women than ever will be called upon for set orations?"

"If I had my way in the matter, parliamentary usage should be one of the branches of study taught in girls' schools. There is not now, so far as I know, a single institution in this country in which a growing woman is taught how to preside over the simplest meeting, or even where girls are given any systematic help or encouragement to form debating classes or societies for themselves. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has a department of parliamentary debate and so has the Woman's Industrial and Educational Union, of Washington. Some of the women before whom I lectured in Washington last winter, have just organized a club to carry on the work, which they call the Pro Re Nata. The method we followed there was a simple one. We adopted Roberts' Rules of Order and Cushings' Manual. Then at each meeting the class, for the sake of practice, went through the form of organizing a society by the election of President, Vice-President, Secretary, &c.

"There is a very small proportion of women nowadays who do not belong to some church or benevolent society, some literary or social club, some organization of one of the many varieties which are falling so largely into feminine hands. They must learn to manage these meetings in business-like fashion, to dispatch affairs without calling in a man to preside or wasting time in endless trivialities of discussion, or they must resign themselves to being deservedly laughed at and cartooned."

"Do you think that women make good after-dinner speeches?"

"Delightful, when they get over their distressing timidity and when the chance is offered; when they are not fenced off, as I wrote in an article a while ago, 'like a bound boy at a corn husking,' while the eating and the talking and the merrymaking is going on. And at women's lunches and entertainments how delightful the power of extempore speech may be. Yet again, if I had my way I would have speech-making as much a part of a school girl's training as writing compositions. She should be called on regularly to rise at a mimic dinner or public meeting and make the sprightliest, happiest speech that could be coaxed from her lips. She should practice till she could think on her feet as readily at least as at her writing desk.

"I want to go on record as having faith in the unlimited possibilities of women. I want to see them so develop that in the good time coming when we have evolved the perfect civilization they shall have the capacity of expression, the wide intelligence, the power to picture, to move, to thrill, which shall give them voice on all great social questions. I want them heard in the world's parliament. Congress will be symmetrical, not onesided then."

Mrs. Connor leaned back in the revolving chair and clasped two young-looking hands behind the beautiful white hair. Then she smiled a quiet little smile which completed the conquest of her listener.

GIRL BACHELORS.

No Longer Boards, But Takes Rooms and Lives Without a Chaperon.

I was counting on my fingers last evening the girls I know in New York who have set up apartments or installed themselves in establishments of their own. I ran over the digits of one hand, then of the other, and I repeated the operation so often that I lost all track of my reckoning. The girl bachelor grows enterprising. She no longer takes boards, she makes a bachelor home. She takes rooms. She lives in them without a chaperon. Her conduct is unquestioned. There is no limit to the pluck and the independence of the young and unmarried and perfectly decorous and entirely delightful unmarried woman. She is no longer an unprotected female. She has found out that after all a girl's best protection is a girl. The last decade evolved a phrase. The present decade is now at work evolving another. Bachelor suits is established in the language. Maids' suites or Dorothy apartments, as somebody in conversation the other day christened them, is going to find place before long.

Yesterday I drank a cup of tea with brown-eyed Dolly. Dolly has a small fortune and is 22. Her father died, her relations with her only relative, an aunt, were strained. The two did not thrive under the same rooftree. The kettle sings on the hearth most merrily since Dolly has hired a flat and a butler, and set up a buffet and receives calls on her own responsibility. Novel situation. Piquant experience. Delightful days. No surveillance and no "larkiness." Dolly is a lady and behaves like one. She is careful whom she entertains. She is as demure as a Puritan damsel, as jolly as a Parisian Bohemienne. She plays at housekeeping most cheerily.

Gray-eyed Dolly is a young wood carver. She supports herself by one of the newest occupations found practicable for women. She has three dainty rooms in the best place you would dream of, over a stable. Delightfully pretty rooms they are, with bric-a-brac picked up in all manner of odd places, summer sketches and winter studies, old plaster casts and new panels, inexpensive hangings with sudden flashes of color in scarlet ribbons, stained floors and Koula rugs make one forget that such things as Turkey carpets, silken divans, Louis XVI. chairs and old Sevres china were ever by anybody deemed desirable. Gray-eyed Dolly is wholly self-dependent. She has supported herself since she was fifteen. She tired of hall bedrooms. She doesn't like the dreary atmosphere of the average city boarding house. She does like her own little nest of a stable home where she has a cat and an open fire and can follow the innocent inclinations of her own sweet will. I have known her when a caller went away to offer him a cigar.

SHE LIKED HIM.

How a Fault-Finding Woman Made Herself Extremely Ridiculous.

People who have formed the habit of finding fault with every thing and on all occasions, not only render themselves disagreeable to those with whom they come in contact, but frequently place themselves in very awkward positions. This, says the Young People's Weekly, was the experience of a lady who, while attending service in a church in Providence, R. I., not long since, forgot that it is better to worship God than to spend the time in criticising the preacher.

The minister in question was a young man, scarcely twenty-one years of age, and was widely known as the boy-preacher. On this particular Sabbath he had exchanged with one of the city clergymen and his wife, who looked older than her husband, accompanied him. She was ushered into the pastor's pew, while the minister passed through the vestry and thence into the pulpit by a private staircase.

There were many persons in the congregation who had never seen the young minister, and there was a noticeable look of surprise when the boyish figure mounted the pulpit steps. By chance, a strange lady was seated by the side of the preacher's wife, and she began the following dialogue:

"Is that young thing pastor of this church?"

"No, that is Rev. Mr. D——."

"Goodness me! I don't want to hear him preach. Why, he's nothing but a boy!"

After a really eloquent sermon, which, if it had no other effect, changed the opinion of the strange lady, she turned to her neighbor and said:

"Pretty good sermon, wasn't it? I like him, don't you?"

As the "boy" descended from the pulpit and came to where his wife was standing, she quietly took his arm, and, turning to the astonished stranger, replied, with a smile: "Of course I ought to, for he is my husband!"

How Julius Wooed and Won.

"No, Mr. G. J. Caesar, I can not consent to barter away the happiness of single blessedness for the illusive ignis fatuus which you present. Love may come and love may go, and fly like a bird from tree to tree. But I shall love no more, no more till Edward McGinnis comes back to me. Good night. I shall always feel like a sister towards you, always."

"Then, farewell, a long farewell to all my hopes. This cold and cheerless night shall enwrap my dying form, and the placid sky be the canopy of my mortal remains."

"Ahal lovest thou me to thus much distraction? Dost hint at speedy dissolution of mortality? Then live, my Julius, live for thine Octavia. Live for Rome, and together we shall implore the vestal virgins for purchase of sorrow. Go ring at once the wedding bells. I shall not let thee hence this thyself, lest cruel fate doth rob me of the apple of mine eye."

"What! Dost thou accept me, my Octavia? Am I dreaming, or is this sweet fruition of my hopes reality and truth?"

"It is true, my Julius. I do most truly love thee."

"Then good-bye, Mary Ann Cleopatra."

Thus wooed and won the great Caius Julius Caesar, the winsome woman who was above suspicion.

The Baby Enjoyed It.

CENTENNIAL.

There is much in the proposed celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington as first President of the United States, which is appointed to take place in the city of New York, where he assumed the official oath a century ago, on the 30th of the present month, and despite a certain degree of absurd formality and [illegible] incorporated in the committees' adopted programme, the popular side of the affair will no doubt be both creditable and imposing.

One hundred years of Constitutional Government by the United States furnishes a theme for profitable thought and profound study, and therein every loyal citizen should engage.

Our national history during that period of time is unparalleled in the annals of civilization. Our vastly extended territorial limits, augmented millions of population, increased and diversified resources, and accumulated wealth, almost challenge belief, yet they stand truth-established.

To glory in such national growth is natural and commendable, but, the question properly arises and ought to be seriously pondered—"Have sound principles kept pace with material progress?"

That is a question worthy of earnest consideration.

Have the principles of freedom and equity ordained in this country a hundred years ago been strengthened by the flight of time? Are they venerated as of yore? Do the people value their preservation intact as the only safeguard for popular rights and civil liberty?

Does the patriotism of Washington remain a shining landmark for his countrymen and the world?

The honor of country and the public welfare constituted the aim and ambition of Washington. No selfish ambition swayed his actions, no corrupt gain passed through his hands, no political [illegible] of any name or kind was ever countenanced by him, [illegible] the country great and [illegible] of [illegible] he lived and died an unselfish and true-hearted patriot—the father of a mighty Republic and the friend of [illegible].

If the Centennial observance of the inauguration of President Washington can be made instrumental in re-kindling enthusiastic admiration of his virtues as a citizen and his wisdom as a civic [illegible], then indeed will April 30, 1889, be a glorious day.

Let us appropriately respect the memory of Washington by striving to follow his illustrious example and teachings.

The So-called Liquor Law Which Has Been Repealed.

We have been surprised, after the efforts of the so-called Local Option law have been frequently plainly stated, to find both men and women who seem to have no knowledge of the real facts. They believed that if the county voted for Local Option no beer, wine or liquor could be sold by any liquor dealer in the county.

When told liquor could be sold as freely as before, with the exception that it could not be sold by the drink, their surprise is unbounded.

When told that any man or woman could under the so-called Local Option law set up on any street or road in the county, unlimited quantities of liquor and beer by the quart or gallon, they said they never understood the law.

When told that to make this sale no one of these liquor dealers would be compelled to take out a license of any kind, that they simply paid the Government tax and were not under the restrictive laws of any city, and were not compelled to go before the court, they have nothing to say, except that they have been deceived.

This state of affairs the Werts bill [illegible]. It allows sale by the drink, as now, but any man or woman who sells by any measure must pay a high license fee. It is, therefore, when compared with the so-called Local Option measure, a high license law compared to the unlimited unlicensed sale of spirituous drink.—[illegible] Banner.

A False Charge of Extravagance Disproved.

Again the Central Times is guilty of misleading its readers. When it wished to prove that the city with [illegible] expenditures can be run with $7,000 [illegible], the figures themselves prove the nonsense of it.

But here's an item to the following effect: a false impression and perverts the facts in a way that does not show the [illegible] dishonesty.

[illegible]

The facts of the matter are—[illegible] company has had a "sliding house [illegible]" for the last five years, and it has [illegible] other [illegible] necessary for the rapid service that so often means a saving of many thousands of dollars of property, and sometimes lives. The [illegible] can now be hooked-up and driven out of the house in fifteen seconds from the first tap of the bell.

It is now intended to furnish No. 1's house with these needed accessories, and a large portion of the appropriation [illegible] in the item above is to build in a substantial manner the rear of the house, which is now about tumbling down, and which was only a temporary structure originally.

The quotation above from the Times is also a most unjust and uncalled for slur upon Councilmen Myers, Erickson and Moffett, the Committee on Fire and Buildings. These gentlemen meet every Friday evening and receive and consider suggestions and reports from the chief and others concerning the maintenance and effective service of the department. [illegible] cent of the City's money will be spent by this Committee before the City's [illegible] it and will be [illegible] thereby. The Times accuses the Council of wasting the people's money simply to get rid of it.

Eggs Plentiful and Cheap.

The hens are doing their full duty for the community this year, and it has been a long time since eggs were as plentiful and cheap. One [illegible] dealer reports that he has 1,500 dozen of eggs to sell, but he cannot find a market for them at any price, having offered to sell them as low as twelve cents a dozen. [illegible] a public benefactor, and we take off our hats to the hens. The egg market, however, is likely to fluctuate a little between now and Easter, and notwithstanding the fact that eggs can be had in abundance, the price invariably rises about Easter time, according to custom.

A Damage Suit Settled.

The case of Miss Jennie Davis, of New Brunswick, against a man from this city, in which she claimed $10,000 damages for betrayal under promise of marriage, has been settled by mutual agreement.

Middlesex Gun Club.

The next grand event of the Middlesex Gun Club will be on April 30, when a guaranteed purse of $150 will be offered to contestants at five birds, $15 entrance, 15 birds each. Other interesting events will also occur on the same day, of which future notice will be given.

Tenure of Office.

The bill which has passed the Senate provides that the new act in regard to the honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors holding public office or position, passed April 9, 1889, provides that the provisions of the act to which this is a supplement shall not apply to the tenure of office of the Corporation Counsel, Corporation Attorney or other law officer, City Comptroller, City Treasurer, City Collector, Collector of Revenue, Water Registrar, Water Purveyor, or chief clerk to any municipal board of any city in this State.

BURNED TO DEATH IN SAVING HER HOUSE.

A burning match in a lad's hand applied to a bunch of dry leaves, last Thursday afternoon, started a fire that spread beyond control, and an aged woman now lies dying with the lower part of her body terribly burned from that same fire.

A son of the Rev. Dr. Muldenkey started a bonfire, as stated above, on his father's place back of North Plainfield. A brisk breeze that was springing up sent the flames along into some old dry blue-bent grass, and from there they leaped their tongues around a new post and rail fence, entirely destroying it, swept on into the adjoining woods, and soon the conflagration was leaping like wild-fire over the second mountain.

Mr. Muldenkey and his son made heroic efforts to check the flames, but the heat was so intense they were compelled to give up exhausted.

In the track of the fire and in the direction the wind was blowing, lived a Mr. Tisley and his wife, an aged couple, on a little farm. The approaching fire threatened to destroy their home and all their possessions. They went bravely to work to save their buildings.

Mr. Tisley, who is partly paralyzed, could do little, but his wife, a woman of 75 years, worked with a will until exhausted she fell in the line of the fire. In an instant her clothes were in a blaze.

Her husband hastened to aid her but was only able to draw her out of the track of the fire. In his trying to tear her burning garments off, his hands and face were very much burned.

Not until everything was almost burned from Mrs. Tisley's body, was she rescued and carried to the house by some neighbors who had turned out to fight the fire, and fortunately discovered Mr. and Mrs. Tisley's plight in time to rescue them from certain death.

A physician was summoned, who found the lower part of Mrs. Tisley's body so badly burned, that he could give no hope of her recovery, for the shock and burns were too severe for so aged a woman to rally from.

Mr. Tisley's burns, although serious as well as painful, are not necessarily fatal. Kind neighbors are doing all in their power to help and comfort the unfortunate couple. Mr. and Mrs. Tisley have no relatives nearer than California.

Dog Prohibition Probably.

The Governor has signed the bill authorizing the killing of all unmuzzled dogs in townships. The City Council of Plainfield passed an ordinance last Summer, authorizing the execution of all unmuzzled dogs found running on the streets in this city all the year 'round, but there are about as many dogs as pedestrians on the streets now-a-days. The ordinance prohibiting dogs from running at large seems to be inoperative.

Grace Church Services.

Services in Grace church during Holy week will be as follows: Monday 10 A. M. and 4:30 P. M. Tuesday 10 A. M. and 4:30 P. M. Wednesday 10 A. M. and 4:30 P. M. Maundy Thursday 10 A. M. and 7:30 P. M., when there will be a celebration of the Holy Communion in commemoration of the institution of the Lord's Supper. Friday 10 A. M., and 12 to 3 P. M., service of prayer and meditation. Evening prayer at 4:30 P. M. Saturday, (Easter Eve) 10 A. M. and 4 P. M.

Probably Another Fake.

James Dwyer, of Bound Brook, and John Dougherty, of New Brunswick, heavy-weights, are training hard for their fight that is to come off soon. Both men are confident of winning, and their friends are backing them heavily. They will fight for the championship of New Jersey. The fight is for $100 a side and a purse of $200. Dwyer entered into an agreement to fight a man in this city some time ago, but the ticket sellers got all the proceeds, and the spectators and principals got left after dodging the manager around until three o'clock one Sunday morning.

Runaway at Dunellen.

While Mr. Walter G. Runyon and son, of Netherwood avenue, this city, were driving along West Front street, in the neighborhood of the Dunellen round-house Sunday morning, the horse became frightened at a piece of paper and ran away. The buggy was upset and the occupants thrown out promiscuously in the roadway. The frightened animal started across lots and finally brought up in collision with a post and rail fence, wrecking the shafts on the vehicle. The horse was subsequently caught some distance from where the accident occurred.

Both Mr. Runyon and his son escaped injury.

[illegible] She is Another Victim of a Man's False Promises.

Mary Jane Mills, some time ago a servant at the corner of Seventh street and Crescent avenue, and later in the employ of a family on Central avenue, has made complaint to the city authorities that she is compelled to burden the Overseer-of-the-Poor with the support of her child, born Feb. 6th, last.

William Flack, a coachman at the place first mentioned above, is charged with being the child's father in the girl's sworn complaint, which goes on to say that he has never married her as he promised.

The man has been arrested and the case will be heard at once.

Every Word of it True.

The following from the Democrat of Flemington, has the good old Hunterdon ring about it:

"It gives us much pleasure to read in our exchanges that ex-Gov. Leon Abbett is likely to be the Democratic candidate for Governor of New Jersey next Fall.

"Aside from his peculiar fitness for the gubernatorial chair, the assurance which is given that he will accept the nomination is a prophecy that the Democratic party of the State will be the winner in the coming November battle.

"Leon Abbett is at once the noble champion of personal liberty, and the able advocate of the people's rights. It was his broad mind that conceived the railroad taxation bill while governor of the State in 1884, and it was his fearless hand that grappled with the overbearing monopoly and forced it to bear its share of the burdens of taxation, thus relieving the people of a burden already borne too long.

"That he is cordially hated by the railroad rings and Republican politicians who are in their power, is all the more an endorsement of his righteous course through all his public career. They cannot defeat him, for the people are behind him. They recognize in him all those qualities of head and heart that stamp him as their friend and advocate. They will elect him.

"All honor to Leon Abbett. Nominate him, and the fight is won."

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

The majority of the Council have, by their votes, cut off a revenue of about $10,000, by refusing to grant liquor licenses, and the poor man who "spends his money over the bar", will now be obliged to make up that deficiency by paying his extra quota of the city tax into the city treasury. The Americanism of the scheme is hardly understood. On the one hand the "poor man" is prohibited from drinking beer; on the other, he is taxed to make up the deficiency necessarily incurred by the Council refusing to grant licenses. Such was the order of things Monday evening.

President Dumont called the meeting to order at 8:30 o'clock, and besides him the following Councilmen responded to the roll call: Messrs Dunham, Erickson, Gallup, Marsh, Moffett, Newhall and Myers,—8. Mr. Jenkins came in later.

City Clerk O. B. Leonard read the call, which specifically stated that the object of the meeting was to act upon an ordinance concerning the assessment and collection of taxes in the city of Plainfield for the year 1889.

President Dumont said he felt it his duty to call a special meeting for the above purpose, claiming that the proposed $30,000 tax levy for the year would leave the city in a bad shape at the end of the year. He stated that the ordinance introduced and adopted at the last meeting could not be re-considered, but a new ordinance could be introduced instead.

Mr. Newhall introduced an ordinance fixing these amounts: For general purposes, $25,000; for support of poor, $4,500; for public library, $2,450; for fire department purposes, $10,000. The ordinance was read twice, and laid over for debate.

A long discussion followed. Mr. Marsh claimed that a levy of $20,000 for general purposes would be amply sufficient; he considered that the collection of back taxes would be a good field for missionary work. Mr. Marsh produced figures to bear him out in his argument, adding that with a little pushing, $6,000 of the delinquent taxes could be collected for this year's use. He made a motion to amend the proposed ordinance by substituting $22,000 for general purposes, instead of $25,000.

Mr. Dunham took the chair, so as to give the President an opportunity to speak. Mr. Dumont said that it was intended by certain members of the Council to make the tax levy lower than last year, while the expenditures would be more. He contended that it was the business of the Council to provide for its expenditures, and not encroach upon the delinquent taxes; he considered that the money spent on the streets had been invested in a lasting enterprise.

Mr. Erickson thought that $20,000 would be needed to see the city through, allowing $6,000 for street work.

Mr. Newhall said that in his judgment $25,000 would be fair and equitable, and that by careful management about $2,000 could be turned over to the next Council.

Mr. Marsh's amendment to make the levy for general purposes $22,000, was lost, Messrs Dunham, Gallup, Jenkins and Marsh, voting in support of it.

The ordinance was then adopted on its second reading and ordered engrossed and advertised.

Council then adjourned.

The Centennial Anniversary.

"Arrangements are being made that on the morning of April 30, 1889, at 9 o'clock, the church bells all over the country shall ring to celebrate the event of 100 years ago, when the church bells throughout the 13 States rang out to call the people together to pray for the success and prosperity of the country under George Washington, that day inaugurated President of the United States.

Relics of Past Campaigns.

THE PRESS office has been presented with some odd remnants of past political campaigns. They are paper lanterns inscribed with the faces and dates of former presidential candidates. "J. Tyler, 1841-1845," is one, another is "Fillmore, 1850-1853," and "Jackson, 1829-1837," is the oldest of them all. The lanterns are well preserved, and resemble those still in use upon like occasions. Mr. T. J. Gillies found them among the contents of a house where he was having an auction sale.

DeVoe's Predictions.

Meteorologist DeVoe predicts an abundance of rain up to August 1, with prevailing Easterly winds. The meteorological conditions which prevailed on March 15, and produced the storm that swept the Samoan Islands so disastrously, he says will again occur today, when violent Northeast gales are predicted along the Atlantic coast. The prophet thinks the storm will be followed by very warm weather till about April 23, when there will be thunder storms and a sudden fall in temperature.

Antiquated Ideas.

The Unionist Gazette of Somerville says: "At Scotch Plains the other day a proposition was made to build a modern school house in the place of the old, rickety one in existence. The vote taken stood 64 to 78 against the project. We are not surprised at the result. The average Jerseyman still retaines antiquated notions on the subject of education. He thinks the hard benches, long hours, lady teachers with small pay, and plenty of flogging for the boys much better than a modern establishment with the usual improvements."

Tax Exemption for Firemen.

The following bill, introduced by the Hon. John Ulrich—of interest to this city and many of its citizens—passed the Assembly at Trenton, 11th instant, unanimously:

And be it enacted, That all exempt firemen of any city, town, borough, township or fire district in this State shall be exempt from general and special poll tax, and from State, county and municipal taxation upon real or personal property, or both, not exceeding in the aggregate five hundred dollars, which may be assessed against them or their said property by the authority of the municipal corporation in the service of which they became exempt firemen; provided, that all persons who heretofore have become exempt firemen by reason of membership and service in any fire-engine, hose, or hook and ladder company, a majority of the active members of which company have subsequently been constituted a company of the regular fire department of any city, town or borough of this State, shall be entitled to the same rights and exemption from taxation provided in this act as if they had become exempt firemen in the service of such city, town or borough.

SCOTCH PLAINS JOTTINGS.

The school house excitement has somewhat subsided, and things are beginning to run along in the old way. Knowing ones, however, say that the volcano is only slumbering, and that two or three weeks will show some strange developments.

People have to think of something else, anyway. Spring is advancing with coach and six, and the farmers must prepare for it. The accumulated rubbish of the Winter is given to the flames; hence the pleasant odor of burning that fills the air. Then there is the annual house-cleaning which in many families takes place at about this time. The people who pass the Winter in New York, now that the season is over, are coming out to the quieter rural life; the Spring Poet appears on the street, and is occasionally seen furtively ascending the narrow stair that leads to the sanctum and undying fame; sometimes, too he is seen descending therefrom.

Now and then a stray blue-bottle is heard buzzing his solitary way around the ceiling; children form parties to hunt the wild flowers; the verandas begin to be occupied, and the annually recurrent road cleaner tumbles along in its noisy but useful way; altogether, wherever we look, from every part of the country round us, come unmistakable signs that the long deferred Spring is here.

The Public Library is now an established institution and is open to the public three nights a week — Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays. It is also open on the afternoons of those days.

The Library rooms have been furnished in a very pleasing way, so that it is a most agreeable place in which to pass the evening. The bookshelves are filled with well-selected volumes, some three or four hundred in number; the tables have a plentiful assortment of magazines and weeklies. But the most popular feature, so far, is that of the games. Four or five checker-boards, chess, back-gammon, the really good game of go-bang, parchesi, halma and other modern inventions and several copies of that venerable stand-by, dominoes, these furnish means to crowd the game room every night; so much so, indeed, that late comers sometimes find it difficult to obtain a spare table.

The Library Trustees held a meeting on Wednesday, the tenth. After some deliberation a rule was adopted to the effect that in the evening no boys under fourteen should be admitted. Several causes concurred in producing the adoption of this rule; the boys have the Library pretty much to themselves in the afternoon, and by coming in the evening as well they must of necessity crowd out to a certain extent, from the use of the games at least, those who can not come except at that time. Besides which, small boys find it very difficult to keep as quiet as a great many think they ought to be. I am told, however, that it is probable that for a while the Librarians will be conveniently blind, and so long as the boys under fourteen do not make their presence known by any tremendous noise the person in charge may not notice that there are any boys under fourteen there.

The young men of the place find the Library an attractive evening resort, and three of them have volunteered to assist Mr. Townsend, the popular and efficient Librarian.

In this time of sowing and planting, one is often unable to obtain good seeds, as those put up by many of the smaller companies, and which can be bought anywhere, are apt to be unsatisfactory, and to have good reliable seeds is a thing of the first importance, in more senses than one. So it will be a piece of good news to many to learn that Mrs. Richie has now a stock of Henderson's seeds on hand, which she sells at list prices. To be able to purchase the seeds of this old and reliable firm without the trouble of sending to town, is a boon indeed.

Services continue at the Baptist church in the absence of Mr. Parkes, who is in Europe with his family, enjoying a well earned vacation. There is an air of "Where's - that - two - hundred - and - fifty-thousand - dollars" on the faces of the most prominent church members, and from their nervous and careworn appearance I think they are beginning to feel the effects of that hope deferred, which maketh the heart sick.

SUBURBAN SAUNTERER.

—The busiest persons just now are the painters and paper-hangers. They are overrun with work and the bosses are all getting rich.

Committee On County Roads.

The Committee appointed by the Board of Freeholders to inspect the county roads and to make a report at the next meeting of the board, which will occur on Thursday, April 18, made their second trip in carriages, throughout certain portions of the county Monday afternoon.

The New Presbyterian Church.

The First Presbyterian church in this city must be finished, according to contract, on May 1, but the date for dedicating the new edifice has not yet been officially announced. Mr. Howard A. Pope is now engaged in cutting and putting down the carpets, which work will require at least two weeks' time. The church building, so far as its external appearance is concerned, is about completed, but there is still plenty of work to do on the inside.

In Jail Seven Times.

Constable Hand of Scotch Plains arrested a man at that place, Monday, on suspicion of his being the prisoner who escaped from the County Jail at Elizabeth on Sunday night. The man was seen acting suspiciously about Scotch Plains, and the officer took him in custody. The prisoner gave his name as "Ginnis" and stated that he had an uncle living on Plainfield avenue. The arrest was made on information furnished by one Lawrence Wallace, who told the constable that the man was wanted in Elizabeth to answer a charge of mayhem. The prisoner did not turn out to be the escaped convict, but Constable Hand ascertained that he had already served seven terms in the Elizabeth Jail, on various charges. His real name is John Kiely, and his home is at Elizabethport.

To Be Bought and Improved.

It is stated upon good authority that a price equal to the amount of the mortgages, has been offered for the extensive property on the corner of Grove street and Prospect place, and which must be sold at Sheriff's Sale on Saturday, April 20, as published in THE PRESS of last evening.

The property may possibly be bought by parties in the Park, and if so, some radical changes will be made, which will add very much to the attraction of this pretty location. Across the street from this property is the handsome residence, and spacious grounds of Mr. Chas. Matthews, having a frontage on Grove street of 200 feet and about 300 on Prospect place. Mr. Matthews is having a new sidewalk, four feet wide, placed the entire length of his property on both streets, which will be a very marked improvement.

Easter Music by the Holy Cross Choir.

The vested choir of the Holy Cross church, North Plainfield, is the largest in this vicinity.

It is composed of thirty-five voices, including both men and boys, and is attracting considerable attention, judging from the numbers that attend the services on Sunday mornings and afternoons, many of whom are strangers.

The musical selections for Easter Sunday are well chosen, and under the leadership of Mr. Chas. W. Kellogg, choir-master, and Mr. Wm. E. MacClymont, organist, the following will be the programme for that occasion—services commencing at 11 A. M., and conducted by the rector, the Rev. T. Logan Murphy:

Middlesex Gun Club.

April 10 was regular club shoot day among the members of the "Middlesex Gun Club," on their grounds at Dunellen, and the fine weather, together with the popularity and standing of the Club as the crack organization of its kind in the State, brought a large number of shooters from many sections, who indulged in the sport of smashing "crockery," as the blue rock, or inanimate target, is termed, to their heart's content. In consequence of the failure of a New York firm to furnish a certain number of live birds, there was a dearth of this sort of shooting during the day which, however, will not occur again, as the members have made arrangements to always have a sufficient number on hand at future shoots.

Among those present that day who are considered crack shoots of the State, were "Uncle Billy Ziegler," "Dutch" *Charley Smith, W. S. Cannon, the one-*armed veteran shooter, Enoch D. Miller, "Williams," Wm. Vanslicklen, "Uncle" John D. Voorhees, "Maker," "Jersey," S. G. Smith, the genial President.

The next grand event of the Middlesex will be April 30th, when a guaranteed purse of $150 will be offered to contestants at five birds, $15 entrance, 15 birds each. Other interesting events will also occur the same day, of which future notice will be given.

The Case of Ex-Councilman Simpson Must be Retried.

Before Justices Wadsworth and Hetfield, afternoon April 10, and a jury of twelve men, the case of the Overseer-of-the-Poor of the city, vs. ex-Councilman Robert Simpson, was tried. Messrs Jackson & Codington appeared for the defendant.

The result was a disagreement of the jury. It stood six to six and was discharged. Another jury must now be summoned and the case retried.

The necessity of the action brought by the city, arises in this way. A servant woman who is called "Carrie"—because her real German name can neither be pronounced nor spelled—and who looks thirty-five, but testifies she's "twenty-two," appeared before Overseer-of-the-Poor Nodyne, and made complaint to the effect that her child about to be born, would become a charge upon the city. She swore that the father was Robert Simpson.

Then it was at once the city's duty to find if that was so, and compel the guilty one to give a bond to indemnify the City against the burden of the coming child's support. Corporation Counsel Marsh was present for the city. A short trial ended in placing before the jury no facts nor evidence—merely the unsupported word of the girl and the emphatic denial of the man.

The girl swore that one afternoon in the latter part of August the accused assaulted her in the front parlor of his sister-in-law's house, where she was employed as a servant. The defendant swore it was a lie. It was endeavored by his counsel to show by witnesses, that a man working at the same place with "Carrie" at this time, was very friendly to her and she to him. That they subscribed for a paper together, and held long conversation in the German language; and that their bedrooms were on the same floor. This man—only known by the name of Charley—left his situation in this city and left the [illegible] about the time that Carrie's [illegible] made to the Overseer-of-the-[illegible] had, however, been back to [illegible] since, and tried to see her.

But as this possibly important witness for the defence was not present in person nor by deposition, surmises as to his relations with Carrie were of no weight, and the case went to the jury with no evidence to support either side.

Summer Lingering in the Lap of March.

Plainfield's weather during the month of March showed an average temperature of 39.8 which is over six degrees above freezing.

The warmest days were the 23d and 24th, when the temperature reached 65; the coldest was the 30th, when it fell to 23.

The total amount of rainfall for the month was 3.75 inches, almost half of which fell on the night of the 28th. There were 16 clear days, 11 cloudy, and 4 partly cloudy.

A Plainfield Lady's Academic Honors.

Miss Helen E. Horan, of West Seventh street, a former graduate of the Plainfield High School and at present a pupil of St. Elizabeth's Academy, Madison, has successfully passed the teacher's examination of the Brooklyn College. Her average was of such high standing as to reflect great credit upon the schools, wherein she was educated.

She received the certificate of the College in Brooklyn yesterday, before all the assembled Board of Education. She will be graduated from St. Elizabeth's in June, where she is at present completing the regular Academic course, besides taking music, painting and other extra branches, in all of which she is very proficient, and stands among the best in the Academy.

A Commendable Enterprise.

The ladies composing the Board of Managers of the Relief Association have organized themselves into a Provident Savings Committee, with Mrs. E. L. Goddard, Chairman, and Miss Florence Tweedy, Treasurer.

The object of this organization is to induce those who have no bank account to lay aside from their weekly earnings such sums as they can spare, which being placed in the hands of the Treasurer, will constitute a fund from which they may draw as necessity requires.

A Savings Bank account will be opened when the sum due to a depositor amounts to One Dollar ($1.00).

The Treasurer shall have charge of the funds, keep a careful account of the same and report the condition of the Treasury at the regular monthly meeting.

Farmer Hilbert Thrown From a Load of Lumber and Badly Injured.

Farmer Joseph Hilbert drove down from Myersville early Monday to get a load of lumber. The old gentleman stopped at Cook's lumber yard and fed his horse while the lumber was being loaded. When he started for home about ten o'clock the bit was not properly adjusted in the animal's mouth, and the horse became frightened and ran away. Directly opposite Reynolds' drug store on Park avenue the wagon struck a telephone pole and Farmer Hilbert was thrown out and considerably injured about the head and body. The horse ran to the opposite side of the street, wrecked several small express wagons belonging to A. M. Vanderbeek & Co., and came very near exploring the interior of the store. At this point the animal was captured.

The injured man was helped into Reynolds' drug store, where Dr. Murray attended to the wounds. Later he was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital in a carriage.

The Tramp Nuisance.

Complaints reach this office daily concerning the large number of tramps who roam the streets of this city day and night, and strike terror in the hearts of ladies and others who are obliged to be out, especially at night. The greatest number of complaints come from the Fourth Ward in the neighborhood of Grant avenue, and some of the residents in that locality declare that unless they can be protected against the demands of this class of brutes, they will move away from the city.

One of the merchants on South Second street told a PRESS reporter recently that unless that section of the city was provided with sufficient police protection he would pull up stakes and remove both his business and his family to another town. He says that many of the families in the immediate vicinity of the Potter Press Works, have as many as seven and eight applications daily from tramps, who demand something to eat. In case their request is not granted the men oftentimes become insulting and leave uttering threats. In some instances the men ask for money and tobacco, which they oftentimes get.

Our informant says that there is a tramps' rendezvous along the railroad bank, directly back of the Potter Press Works, and that anywhere from a dozen to eighteen men gather there nightly and carry on their drunken orgies.

Most of the male population residing in that locality are employed in nearby factories, and their wives and children, are at home unprotected during the day time, and for this reason alone they should be protected.

Similar complaints come from other parts of the city and North Plainfield, and the general opinion prevails that the tramps should be weeded out and made to "move on."

—The practice of leaving horses on the streets unhitched and unattended, is dangerous.

—The Easter services which will be held in the different churches on Sunday next, promise to be very elaborate.

—Beginning on Friday April 19th a series of lectures will be given in Reform Hall on the doctrines of the Plymouth Brethren, by Mr. F. W. Grant. Admission will be free.

Grace Church Fair.

The ladies of Grace church have decided to hold their fair on the afternoon and evening of Wednesday, the 24th inst., in the school building, corner LaGrande avenue and Washington street, the proceeds of which are for the benefit of the Building Fund.

All who wish to see another handsome church edifice erected in our city, should attend and lend a helping hand. It is for a good cause, and you will not regret what you do towards furthering the project.

The ladies of this church have labored hard to swell the building fund, and we wish them a full house and large sales.

Discovered by a Letter Carrier.

Friday night about half-past seven o'clock, a young son of Horace Martin, the Somerset street blacksmith, discovered his father's place of business to be on fire about the forge.

In company with another lad he ran to find a policeman, and meeting a letter-carrier, Wm. Demarest, near the Post Office, informed him of the fact. The latter went to the shop and found the blaze from the burning embers of the forge extending to the wooden partition adjoining. He extinguished the fire with a few pails of water.

This is the second time this place has been on fire from the same cause in two weeks.

Death of Deacon Manning Stelle.

At his home on Central avenue at five minutes past 11 o'clock Saturday, occurred the death of Deacon Manning Stelle, from old age. The deceased was in the 89th year of his age, and has been a resident in this place since his childhood. For the past fifty years he has held the office of Deacon in the First Baptist church, which position he occupied up to the time of his death.

The deceased has had two wives, the last one being a Miss Jane Mollinson, who died three years ago this coming June. The surviving members of the family consist of one son, Mr. R. M. Stelle, the druggist, and two daughters, namely Miss Julia Stelle and Mrs. Wm. Randolph.

The funeral took place from the house on Tuesday at 2:30 P. M. Interment in Evergreen Cemetery.

The Funeral of Mrs. Tracy.

There was a large attendance, Friday, at the funeral of Mrs. Martha Sherman Tracy, mother of J. Evarts Tracy, and sister of Senator William M. Evarts, who died in this city, Wednesday, at her son's home on West Eighth street, in her 80th year. She was the daughter of Jeremiah and Mehitable Evarts, of Boston, and the widow of the late E. C. Tracy.

The Rev. E. P. Ketcham of the First Presbyterian church, offered prayer and read a selection from the Scriptures. The Rev. Wm. R. Richards of the Crescent Avenue church, spoke most beautifully and sincerely of the dead. A quartette composed of Mrs. J. K. Myers, Miss Clara Dunn, Mr. M. C. VanArsdale and Mr. F. W. Runyon, sang "Asleep in Jesus" and other appropriate selections.

Senator Evarts, his law partner Mr. Rufus Choate, and a number of other distinguished people were present from New York and elsewhere. The remains were taken to Windsor, Vermont, today, for interment.

The New Musical Comedy owned by Thatcher, Primrose and West.

The plot of "Up to the Times" is indeed original. It deals in a harmless satire upon the theological ideas, imbued in the towns folk of a little village in Vermont, who are anxious to be "Up to the Times" and dismiss their old parson, who has baptised and married everybody in the little hamlet, to make room for a modern theologian, who, in receiving the call stops en route in New York to visit his cousin, an actor. The actor hearing the destination of the young dominie, hits upon a plan to take his place, for the purpose of meeting the daughter of a wealthy old deacon, with whom he has fallen desperately in love during the previous Summer. His scheme works successfully for a time, and he is sworn installed as the master of his flock when the real parson puts in his appearance, and is denounced as a fraud. At a trying moment for the young hero, when he is called upon for a service that necessitates his respect for the clergy, and the honesty of his purpose, his heroic nature and true manhood asserts itself, and a happy denouement is the result.

The play abounds in original music that that has its connection with the plot, which is something unusual in the musical comedies of the day. There are an abundance of pretty girls in songs, dances etc., and the entire scenic effects are carried by the company, which have been prepared by Goatcher & Young, of New York. Frank Tannehill, Jr., (who will be remembered for his artistic performance in The Henrietta with Robson & Crane, and The Private Secretary,) will appear as the Actor-Preacher.

The comedy will be given here on Monday, April 22.

FIRST BLOOD FOR THE PLAINFIELD CLUB.

The team of the Plainfield Bowling Club are still the local king pins. The first game between the rival bowling organizations of this city was contested at the Olympia alley, Friday evening, and a very close contest it was. A team of the recently organized Crescent club was stood up against the Plainfield club team, and in the early stage of the match it looked very much as if the latter would get the worst of it.

The first frame closed with Plainfields eight pins ahead, but on the second frame the Crescents led by six, and on the third by six. Right here age and experience began to tell. The Crescents included some quite young bowlers whose nerve was not yet hardened, and a number that had never been in a match before; whereas the Plainfields had bowled in other competitions, and had the experience of both winning and losing games on the very alleys they were then using.

On the fourth frame the Plainfields led by twenty-two, and the Crescents showed signs of being rattled. Every man of them in that frame had made a break excepting H. Voehl and Demarest. They started in on the fifth with a brave effort to regain their lead. Six of the team in succession came to the scratch without a break, but the last four only made a total of 37. This closed with the Plainfields' lead cut down to sixteen.

In the sixth frame, however, the Crescents fell all apart, and the Plainfields gathered themselves together. The latter team made only three breaks, while the former made eight. Captain Stover did his best to rally his men, but luck seemed to be against him and all the rest of his best bowlers.

Captain Davis' team bowled steadily on and increased the lead each frame until the game closed with the Plainfields 180 pins ahead, as shown by the detailed score below.

Mr. Ernest C. Kleb was high man with Mr. James Davis next. The record-breakers, however, were nowhere. By the way, how seldom the big-scorers get there in a match.

Mr. Collier, the proprietor of the alleys, served all hands with something to eat at the close of the game.

FRAMES.

[illegible]

The Wedding [illegible].

At the Rev. Dr. [illegible]'s church, No. 55 Fifth avenue, New York, this afternoon at four o'clock, took place the marriage of Miss Angeline Reilly of Brooklyn, and Mr. J. A. Demarest of this city.

It was a quiet affair throughout, and no cards were issued for the ceremony. The Rev. C. E. Dunn, of Albany, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, officiated. Mr and Mrs. Demarest sail to-morrow for a short trip to Charleston, Jacksonville and St. Augustine, after which they will be at home, No. 7 East Fifth street, this city.

Was This an Attempt at Incendiarism?

A kerosene can partly filled with oil was found deposited in the weeds in the rear of and in close proximity to a dwelling house on West Fourth near Liberty streets, on Sunday. From all appearances the vessel looked as though it had but recently been deposited there, and it is supposed that it was placed there by an incendiary, possibly the same one that set fire to the frame dwelling on Cottage place, during the previous night. Mr. "Larry" Green an employe at the Pond Tool Works, found the oil can and took possession of it.

A Select Club and its Members.

The Washington Park Tennis Club of North Plainfield, is composed of a number of wealthy gentlemen. They anticipate considerable pleasure the approaching season, and notwithstanding that their present grounds have recently been sold to parties who contemplate building, the Club is abundantly able to purchase new grounds. They have the means to secure a lot suitable for their purpose, and upon which they can erect a bowling alley if they so desire.

There are other select Tennis Clubs throughout the State, but it is doubtful if any of them compare with the Washington Park Club in wealth, social standing and culture. Its officers and members are:

PRESIDENT—Mr. Martin I. Cooley.
TREASURER—Mr. George P. Dupee.
SECRETARY—Mr. W. T. Broadway.

And Messrs Morgan S. Taylor, S. St. John McCutchen, Samuel Townsend, Henry A. McGee, Augustus VanDeventer, Charles E. Horne, Charles W. McCutchen, Benj. M. Day, Edward St. John, E. J. Waring, A. W. Haviland, Frank A. Church, Harry C. Munger and Walter M. McGee.

An Ably Edited Magazine in a New Field.

The first number of The Medical Examiner, a new monthly, edited by Chas. F. Stillman, M. S., M. D., formerly of this city and now of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, will be issued in a few days.

It is to be devoted to the interests of the medical practitioner in his relations as examiner for life insurance, accident insurance, society insurance, the army, the navy, the police department, the fire department, the pension bureau, civil service, etc.

More than 50,000 physicians in the United States are now connected with the great life insurance companies as examiners of applicants for insurance, and many others are identified with the other interests referred to above. The Mutual Life Insurance Company alone has a corps of examiners numbering over seven thousand.

The object of this journal is to place before the medical men of this country the experience of the most expert physicians who have made physical diagnosis a study. The imperative need of such a work is freely admitted and the remarkable reception and the immense sale of Dr. Chas. F. Stillman's "Practical Treatise upon Medical Examinations" has demonstrated the necessity for a special journal devoted to this great professional and public interest.

Saturday as the 7:28 A. M. train pulled out of the Plainfield station for New York, attached to its rear was the private car "Howard."

THE PRESS has already told of the novel scheme of seclusive riding that had been originated by Mr. L. E. Howard of this city. A club of thirty-five commuters of this city pay an extra fee of $700 a year to the railroad company, and are allowed the privilege of having a special car of their own fitted up for comfort and whist playing apart from the madding crowd.

The car is one of the new passenger coaches with square windows. They are the smoothest rolling of any cars on the road. The original seats have been removed and stationary chairs and tables substituted. There are spacious arm chairs also for those who only care to read their papers. The car is divided in the centre though both ends are furnished alike—but the smokers must ride abaft.

The 7:28 morning train takes it down and the 5:15 evening train from New York brings it out. An effort was made to have it attached to the 5:30 P. M. Express which does not stop at Plainfield. But dropping the car would sooner or later result in an accident. Consequently the time now is not satisfactory to everybody, and another party has been formed by Messrs John R. Dumont, O. T. Waring and others.

Their car is almost completed, and will be of the same general style as the "Howard." It will go down on the 8:33 A. M., and come back on the 4:30 P. M. There have been some propositions of establishing an exchange of courtesies—to allow members of either party to take either car as the time may best suit each day. But this would probably be impracticable.

Those who occupied seats in the car that morning, were Messrs W. T. Broadway, Jas. McGee, Geo. P. Dupee, Morgan S. Taylor, Sam'l Townsend, B. O. Bowers, Chas. E. Horne, John M. Crane, Edw. J. Waring, J. W. Johnston, Andrew McKinney, Walter M. McGee, Edw. St. John, E. S. Hooley, L. W. Stover, H. W. Stover, H. M. Stockton, J. Kirkner, John Moore, Jas. DeGraff, Stephen A. Cahoone, Jr., T. James Scott, Wm. H. VanSlyck, Harry Johnston.

—The vegetable markets are much better stocked than they were this time last year.

Election of Officers.

The semi-annual election of officers to serve the Young People's Society for Christian Endeavor of the First Presbyterian church, took place on Wednesday evening, April 10, and resulted as follows:

President—E. St. John.
Vice-President—Miss N. Wardell.
Secretary—Miss L. Benson.
Treasurer—C. I. Westervelt.

It Will Be a Holiday.

It is understood among some of our business men that they will keep their stores closed on the 30th of April, the day of the Washington Inaugural Centennial. It is understood that the grocers will close at 10 o'clock in the morning, and other store keepers will do the same. It seems now that our business men are working in unison to make the day a holiday.

The races will be flown under the rules of the Federation, and the time made will be official and will give the birds a record.

Winfield Scott Post Excursion.

The excursion detail of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, of this city, consisting of Wm. C. Smith, Chairman, Geo. W. Moore, Secretary, and Comrades Wm. Hand, James Atwood and Samuel Lemon, held a meeting Thursday, for the purpose of making arrangements for their Summer excursion, and it was decided to go to either Rockaway Beach, or Glen Island, between June 15, and July 1. They will determine later as to the place and date. There will be a special train to convey the excursionists to and from Jersey City.

Holy Cross Services.

Sunday was Palm Sunday. The Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, was appropriately and tastefully decorated with palms. There was a large congregation at both the morning and afternoon services, which were conducted by the Rev. T. Logan Murphy. The music was beautifully rendered—thirty-three members of the choir being present.

The services during this week will be in the morning at 10 o'clock, with the exception of Good Friday, this service will begin at 11 o'clock, and the evening service at half-past 7 o'clock.

On Easter Sunday the children's service will commence at 5 o'clock, and hereafter the second service on Sundays will be at 5 o'clock, instead of 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Saturday's Ball Game.

The base ball season was formally opened in this city on Saturday afternoon, between the Crescents and the Potter nine. The match took place on the new grounds at Richmond street and La Grande avenue, and was witnessed by a large number of spectators. Nearing pitched for the Crescents early in the game, but he was batted all over the field. Maynard was the catcher. Demarest went into the box about the fifth inning, and did some excellent work. Buckly and Winn composed the battery of the Potter nine. At one time during the game the score stood 10 to 2 in favor of the Potter nine, but at the end of the game this was reversed, and the Crescents won the match by a score of 23 to 11.

The Crescents will probably play again on Saturday of this week.

Laid at Rest.

The funeral services of Mrs. John H. VanWinkle were held at her late home on Duer street, North Plainfield, Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The house was filled to overflowing with a gathering of sincere mourners.

The Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Mrs. Van Winkle's pastor, read an appropriate selection from the Scriptures, and spoke words of sympathy and encouragement to the bereaved ones that brought tears to the eyes of all. He was followed by the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, who eulogized the dead for her pure and righteous life and character, and her untiring labors in the cause of Christ.

It had been Mrs. VanWinkle's request that Dr. Yerkes should take part in the service, and also that her husband's Sunday school class of fourteen ladies should sing. This class, led by Mr. E. E. Runyon, sang "Abide in Me" and "Asleep in Jesus."

The remains were interred in the Presbyterian cemetery, North Plainfield. The Rev. Mr. Schenck read the burial services, and the Rev. Dr. Yerkes offered prayer. The floral display included: two pillows from members of the family—one lettered "Mother," and the other "Sister"; a large bunch of calla lilies from the Ladies' Christian Work Society of Trinity Reformed church, and a handsome basket of choice flowers from the Y.P.S.C.E., of both of which societies Mrs. VanWinkle was a member. There was also a beautiful floral anchor from Mr. VanWinkle's Sunday school class.

The pall-bearers were, ex-Judge Nelson Runyon, Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, Mr. Mulford Estil and Mr. A. L. Force.

AN ATTEMPT AT ARSON.

From late developments it is evident that there is a well-organized band of firebugs in this city who, unless captured, will doubtless apply the match that may result in thousands of dollars damage and loss of life.

At twenty minutes past three o'clock, Sunday morning, Engineer "Marty" Hartzel and the crew on an empty coal train, drawn by Engine No. 116, going West, discovered fire in the frame dwelling house on Cottage place, adjoining Mr. John Chandler's carpenter shop. The building, two-story and attic, with gable roof, is fitted up for occupancy by two families. One-half is tenanted by a German family, and the other half is vacant. It was in the unoccupied half where the fire was discovered.

Engineer Hartzel brought his train to a stop, and with other members of the crew at once began to battle with the flames, which were fast eating their way up the weather boarding to the roof. Water was carried in buckets from the locomotive tender and thrown on the fire. After a hard fight the progress of the fire was finally checked, but not until the blinds, window casing and a considerable portion weather boarding had been burned.

Fortunately in this instance the train was twenty minutes late. Had it been on time the fire would not have been discovered as soon as it was, and the building and much of the adjoining property would doubtless have been destroyed. No general alarm was sent out, although some of the department apparatus was ready to roll, and several of the firemen arrived on the spot in time to assist in extinguishing the flames.

There can be no doubt that the fire was started by an incendiary, as an examination by Chief of Police Carey and Chief Doane today disclosed the fact that shavings and red flannel, probably saturated with oil, had been used in the fiendish work. Bits of flannel and shavings were found on the ground and inside the building, which led to the belief. The fire started on the southwest side of the building.

—Now Spring is here for sure. The family of martins that Summer every year in the house they lease of Mr. W. W. Cornell, in front of 41 West Front street, arrived with all their relatives Thursday afternoon at five o'clock.

Dunellen to Have a New School House.

The residents of Dunellen have decided upon the building of a new and handsome school house. A meeting was held the evening of April 10 by the School Trustees, at which plans for the new school were received and discussed; and considerable progress was made toward the beginning of the erection of the building.

Struck a Natural Flow.

A force of workmen begun to drill a well on what is known as the Rowley farm, at Mt. Pleasant, a few days ago. After drilling for some distance below the surface of the ground, they encountered a bed of table rock. Drilling through this bed of rock, at forty-two feet from the surface, they opened up a natural flow of pure and wholesome water. The water continues to flow, as though from a spring, and will prove a great benefit to the owner of the farm.

Some More Moves Geo. Watson & Co., Intend to Distribute Their Broken Lots of Pantaloons as Gifts Among Their Customers.

The plan of distributing their broken lots of Pants as presents among their customers by Messrs Geo. Watson & Co., after 9 o'clock on Saturday night was a great failure, as the rush was so great that it was impossible to confine these gifts to regular customers of the house, and few could be correctly fitted. A new plan has been adopted for the benefit of their customers, or those who may become customers, which will be made known on application and will be duly advertised.

This week they open their elegant styles of Spring Cassimere and Cheviot suits, in all the grades usually sold for $15 and upward, at the uniform low price of ten dollars a suit for any kind you may select. Perhaps you may pick out a suit that cost them more than ten dollars to make up, or you may choose one on which they have a little profit, but no matter what you select the price will be $10 for the complete suit.

Their immense lines of elegant Dress Suits at $15, $15.50, $16, $17.50, $18, $19, $20, $22 and $25, in all the new forms and handsome custom fabrics, are now hung all ready to put on, complete in all the details of half sizes in solid colors, bird's-eye and dice effects, and with beautiful silk threads skillfully interwoven with the goods.

You should certainly see the handsome garments their tailors are now finishing daily, and remember that it is the correct cut as laid down by the Standard American Fashion Plate, to which their designers are the principal contributors, that makes the rush of business so strong toward the corner of Broad and Market streets.

If you wish to become a customer of the house of Geo. Watson & Co., and share in the presents of all their broken lots of elegant Cassimere Pants, distributed as gifts weekly only among their customers, or those that become customers, register your name and address without delay. The presents will be delivered free where their new delivery wagon can reach, and outside on payment of express charges.

Full particulars will be furnished on application in person or by mail to Messrs Geo. Watson & Co., the Popular Clothiers of No. 7[illegible] Broad street, four doors below Market street.—Newark Press.

—The Central Railroad station at Grant avenue presents an improved appearance since Mr. Samuel Robinson has been appointed station agent. The building has been thoroughly cleaned and other necessary work has been done about the premises.

HALF THE TRUTH!

Figures don't lie, it is said. No they don't if you let them alone. But they can be so twisted as to be mighty deceptive. Half the truth is the biggest kind of a lie. It reminds us of the sailor who, when selling a Quaker a parrot, and, being asked if it could talk, replied: "It would delight thee to hear him talk." No doubt it would have, but the Quaker never had the pleasure. What's all this to do with Clothing? Just this, the marvellous bargains of $50 suits for $20, and $40 suits for $8, and $15 overcoats for $7 so largely advertised are but half the truth. No doubt the advertisers can show you an $8 suit bearing a ticket formerly marked $40, but that's just where the figures are made to lie. Our goods are just what we claim for them; they speak for themselves. They are dollar for dollar's worth every time.

The assortment is large, the styles good.

OUR LAX DIVORCE LAWS.

Views of Our Leading Men and Women on the Subject.

A Uniform Law Greatly Needed—The Evils of the System Clearly Set Forth and Remedies Suggested—Statistics Show Sad State of Affairs.

[COPYRIGHT 1889.]

If all the divorced men in the United States were formed into an army they would outnumber the standing army of any European power. And if the divorcees of both sexes were placed by themselves they would comfortably populate a territory larger than any Eastern State. Until recently no attempt has been made to collect the statistics of marriage and divorce in this country, but during the last two years Government statisticians, under the direction of Labor Commissioner Wright, have been at work collecting and compiling data relating to the subject, and at the last session of Congress their report was made. In only one State is divorce prohibited. In all others at least one cause for annulment of the marriage tie is recognized, and in some States there are six, eight and even nine causes sufficient for the granting of a divorce. In the latter States, the divorce courts have gone on year after year untying the marriage knot until the number of divorces is appalling. In many States the ratio of divorces to marriages is one in fifty—a poor showing—but in others it is one in thirty, while in single counties in Western States one divorce is granted for every [illegible] marriages.

[illegible]

Chicago leads as offering the best facilities for dissatisfied couples to obtain a divorce. All of the causes recognized elsewhere are sufficient, and the Chicago definition of what constitutes a residence is sufficiently lenient to make the divorce mill a "free for all" concern. Publicity is avoided as much as possible, and a large proportion of decrees are granted in default of the non-appearance of the defendant.

The official records of Hennepin County, Minnesota, in which Minneapolis is situated, shows that Chicago has a rival. With 18,[illegible] marriages in the last thirty years, 1,[illegible] divorces have been granted—a good 10 per cent. The number during the past two years has largely exceeded that of any former years. In all parts of the country the number of women who apply for divorces is double the number of men.

In response to letters of inquiry forwarded by one of our New York representatives to a large number of eminent men and women the subjoined letters have been received touching the laxity of our divorce laws, and the legislation needed to make them more uniform and just. They speak for themselves, and are a fitting contribution to the startling report of Commissioner of Statistics Wright on the subject summarized above:

FROM A SUCCESSFUL AUTHORESS.

I should be glad to see uniform laws on the divorce question, so urgently needed in this country at the present day. While personally I regard divorce as a thing always to be deprecated, and perhaps never resorted to, I still hope that the laws will not be too restrictive, neither should they be too lax. While I realize the need of all possible safeguards for the morality of society, and the protection of women and children, yet to make an antagonistic union compulsory for life seems a great hardship. Having worked in benevolent and christian societies all my life, and seen women and little children deserted and made dependent on charity through intemperance and failure to support, I cannot think that infidelity should be the only cause for divorce. A woman whom I have long known has just been at my house who has five children and a drunken husband whom she has supported; the latter has become an unbearable burden! There is no proof that he is unfaithful. Were she free to marry a good man, and she doubtless could do so, for she is a good woman, she would be a thousand times happier for a happy marriage is the best thing on earth for both sexes. In conforming to the letter of a law which makes infidelity the sole cause of divorce some of the most debasing methods of espionage are employed both in England and America, to effect the purpose of those persons who are determined to be divorced. Separation without absolute divorce I believe to be unwise as a rule and not favorable to morality.

Sarah K. Bolton.

SPEAKER CARLISLE WANTS UNIFORM LAWS.

Under our system of government the regulation of marriage and divorce belongs exclusively to the several States, and all I can say, without going into mere matters of detail is, that in my opinion the laws upon these important subjects should be made as near uniform as possible.

Very respectfully,
J. G. Carlisle

A FAMOUS CONGRESSMAN'S OPINION.

I have not carefully considered the policy of amending the Federal Constitution so as to confer on Congress the general power to legislate on the subject of marriage and divorce, although during the last few years the subject has to some extent arrested the attention of the members of Congress.

It seems to me hardly desirable to confer this power on the Federal Government unless imperatively demanded by the interests of the whole people. Marriage is the foundation of our domestic relations, and it would seem that marriage and all that relates to it ought to be considered as a matter that belongs exclusively to the field of State legislation.

The course of legislation in the several States on the subject of divorce, of late years, seems to hold out a fair prospect of the existing evil being removed at no distant day. There has been a marked tendency on the part of the States to come together in their legislation on divorce. There is not now any such divergency of legislation on the subject as there was twenty years ago, and there is reason to believe that in a few years the conflict of legislation on the subject in the several States will largely disappear.

The statistics which the general Government has of late been accumulating on the subject of marriage and divorce will materially aid the States in adopting uniform laws on the subject.

My present impression is that until it becomes apparent that the States themselves, acting each for itself, cannot bring about a harmonious system, Congress should not be invested with power to legislate on the subject except in the Territories and the District of Columbia, as now. I think that unless there is imperative necessity for it the powers conferred in the Federal Government ought not to be enlarged, nor the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts extended.

Wm. S. Holman

FROM SENATOR JOHN SHERMAN.

I am of the opinion that the marriage relation is one not lightly to be entered upon, but when done should not be dissolved except by the clearest and strongest proof of a breach of the duty imposed by one of the parties to the contract. Very truly yours,

John Sherman

MRS. KATE FIELD IS EMPHATIC.

You ask me a question about divorce, and entirely ignore the much more important one of marriage. It seems to me you are putting the cart before the horse. You are looking for effects instead of seeking the cause. I have nothing to say about divorce laws, saving that in countries where divorce is not permitted, or is made almost impossible, more illegitimate children are born than elsewhere. Look at the France of yesterday, and the Scotland of to-day. Legislators had better beware how they put a premium on vice by forging the marital chains so tight as to make a separation too difficult. Prohibition in every form is dangerous. But what I do feel strongly is the necessity of a national marriage law, the passage of which would make divorces much less frequent. Six years ago when I first delivered my lecture on "The Mormon Monster" I made a plea for such a law. We call ourselves a nation, and yet the foundation of all society—marriage—is left to the sweet will of State legislation, whereby men and women are married in one State and very much the reverse in another. Let there be a national marriage law—as in France, and there will be little necessity to legislate on divorce.

Yours truly,
Kate Field

DR. HOWARD CROSBY'S POSITIVE VIEWS.

To my mind the permanence of social order depends very largely on the permanence of the marriage relation. Easy divorce breaks up families, the healthful unit of society, and entails animosities, litigations and distress upon the next generation. It also leads inevitably to a low standard of morality. If we follow our Saviour's injunction no divorce would be permitted except for adultery, and every right minded man even if he does not take our Lord as his guide, should see that this restriction is necessary to society's welfare. Cases of danger to life from either party, or of confirmed drunkenness, or infidelity, could be met by legal separation, but without the right to marry again. I think our immoral stage has a great deal to do with the prevalence of easy divorce by constantly making light of the marriage tie. Our laws should be framed in accordance with the principles above stated. Yours, very truly.

Howard Crosby

Ten Thousand Wash-Ladies.

The washerwomen of Paris, to the number of 10,000, "fully qualified and duly accredited," have agreed to form themselves into a syndicate, for the purpose of looking after their interests in an official manner. They require to have a market of their own, where they can go in order to be hired for work and to make their own terms. The meeting of washerwomen at which the resolution relating to the syndicate was carried was addressed by a female president, who spoke like a practical debater and fixed the wages to be demanded by her co-workers at three francs seventy-five centimes a day, or about seventy-five cents.

A PICTURE.

She made a picture fair to see,
This maiden young and sweet;
To gaze long on her features rare
Would bring me to her feet.

The lustrous brown of her rich hair,
The blue of her bright eye;
Almost would I my tale of love
Pour out, were no one by.

The peach-like bloom upon her cheek,
Her lips just ripe to kiss;
To fold her in my arms would be
The highest earthly bliss.

Her glance suggests coquettishness,
Her attitude, repose;
Among her many charms she has
A dainty Grecian nose.

I wonder would that shell-like ear
Give heed to my warm vows;
I wonder would the maiden there
Become my loving spouse?

Oh! could I but my love pour out
At this fair virgin shrine,
The proudest moment of my life
Would be to call her mine.

Alas! this maid on canvas lives—
An artist's chaste design!

THE LAGGARD LETTER.

Amusing Romance of the Lady of Æsthetic Tastes.

"Who could resist adoring him!" Beatrice thought, as she gazed on his far-away-looking eyes, his poetically long, wavy hair, and his, as she called it, "Raphael-like" face. Then, too, his name was so full of romantic suggestion—Francisco Wolfe-Browne.

To be sure, her brother, who was always teasing, insisted upon it that formerly the name was Frank W. Brown, and that the hyphen and other accessories, the long hair and imitation-of-Irving expression first appeared on his return from abroad.

Beatrice, or, as her brother would insist upon calling her, Bet, notwithstanding that she possessed a remarkably good constitution and the attractiveness which generally accompanies it, had an uncontrollable thirst for romance; and this æsthetic-poetical youth impressed her like an unopened volume of ancient legends in a most fascinating binding.

She was well content to play lawn tennis, and row and ride with her brother and his friend Bob in the mornings, but what a rest in the afternoons when Francisco called, to wander with him through the spring garden discussing ancient chivalry, reading modern poets, and looking for roses without thorns! And then his singing of old love songs!

To be sure his voice was not strong, but such feeling!—"Yes, always feeling for the high notes which are beyond his grasp," her brother said; he also added a criticism on the singer, to the effect that it was a good voice for calling chickens! Beatrice's only regret was that he accompanied himself on the banjo; it would have been so much more æsthetic to have played the light guitar or the Spanish mandolin.

During the summer Francisco sailed for foreign shores to seek inspiration among the artistic ruins for his idyllic poem. But frequent letters kept up the interest in Beatrice's sentimental mind.

To be sure, Bob was always around, wearing far out with his practical ideas and prosaic views; but then he was so convenient as an escort to social festivities that he had to be tolerated, and, after all, admiration is enjoyable even from an "every-day young man."

Mr. Francisco Wolfe-Browne returned with the birds in the spring, and Beatrice's afternoons were again the bright spots in her romantic calendar.

One day, just as the setting sun was concealing itself in a varied vestment of vermilion vapor, and from the silvery stream came stealthily creeping up the malaria-laden mist, Francisco gently took Beatrice's pink fingers in his fervid grasp, and in sublime language poured out his tale of unquenchable love.

Now, Beatrice might then and there have settled his fate, but her romantic nature could not be curbed. To have murmured "yes" right on the spot would have been entirely too prosaic; so, gracefully, half-reluctantly gathering herself together, she whispered that in the morning his answer he should find in the hollow tree.

Now it so happened that there was no hollow tree on the place, and Beatrice knew it perfectly well, but she hoped against hope that she might discover one; and that night after inditing a favorable reply bubbling with poetical effusions, she vainly sought for some gnarled and knotted oak. But their modern three acres contained nothing but painfully young and upright trees, and at last, in a fit of despair, she resolved to utilize an old tin watering-can which hung on a branch of a convenient sapling: so after some manipulation and manœuvering, with the aid of a garden-bench and a box, her love-letter was deposited.

How endless the night seemed! How eagerly she longed to hear the music of a light guitar and a silvery voice singing a touching melody under her latticed window!

As for Francisco, he was otherwise engaged, keeping an appointment with a chill, and in the quiet seclusion of his cheerful chamber he was busily shaking.

It rather detracted from the romance of the affair to be compelled, the next morning, to go herself and point out the location of the concealed missive.

All, however, would have doubtless passed off serenely but for the fact that she had been espied by her brother while depositing the letter, and he afterward, in a quiet, unostentatious way, innocently arranged things so that when Francisco, after climbing upon the boxes, proceeded to reach for the can, his cranelike neck received a large gallon of the wettest kind of water.

Unfortunately, Beatrice, being human, could not entirely repress a slight smile at the peculiar appearance Mr. Wolfe-Browne presented on gathering himself up out of the mud. This might have passed unnoticed in the excitement; but when her horrid brother put in an appearance, and commented on the fact that it was April 1st, this was too much for Francisco, and with a look of concentrated wetness he stalked into the dim future.

* * * * * * *

Weeks passed. Mr. Francisco Wolfe-Browne no more appeared, while Beatrice's misery made her supremely happy. Here was real romance! She knew they loved each other devotedly, but true love always did run roughly, and this estrangement was simply a proof of their affection. To be sure, she was not deserted; her brother's friend Bob was always at hand for tennis, riding, or to take her canoeing in search of sketchable spots, while rumor reached her ears that Francisco was touching the light banjo at the feet of another shrine; and the summer birds and the new-mown hay filled the air with song and perfume.

She had no doubt that Francisco's misery was equal to her own, and that simply out of sheer pique he was pretending to interest himself in another divinity.

But what a contrast to his finely strung, poetical temperament was the matter-of-fact, almost jarring, practical mind of Bob! And how she disliked that name Bob! (His real name was Roberto, but he obstinately refused to answer to it.)

While canoeing one day, a common Japanese fan that she carried was blown into the water. Now, any man, she thought, of a chivalrous nature, any man but a practical, nineteenth-century creature, would have regained his lady's fan at all cost. To be sure, the canoe might have been upset; but then, what a romantic opportunity to save her life!

Instead of taking any of these chances, Roberto calmly watched the fan disappear, asked one or two questions about its value and history, and, as it vanished, quietly expressed his regrets.

The rest of the trip was marked by distinct coolness on her part.

To be sure, the next day she received a box containing five beautiful fans; but that was small balm to her sentimental nature.

As they were going to the tennis-ground one morning Bob picked up, among the rose-bushes, what seemed to be a letter. Yes, she saw at a glance it was her unfortunately placed letter, intended for Francisco; and seizing it she was prompted by her romantic soul to save it, with the feeling that it would yet make Mr. Wolfe-Browne the happiest of men. (Luckily no personal names were mentioned in it, so if it had been perused by strange eyes no one would have been the wiser in regard to the matter.)

Sure enough, Beatrice and Francisco soon met again, at a rehearsal for private theatricals, and, after some explanations, she pressed—as she thought—the battered, weather-stained letter into his hands, and giving him a glance full of tenderest love, she fled.

What was her horror that night on discovering the letter still in her possession!

What could she have given him! A terrible suspicion came across her tender soul. Could it have been that bill from the hair-store, for new bangs? No! that missing memorandum re-appeared. But she failed to find one of the slips of paper on which was copied the speech she was to deliver in the play, when politely rejecting an unworthy suitor in these well-chosen words:

"Thou driveling knave, marry thee! Of a truth, if thou wast the only knight in the kingdom, never would I thee marry!"

There were other lines, all tending to prove that the knight's proposal did not entirely meet the lady's approval.

A dozen times she began an explanatory letter to him, and twelve times she abandoned the idea.

Finally the date for the next rehearsal arrived, and with a palpitating heart Beatrice hastened to the meet.

The usual restlessness, quietness and peaceful order prevailed which characterize amateur theatricals on the first dress-rehearsal, and the costumes gave the customary satisfaction.

At last Beatrice espied the wavy locks of Francisco in a dim corner; evidently he was buried in revery.

In the din and confusion she stole quietly up behind him, and laying her pink fingers over his eyes, whispered: "Guess."

In a second her little hands were seized and covered with kisses, intermixed with a declaration of love in a torrent of eloquence. She suddenly realized it was not Francisco! No, it was Bob! in his stage wig and costume. Without one word she took to flight; her head whirled; her surprise at the proposal was even exceeded by her amazement at such sentimental eloquence from the matter-of-fact Roberto.

As for Francisco, that evening he pointedly avoided her; evidently the note he had received by mistake gave mortal offense.

There was one part in the play they were rehearsing, where she, as the beautiful Princess in the tower, passed a missive through her prison bars to a noble knight, for which role Francisco was cast.

This time her romantic mind again came to the front, and she conceived the idea of handing him the old, weather-stained, non-delivered letter of watering-pot fame. It was still legible, and how romantic it would be to have the faded epistle finally bring her love to her! And it did. She added a post-script: "I shall be in the conservatory after the rehearsal."

The scenes and accessories were as complete as is usual in amateur theatricals, but in trying the prison scene she found the barred window was so high she could only see the waving plumes of her trusty knight, who was supposed to steal silently by the casement, seize the note and fly. But with it all he found time to give her delicate finger-tips a warm, thrilling pressure, and though she could not see his face, she felt that Francisco had relented and love had triumphed.

In her picturesque garb of the imprisoned Princess, as soon as the scene was over, she hastened to the conservatory.

It so happened that the electric light, by which the rendezvous was illuminated, was that evening going through a series of eccentric flashes; and as she entered, snap!—and with a dull, heavy thud, total darkness fell. She had time to simply catch one glimpse of a stalwart knight crowned with waving plumes, and the next moment she was comfortably nestled in his protecting arms, and almost before a word was spoken a ring was slipped on the third finger of her left hand. Then, snap!—and up flashed the electric light, for an instant only; but what a revelation it was! In that one second she saw in a palm-sheltered nook, a "knight of ye olden time" on his bended knee, pressing the lily-white hand of a "ladye faire" to his lips, and the light shone full on his imitation-Irving features. It was Francisco! She then also recognized that the shoulder on which she had nestled, and the protecting arms by which she had been surrounded, belonged to Roberto!

She was glad darkness followed; it gave an opportunity to conceal, to a certain extent, her conflicting emotions.

She felt mortified at herself for not fainting, but instead of that it seemed as if she did a year's thinking in one moment; and she resolved that Roberto, for it was his ring that she was now wearing, should never be undeceived. And after all, the consoling thought came, it was only a romance!

She afterward learned that all this "Comedy of Errors" had arisen from the fact that a sudden change had been made in the cast, and Roberto had been assigned Mr. Wolfe-Browne's part in the prison scene, thereby receiving the weather-stained letter of acceptance.

Beatrice planned an exquisitely æsthetic wedding, and it must be confessed that, for a matter-of-fact young man, Roberto submitted to the rehearsing and costuming angelically. For once the imitation-Irving Francisco was outdone. The fair damsel who had undertaken to rekindle his dampened affections was most unromantically stout. That much was triumph!

But, alas! having at last secured his sentimental darling, Roberto became recalcitrant, and, so to speak, kicked over the æsthetic traces. In spite of all his bride's efforts to induce him to give the Italian pronunciation to her name—Be-a-tre-che—he would persist in calling her "Betty dear!"—Will Philip Hooper, in Demorest's Monthly.

THAT REBEL YELL.

It Was Originally the Battle Cry of the Tennessee Cherokees.

The Genesis of the Whoop as It Was Heard at King's Mountain—A Contribution of the Great West to the Cause of American Freedom.

After a superficial research into the "Genesis of the Rebel Yell," our sometimes scholastic friends who write American historical essays for Eastern readers have inclined to the opinion that it is a Texas modification of the guttural Comanche whoop. This is clearly a mistake, based on insufficient information, says the St. Louis Republic. The yell was heard in the Texan war for independence. It came clear and strong from the throats of the men who followed Houston at San Jacinto, but that was not its genesis by any means. The Texans of that day were all, or nearly all, natives of other Western States, and their war-cry was a part of the equipment they carried to Texas with them.

All the reliable evidence shows that the rebel yell was a contribution of the great West to the cause of American freedom in the rebellion against England. Before the revolution a handful of Virginians had pushed across the Alleghenies and built at Wautauga, in what is now Tennessee, one of the first outposts of American civilization in the then unknown West, lying between the Alleghenies and the Pacific. They held in check the 10,000 Cherokee warriors who were incited by the English to attack the rebels of the seaboard in the rear, and when these Eastern rebels seemed totally demoralized, when Cornwallis, with Tarleton and Ferguson under him, had cut the confederacy in two, "the rebel yell" was heard for the first time east of the mountains. It was the accompaniment of a style of fighting with which the English regulars were entirely unfamiliar—the massing of a small force against the weaker point of a scattered opposing force, and then, without regard to the numbers of the opposing force, a headlong rush and the wild charging cry which has since become memorable as "the rebel yell."

When the brave Colonel Ferguson retreated to King's Mountain and intrenched himself there, in what he supposed to be an impregnable position, his second in command, Du Peyster, said to him as the Western men charged up the mountain under the galling fire of his superior force: "There are those yelling devils again." Six hours later the yelling devils from the West had won the battle of King's Mountain, captured its surviving defenders, and turned the tide of the revolution back against England, sending Cornwallis in confused retreat to the surrender at Yorktown.

There is no doubt at all of the genesis of the rebel yell as it was heard at King's Mountain. It was the war-cry of men as brave as ever died in defense of homes—the Tennessee Cherokees, whose language has made the rivers and mountains of their old hunting-grounds musical with the names that are as soft as Italian. With the possible exception of the Natchez, they were the most intelligent and least cruel of North American Indians, holding the universal Indian law of retaliation, but more capable than any others of the Indian stock of forgiving injuries.

Under Oconostota and Old Tassel they made a heroic fight against the Westward advance of civilization, and their battle cry was heard in defense of Tennessee soil at the first fight on Lookout Mountain as defiantly as at the second. It was turned against them by the white Tennesseeans who followed John Sevier in over a hundred fights with them. In every one of which the Cherokees were losers. Before Sevier's time, most of the fighting against Indians had been done from behind stockades, or in skirmishing from behind trees. With a military genius that was Napoleonic before Napoleon, Sevier adopted, and never swerved from, a policy of sudden attack in the open field, always in the enemy's country, without waiting to reckon up how many men the enemy could bring against him if given time. This art of war was defined in 1865 by the Tennessee cavalryman whom General Lee called the greatest of his generals in the West, as "getting there first with the most men." Against this method of fighting the untrained Cherokees could do nothing. They fought for every foot of territory, but always with great loss of their own warriors, inflicting little in return.

The author of the "Rear Guard of the Revolution" has no theory of his own concerning the origin of the rebel yell, but the facts he has collected make it certain enough that it was originally the battle cry of these red Tennesseeans, who called their warriors "Sons of Fire" (Cherahkee). In all mouths but theirs it has been a rebel yell invariably. It was raised by rebels at King's Mountain; again a few weeks later at Jonesboro, where 1,500 Tennessee rebels assembled to rescue John Sevier, who had been kidnaped by North Carolina and carried across the mountains to be tried for treason as the head of the Tennessee rebellion against North Carolina; it was a rebel cry at the Alamo and San Jacinto; later on it was heard again at Shiloh and Chickamauga from the throats of Tennesseeans who rebelled against Tennessee for the Union, and of other Tennesseeans who rebelled against the Union for Tennessee.

It is in accord with eternal fitness that the rebel war-cry should trace its origin to Tennessee—which above all others is the rebel State—the only State of the second rebellious Confederacy which waived all discussion of the constitutional rights of secession, and, standing squarely on its rebellious record against England and North Carolina, rebelled out of the Union instead of seceding out of it.

A DEATH-BED STORY.

Which Illustrates the Redeeming Power of Faith.

Yielding Heaps the Confession of a Resident of Jiggwater, N. J.—How He Came to Marry Deacon Dudley's Daughter.

(COPYRIGHT 1889.)

This story was told to me by a man who was lying on his death bed. I can swear to it for I saw him as he lied. He was a respected and wealthy resident of the town of Jiggwater, N. J., taken fatally ill of the malady which gave the town its name. He told the story to me in the strictest confidence, and I felt sure all the time he was doing it, that the thing was worth $10 a column, least calculation, which is a good space rate for destroying a dead man's reputation.

"Listen," said he, feebly.

I bent down my ear; brushed a fly off his fevered pillow with it, and was all attention. I know that I've got it straight, because after he said it would destroy the peace of his family if the thing got out, I took notes on my cuff in order to be able to swear to it in court. The moral of it is that a man may be redeemed by accident just as well as by Sam Jones, and that nobody need go to jail or [illegible] blames if he's got any luck.

"Listen," said the prospective remains, impressively. Then he told the following tale:

"Among the friends of my early years was Bill Smith. He fulfilled all the promises of his youth by becoming one of the greatest living thieves in his line of business. His methodical and careful habits won him the name of 'Second-Story Billy.' He was never known to enter a house by the ground floor, except once, and that was at Sing Sing. He didn't come out again for a year and nine months, with no commutation for good behavior, and after that he always considered that it was bad luck to go into a house that way.

"It was not long after this that I met Billy here in Jiggwater. We were both strangers in New Jersey—otherwise, I may add, we never should have been here. I had been on the road for a New York house, but the senior partner travelled much more successfully than I did. He travelled to Canada with all the funds of the concern, and after that I didn't travel at all, because I didn't have the money to pay my fare. I remained in Jiggwater, in pawn for my board. One night I strolled into a revival meeting in the hope that somebody might ask me to take up the collection. Billy was there. He had entered by a back window to see what he could find, and had subsequently fallen asleep in a pew, having failed in his search. We happened to be side by side and recognized each other with tears and a mutually unsuccessful attempt to negotiate a loan. As we rose to be prayed for, Billy whispered: 'I wonder how much dust old Deacon Dudley keeps in his house.'

"It was the fatal temptation.

"'Billy,' said I, 'I'll call around there with you to-night about 12 o'clock and ask him, in case he wakes up.'

"It was agreed, and midnight found us both in the deacon's back yard with a ladder, two masks and four jimmies and two bull's-eye lanterns. There was no light in the house. Billy put the ladder against the parlor window—for we were then on the basement level, and I climed up with fear in my soul. I pried up the sash without difficulty; and with one knee on the window sill I paused and turned loose my bull's eye on the apartment to make sure that nobody was there.

"The first flash lit on the nose of Mr. George Washington Green, a local beau, who was sitting on a sofa directly opposite the window. It also lit on the nose of the deacon's younger daughter Sue, because they were so near together that it was unavoidable. The thought that I had so rudely interrupted their innocent happiness brought the blush of shame to my cheek. I turned aside and covered my face with my hand.

"'Pardon me,' said I, with emotion, 'I will go away and return when the parlor is no longer engaged.'

"The young man fell at my feet.

"'In heaven's name,' he said, 'do not betray me. If the deacon knew that I was here after 10 o'clock he would kick the roof of my head off.'

"'We have a light here somewhere,' said Sue, timidly. 'I turned it down a little because Mr. Green's eyes are not strong. But it is lighted, of course, for I wouldn't sit in the dark. I am not that kind of a girl. If you will just turn that lantern around I think we can find the lamp. I've really forgotten where I put it.'

"'If, when we find that lamp, it really turns out to be lighted, I will spare you,' said I. We hunted around and found it on the mantel piece. It was going, sure enough, but I never knew a girl who could turn a lamp down the way Sue could, though the accomplishment is common in the country. Few city girls, even with the modern improvement of gas, could have satisfied the proprieties with as little injury to Mr. Green's eyes, as Sue did.

"'If you don't mind,' said I, 'I will sit in the corner and wait.'

"'By all means,' said Sue; 'we should be glad of your company.'

"She lied. Nevertheless I put my bull's eye under a chair, with its face to the wall, and sat down to reflect how much more comfortable I was than Second Story Billy who had nothing better than a ladder to sit on. At this moment the door opened, and Sue's sister entered with a lamp and an air of severity.

"'Sue,' said she, 'if George doesn't make less noise pa will be down here with a gun.'

"The idea was not pleasant.

"'I think it's perfectly horrid, any way,' said the sister, (who hadn't noticed me yet). 'Do you know it's after 12 o'clock?'

"It was evident that something would have to be done at once.

"'George,' said I, pulling down my vest, 'will you do me the honor to present me?'

"'Certainly, certainly,' said George who of course, hadn't the faintest idea who I was. 'Alice, this is my old and valued friend, Samuel C. Smith, of Sing Sing, N. Y.'

"I expressed surprise at not having met Alice before and she replied that she believed it was customary to meet people before one a. m. But she said it in no unfriendly tone, and we took two chairs together at the other side of the room.

"Time passed pleasantly for me, but 'Second-Story' Billy began to be lonesome. In the course of half an hour it occurred to him to climb up the ladder and see whether I had fainted away. Billy appeared on the window seat much as I had done, and the first thing he saw when his bull's eye began to pierce the darkness was the very sight that had so surprised me. He was so startled that he fell in through the window, and when he got on his feet again his lantern by accident was turned straight upon Alice and me.

"I could'nt see Billy's chin drop but I could hear it.

"'Well, bust me!' he exclaimed.

"As if in reply to this remark, the door opened and Deacon Dudley appeared on the threshold with a club that looked big enough to 'bust' anybody. But 'Second-Story' Billy was a man of quick perception and rapid execution. He was too wise to offer any inducement to the deacon by trying to climb out of the window. Instead he lowered his head and came at the old man like a streak of lightning with a goat on the front end of it. He struck the aged gentleman on the third button of his night robe and doubled him up like a jack knife.

"'Grab him, George,' I cried, 'we will save this aged gentleman to die in our tracks.'

"While the deacon was getting his breath we rushed upon 'Second Story' Billy and hustled him out of the window. He continued to express his profane inability to understand the condition of affairs, even after he landed in the back yard.

"We turned to the deacon and in a few minutes had brought him back to consciousness. He fell on our necks.

"'Boys,' said he, 'you've saved my life. Take 'em'—and he waved his arm toward the girls—'they're yours.'

"The double wedding occurred within three months, and I lived very comfortably on my wife's dowry till the deacon died, and then we had his pile.

"HE FELL ON OUR NECKS."

"So it all turned out for the best and instead of being launched on a career of crime, I thank heaven that I die an honest man."

* * * * * * * *

The dying man paused a moment.

"It was big luck," said I.

"No luck about it," said he, "it was energy and shrewdness, young man. Billy and I went for the deacon's wealth and we got it."

"We?" said I, "what did Billy get?"

"Three years and six months, as nearly as I can remember," he murmured, "Billy was never a bright boy."

Then he winked three times, and died.

HOWARD FIELDING.

WORKING A HOG.

How a Trio of Sharpers Skinned the Dignitaries of a Rural Town.

When I entered the village, situated among the hills of New York, at ten o'clock in the morning, all was peaceful and serene, and the pocket of every man who walked the streets had chink in it, writes a New York Sun correspondent. When I left, at four p. m., an excited mob had possession of the main street and every other man was dead broke.

About noon a man arrived from the north in a buggy. He said he was a drover, and looking for hogs. He bought half a dozen before he ate dinner, and it was astonishing how closely he guessed at their live weight. He was within two pounds on four of them, and only half a pound more on the others. Those had been an attraction for a crowd of idlers, and the general verdict was that the drover was as sharp as a barber's razor. Soon after dinner a farmer-looking boy drove a hog into town, and staked him out in front of the tavern. As he wanted to sell and the drover wanted to buy, they soon came together.

"Might take him on a pinch, but he's only a nubbins," said the drover, as he sized the porker up.

"Nubbins! Why, that pig goes over 200 pounds!" exclaimed the owner.

"Can't stuff me, boy. I've been in the business twenty years."

"No one wants to stuff. That 'ere hog goes to 210."

"He does, eh! Wish your father had come in. I'd like to have made a bet with him. Boy, you ought to have better judgment. That hog won't pull down 180."

"Guess you are off, too," remarked a stranger who had quietly driven up in a buggy. "I've raised hogs all my life, and that boy hain't five pounds out of his guess."

"Ain't he! Raised hogs, have you! Ever raise any money?"

"A little."

"Perhaps you'd like to bet on that hog?"

"Perhaps."

"Have you got $20 as says he goes 200?"

"I have—fifty—a hundred!"

"Then let's chalk. Anybody can blow."

It was a chance to make a dollar, and the citizens improved it. The man in the buggy was an accommodating chap, and somehow or other the farmer boy managed to fish up about a hundred dollars from the hind pocket of his overalls. The citizens stuck by the drover, having abundant proofs of his judgment, and when every man in that town who had a loose dollar or could borrow one had made his bet the hog was driven to the scales and weighed.

"Gentlemen," said the drover just before weighing, "I was never deceived in my life. This hog won't go to 190 pounds."

"I'll take even bets that he goes over 200," replied the man in the buggy.

This bluff raked out the last nickel in the crowd, and the hog was driven upon the scales. The record was 211 pounds. He was weighed and reweighed, but the figures stood.

"Well, it's my first error in a hog," said the drover, and all bets were at once handed over. The farmer boy slipped out, the two men drove off in the buggy, and half an hour had elapsed before a church deacon, who had laid his ten with the drover and lost, suddenly declared that it was a put-up job to skin the town.

"Durn my buttons if it hain't," yelled two hundred men in a chorus, but it was too late. The town had been skinned, and the trio had escaped. All the mob could do was to turn loose and wreck an old vinegar factory and pass a resolution to the effect that liberty was a sham and a delusion.

A Cutting Retort.

Irate Gentleman—See here, barber, you've ruined me—you've cut my hair altogether too short!

Barber—Well, but you kept saying, "Cut it short."

I. G.—Confound your stupidity, I meant your stories, not my hair.

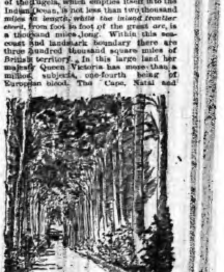
SOUTH AFRICAN HOMES.

Something About the Homes and Habitations of the People of South Africa.

THERE are few more thoroughly interesting corners of the earth than South Africa, and, until the last two or three years, there were few places less known and read about. The reading public owes a large debt of gratitude to Mr. Rider Haggard for bringing before them, in such delightful stories as "Jess," pictures of life in the Southern portion of the "Dark Continent." With Haggard to champion the South, and with Henry M. Stanley to awaken interest in the heart of Ethiopia, people are beginning to find that there is much in Africa that is worth hearing about, and books of travel and of fiction with Africa for their subject are alike eagerly bought and devoured.

What is commonly known as South Africa comprises the older English and Dutch States or colonies—now all under British rule.

The coast line of British South Africa curving from the mouth of the Orange river, which opens into the Atlantic, to that of the Tugela, which empties itself into the Indian Ocean, is not less than two thousand miles in length; while the inland frontier chord, from foot to foot of the great arc, is a thousand miles long. Within this sea-coast and landmark boundary there are three hundred thousand square miles of British territory. In this large land her majesty Queen Victoria has more than a million subjects, one-fourth being of European blood. The Cape, Natal and



ENTRANCE TO BISHOP'S COURT, CAPE TOWN.

Griqualand West are dotted over with towns, villages, and homesteads and are traversed by many good roads. Colonization has not tarried by the seashore, but has its settlements on the remotest parts of the inland frontier.

Industry has taken set forms within its boundaries and commerce, with its usual enterprise, has pushed its operations far beyond the border. Three railway lines have been constructed and several others are being surveyed—the Cape Colony alone having expended more than twenty-five million dollars of the public funds in this direction. Telegraph wires span the country, east and west, north and south, in every direction. The products and exports of the settlements are various, and some have a certain splendor of attraction. They include wool, wheat and wine; diamonds, ostrich feathers and ivory; copper and gold; coffee and sugar; fruit and fish; cattle, horses, sheep and ostriches. The total annual value of the British South African exports and imports is very close to one hundred million dollars. The total annual value of its products used in home consumption is probably an equal sum.

The landed, house and stock property and public works of the three English colonies represent an investment of seven hundred and fifty million dollars. The annual revenue of the Colonial Government is seven and a half million dollars.

A true and unfailing index of the prosperity and refinement (or otherwise) of a people is the houses in which they dwell.

In this respect the South African settlers have as good reason to be proud as the merchants of New York and Chicago or the farmers of our most prosperous agricultural States.

The residences of the successful men of Cape Colony, in the enchanting suburbs of Cape Town, are delightful homes. Some are of brick, some of stone and some of wood; all are spacious and elegant, all are surrounded, or partially surrounded, by verandas and are well shaded by magnificent tropical trees.

Almost all the large houses in Cape Town and other South African cities and towns are approached by enchanting carriage drives through thick groves of giant palms or other monster trees. One of the finest of these groves leads to "Bishop's Court," one of the most delightfully situated private residences in Cape Town. The sketch of "Bishop's Court" is from a photograph taken in the grove itself.

The English and Americans (for of late many Americans have drifted to South Africa) chiefly settle in the towns and villages and engage in trade and manufactures. The houses which they build are such as one sees in the new towns which spring up in Kansas and Dakota, but, like their Kansas and Dakota counterparts, they speedily give place to more substantial and artistic dwellings as the success of each new place becomes assured. Of course many Englishmen go to farming and, as they prosper, they usually build a farm-house as nearly like the old-country homestead which they have left behind them.

But it is mainly by the descendants of the old Dutch Boers that the country districts are settled up and the farming interests carried on. The Boers are simple enough and satisfied with small homes. But their houses are neat and substantial and are, with few exceptions, clean as a new pin. In appearance they are invariably alike. Of rough stone walls, washed with lime to a blinding whiteness—sometimes thatched with straw and sometimes tiled with rough red tiles, never more than one story high and always fronted by a simple low veranda.

Above all these, South African houses are homes, as sacredly so as the homes of England and America. They are cherished and reverenced by those who dwell in them, and to-day both Englishman and Boer in far-away South Africa prize as much as we do the sentiment of John Howard Payne:

"Be it ever so humble there's no place like home."

W. H. S. ATKINSON.

Incandescent Wit.

"It must have been a very funny proceeding," said Lord Bacon to Ignatius Donnelly.

"What was there laughable about it?" inquired the student of Shakespeare and enemy of truth.

"Why, there are twenty-six Barons at Runnymede who signed Magna Charta and achieved liberty for the people."

"Excuse me," responded the sage of Minnesota, "but I can see nothing o'er which your Lordship should split your too plethoric sides with cachinnatious solicitude. Where's the fun in procuring the boon of liberty?"

"Signing the paper, that's the fun. Out of the twenty-six Barons only three could sign their names; the others couldn't write."

Then they both went aside and "smiled" at his Lordship's exceeding incandescent wit.

NATIONAL UNITY.

The Democratic administration of President Cleveland has left an honorable record, which will adorn with increasing brilliancy the page of political history.

In many particulars the cause of good government was grandly vindicated under his intelligent and practical conduct of public affairs, and the spirit of national unity ever found in him a zealous and sincere advocate.

That of itself is deserving of the highest praise.

That will link his name with enduring honor.

President Cleveland rightfully ignored everything which savored of sectional animosity. He knew neither North, South, East or West, except as component and co-equal parts of a re-united Union of States, subject to the same National Constitution, and peopled by a brotherhood of freemen whose interests are mutual and patriotic desires identical.

He acted upon the positive fact that the war waged to preserve the Union ended in a full and complete victory for the Union over twenty years ago.

The country is emphatically at peace. From the centre to circumference of our mighty realm there is not a murmur of disloyalty to organic law, not a token of hostility to the sovereign sway of the old flag.

The Union is stronger than it ever was.

Never before were the people of the whole United States so well acquainted with each other as they are now.

Intolerance of opinion is fast fading away and its opposite daily becoming more justly appreciated.

True some mercenary politicians yet live who, for the sake of partisan profit, would, if they could, blow into flame the embers of sectional prejudice and discord, but their ploddings will fail, because popular sentiment is overwhelmingly against them.

The soldiers who fought to re-establish and preserve national unity are entitled to lasting gratitude, and equally so are the statesmen now striving to make permanent the rich blessings of peace.

Perfection is their kindred glory.

The President to Breakfast With Governor Green.

The press of Elizabeth says that Governor Green authorizes them to state that the President will come to that city, and that the programme in preparation by the local committee will positively be carried out on April 30th.

President Harrison will breakfast with Governor Green, and after that the parade will be reviewed from the gubernatorial mansion. The President will then be escorted in a carriage by the procession to the Port, and delivered on board of the Despatch at 11 o'clock.

Every detail for this has been arranged, places appointed for the distinguished men accompanying the Presidential party to breakfast, carriages have been engaged and it is known who will occupy the particular carriage with President Harrison, Vice President Morton, and the other notables.

These are facts, and there need be no further doubt on the part of the citizens. President Harrison will be in Elizabeth, he will give to Elizabeth all the time necessary, and will be escorted by the procession over the route arranged.

FAVORS LICENSING HOTELS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—If our moral and social reformers would consider the shortness of life, the uncertainty of the future, and the limited amount of pleasure we are permitted to enjoy at best, it seems to me their time could be better employed in setting their moral examples in their daily routine, instead of holding up to the World the acts and failings of the individual few, as awful examples.

If we, as a people, devoted more time to social enjoyment during the eight hours of the day usually devoted to rest and refreshment, the moral effects would outweigh all the teaching and preaching by those who are so concerned about the affairs of the present and future of others, that they entirely overlook their own words, acts and deeds.

It is a well known fact the more primitive the customs, manners and habits of a people the more genuine moral and social happiness exists. This may apply to many [illegible] considered [illegible] ourselves as [illegible], created and permitted to live by the same power that created us, endowed with the same instincts to produce and consume [illegible] a beverage the juices of plants, fruits, cereals and vegetables, and like us to use and abuse their medicinal tonic and life giving properties by their too free use when required. Not so, if allowed an unlimited use of the article, it seems to be one of nature's laws not to crave what we have in abundance and not to enjoy what we may have a surfeit of.

I would advocate the rational enjoyment of all God's gifts to us which are many, by following the example of the best beloved, to use and not abuse the juices of the grape and vines, as they were intended to refresh, nourish, strengthen and enliven our waking hours, making tranquil the hours of rest.

In countries where the product of the vine is used as freely as water [illegible], the people are temperate and happy as a natural consequence.

The way to make people good is by force of example not by force of law, except in extreme cases; then the example would be effective and lasting.

Common law is based upon common sense; if not it ought to be, and enforced with a due regard to the rights and best interest of the community.

If a certain few are engaged in a traffic detrimental to the best interest of society—morally, socially and intellectually, [illegible] their license [illegible] legally constituted authorities are [illegible] by state and rescind such license [illegible] police regulation in the interest of the public, not otherwise.

It is the abuse and not use of intoxicating liquors that fills our public institutions with criminals and paupers. There is [illegible] honest difference of opinion in the [illegible] of the people at large, each entitled to consideration and respect. Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness is a constitutional principle of our government [illegible], and a wise provision in our [illegible] political economy as [illegible].

We cannot expect of a people who have inherited so many different ideas of propriety, an immediate acquiescence in certain particular laws that ignore [illegible] rights guaranteed under the [illegible] of liberty.

In deference to the wishes of many residents and non-residents, a fair [illegible] license would be to grant license to sell liquor to bona-fide hotel keepers and to them only. There is little danger of there being too many hotels in any community if compelled to keep an ample accommodation for man and their beasts.

FOREST FIRES AT WESTFIELD.

The strip of woodland situated about one-half mile North of Westfield, and known as the "Big Woods," was the scene of a disastrous forest fire on Sunday evening. During the evening some indiscreet youth kindled a fire in a lot of dry leaves and rubbish, which soon developed into a roaring blaze, and threatened destruction to everything in the path of the flames. The fire spread with remarkable rapidity and the underbrush, fences and other light material in the woods was licked up and burned like tinder.

Directly in the path of the fire stood the old Perrine homestead, facing on Prospect street, and, as the flames approached it was evident that some speedy action must be taken to save the building from total destruction. The neighbors turned out en masse, and by building "back fires" and applying other means, they succeeded in saving the house. The fire burned through to the roadway, where its progress was checked.

Only Three Weeks Longer.

The run of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" at the handsome Broadway theatre, is rapidly drawing to a close. But three more weeks remain for it to play at that house. The success of this play has been enormous. It has averaged the largest receipts ever known for a comedy in New York. In fact the success of the piece has amounted almost to a craze. No matter where you go you will hear of "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Those desiring to see it will do well to order their seats early. The management has determined to give a grand holiday matinee on Monday, April the 29th, for the benefit of the out-of-town people who will no doubt be in the city at that time.

It is with regret that Manager Sanger is obliged to withdraw the Little Lord in order to make room for the production of the new comic opera, "The Oolah," to be given by Francis Wilson & Company, in the Broadway theatre, in the early part of next month, which promises to be a very pleasing novelty to New York's Summer play patrons. The scenes are laid in Persia, and the incidents are based on some of the amusing peculiarities of the divorce laws of that country. The scenic artists have been afforded exceptional opportunities for the display of handsome coloring in the Byzantine style, and the costuming will, it is said, accurately represent the Persian fashions of the period selected for the story.

Both Francis Wilson and Marie Jansen who will be seen in the piece, will make their first appearance in New York this season when "The Oolah" is produced.

NORTH PLAINFIELD SCHOOL MEETING.

Pursuant to a call in THE PRESS the legal voters of School District, No. 26, met in the public school building in North Plainfield, Tuesday, to hear and act upon the report of the Committee, recently appointed to select sites for a new school building, and to submit plans for the erection of the same. There was a large representation of the voters present, but few of them expressed their views either in favor of or against the project.

Mr. H. E. Munger was elected Chairman of the meeting, and Mr. Edwin Lounsbury filled the office of Secretary, with efficiency and precision. The Secretary read the call, stating the object of the meeting, after which Mr. H. K. Carroll, read the report of the Committee as follows:

To the Inhabitants of School District, No. 26, North Plainfield, in special meeting assembled:

At a special meeting held June 28, 1888, a Committee of five was appointed to consider and report whether the increase of school accommodations which the annual meeting of last year had declared to be necessary, could best be provided by hiring rooms, and by erecting a temporary building on rear of present lot, by adding another story to present building, by building another wing, or by securing another site and building anew. The Committee reported to the annual meeting held March 19, '89; their report was accepted, and they were continued and directed to make a further report upon additional sites and also plans for a new building on the rear of the present school property. Your Committee beg leave to report as follows:

We inserted and advertised in the two daily papers of Plainfield calling for offers of sites. Have received the following: 1st—lot on Somerset street, corner of Grand View avenue, 150x130 feet, owned by E. M. Vail, price $4,000. 2d—lot corner of Craig place and Grove street, 200x187 feet, owned by Mrs. D. S. Berry, price $7,000. 3d—lot on Park place near Somerset street, 84x175 feet, owned by A. Larkins, $2,500. 4th—lot on Somerset street near Jackson avenue, 100x184 feet, extension in rear 100x90 feet, making depth of 284 feet, owned by W. K. March, Jr., price $5,500. In addition to these is the lot of E. Powers on Somerset street, adjoining present school property, on which we have already reported, price $6,000. In preparing plans for a new building, on the rear of the present lot as directed by the annual meeting, the Committee had first to consider how much additional school accommodation is needed. In view of the fact that we have at present at least 1,000 children of school age in this district, of whom only 600 are provided for; that the increase in the census, in the number enrolled in our school and in the average attendance has been very large in last seven years—the increase in census averaging nearly 50 a year—that by a law recently passed the school age has been extended from 18 to 20 years; that the rate of growth will probably be increased rather than diminished; in view of all these and other considerations the Committee reached the conclusion that the new building should be large enough to provide for at least four hundred scholars. The Committee were not authorized to consult an architect and the plan we report is not an architect's plan, but simply an outline such as was reported for the present building. The committee think a strong, substantial two story brick building about 60x45 feet, with four class rooms on each floor, to accommodate about fifty children each, is necessary. The amount needed is as near as we can estimate it, about $20,000, of which $16,000 will be required for building, and $4,000 for heating, furnishing and other expenses. Your committee in conclusion would recommend: 1st—that a school building be erected on rear of present premises. 2d—that its dimensions be about 60x45 feet, ground measurement; that it be well and substantially built of brick; that it be two stories high, with four class rooms on each floor, each class room to have accommodations for fifty scholars. 3d—that $16,000 be voted for building, and $4,000 for heating, furnishing and other expenses.

Respectfully submitted,
H. K. CARROLL,
JAS. MCGEE,
GEO. F. BROWN, Committee.
CHAS. PLACE,
J. H. COOLEY.

Mr. Jas. E. Terrill submitted the following set of resolutions which were adopted with a slight amendment:

Resolved, That the recommendation of the Committee be adopted, and that the Trustees be instructed to take the necessary steps to carry them out.

Resolved, That the Trustees be requested to give the required ten days notice of a meeting of the legal voters of this district, to be held in this place at an early date, to determine whether the amount of money recommended by the Committee shall be appropriated.

Resolved, That the report of the Committee be accepted and the Committee discharged with thanks.

Before putting the resolutions to a vote, ex-Councilman Hegeman suggested that perhaps it would be a wise plan to have the sentiment of the people expressed at the present time. He thought that the matter of expending $20,000 for a new school house, should be thoroughly discussed. There was little or no response, and the resolutions were adopted, as above stated.

The meeting then adjourned.

EASTER-TIDE.

HOW THE DAY WAS OBSERVED IN THE CHURCHES.

(From THE PRESS of April 22.)

"Gloriously the morning breaks
Nature from her slumber wakes;
Light and life the World adorn
This Holy, Holy Easter morn."

Yesterday was a day of great rejoicing throughout the known World—a day set apart to commemorate Christ's Resurrection from the dead. This Easter festival is celebrated in every part of the Christian World, with great solemnity and devotion. In early years the church ornamentations were principally candles, and the common salute between Christians was a kiss and the words "Christ is Risen," to which the response was made: "He is risen indeed." The best known and most universally adopted custom of celebrating Easter is that of making presents of colored eggs, called "pasch" or "pace" eggs, some of which are elaborately ornamented in variegated colors. This custom is still in vogue in the Greek church, particularly in Russia. In some parts of Ireland the legend is current that the sun dances in the sky on Easter morning. Holy Saturday, the day preceding Easter is devoted to baptismal solemnities.

The weather yesterday was particularly delightful; the warm rays of the sun penetrated through the budding branches of the trees, and all nature seemed to smile in commemoration of Christ's resurrection for the redemption of mankind. The festival is indeed the most glorious in the Christian World.

In this city the programmes arranged for the special Easter music in the various churches were lengthy and elaborate and showed both care and taste in their preparation. All of the pulpits were richly adorned, and in most instances the floral displays were simply grand.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

In the above church yesterday morning, Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, the pastor, preached an eloquent sermon on the resurrection, and appropriate Easter hymns were sung by the congregation. The pulpit was artistically, although not elaborately decorated with potted plants, cut flowers and trailing vines from the conservatories of Messrs L. W. Serrell, C. W. McCutchen and other members of the congregation, the same being placed in position by the ladies constituting the Committee on decorations, which included the following: The Misses Marsh, Miss Yerkes, Miss Gussie Runyon, Miss Serrell, assisted by other members of the church. Mr. W. A. Conger presided at the organ. Partly due to Mr. C. W. McCutchen's recent absence from the city, the Sunday school made no special arrangements and held no public celebration.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

At this church, yesterday, Easter was commemorated by a sermon by Rev. C. L. Goodrich, the pastor, in the morning from Revelations 1: 17-18, beginning with the words: "And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead," etc. The floral decorations were plain and neat, consisting of numerous potted plants which formed a semi-circle in front of the reading desk, an urn of choice flowers to the left of the speaker and a variety of cut flowers in the pulpit, including annunciation and Easter lillies. A volunteer choir, consisting of Miss Hattie Burnet, Miss May Kirkner, Miss Mattie Powlison and Messrs M. C. VanArsdale and Lincoln Goodrich, the latter a brother of the pastor, rendered special Easter music, accompanied by Mrs. B. T. Barnes on the organ. In the afternoon the Sunday school held special Easter exercises. No service was held in this church last evening.

CRESCENT AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN.

The services in this church were held at 10:30 A. M., 3:15 and 7:30 P. M., and at all the services the commodious edifice was filled. In the morning the programme opened with an organ fantasia, C minor, by W. C. Hoyte, followed by "Old Hundred" and the Lord's Prayer. The choir rendered excellently "Easter Bells" by Krug, and Rev. W. R. Richards, the pastor, followed with Scripture reading. The hymn, "Christ the Lord is Risen" was sung by the congregation, and the pastor read Matthew, 28th chapter. The choir sang "The Resurrection," by Shelley, after which the pastor led in prayer and read the usual church notices. "Christ above all Glory Seated" was the next hymn sung, followed by a short sermon by the pastor: "Why seek ye the living among the dead," Luke XXIV: 5. The pastor closed his discourse and offered prayer. An offertory from "The Redemption" was beautifully rendered by the choir, and after the hymn "Jesus shall reign" was sung by the congregation, the benediction was pronounced.

The Easter service by the Sunday school at 3:15 P. M. was very interesting and particularly pleasing to the members of the school. The programme included an address by the pastor, a solo by Miss Willetta J. Payne of Metuchen and a recitation by Master Louis Squires. The evening service was according to the following programme:

Mr. J. C. Pierson arranged the music for this occasion and Miss Jessie Utter presided at the organ. The altar decorations were very pretty, consisting mainly of callas, Easter lillies, ferns and cherry blossoms. Mrs. Chas. Wadsworth and Mrs. H. G. Runkle were in charge of the decorations, and many of the plants were grown in the hot houses of Mr. John Taylor Johnston and Mrs. J. K. Myers.

GRACE CHURCH

was well attended at the morning service. The profusion of flowers with which the chancel was decorated, consisting of choice potted plants and lillies of various species in full bearing, with cut flowers and ferns strewn carelessly about as a relief, presented a magnificent sight. A beautiful wreath of delicate white flowers hung from the lecturn, the latter imbedded in a dense bed of blooming plants. The furniture of the chancel was tastefully draped with a rich material of silk and gold. These decorations were evidently the work of artists.

The rector, Rev. Archdeacon Rodman, taking for his text, First Thessalonians, 4th chapter 14th verse, preached a very able sermon in which all present were deeply interested. The collection taken amounted to $345.71.

The following selections rendered were especially arranged for the morning service:

Voluntary—Duett: Gloria..........from Haydn's [Third Mass.
Opening Hymn, 101—"Angels Roll the Rock [away."
Anthem—Christ, our Passover..........Chappell.
Gloria..........Turner.
Te Deum Laudamus..........Cramer.

Sanctus..........Gounod.
Communion Hymn, 208..........Shepherd of Souls.
Gloria in Excelsis..........Old Chant.
Nunc Dimittis.

In the evening there was a large gathering to witness the Sunday school exercises. Every pew was filled to its utmost capacity. A very pretty design, covered with gilt and representing the rays of the sun, measuring about ten feet in length at the base and about five feet in height in the centre was placed in front of the chancel. As the name of each class was called one member responded with a suitable text and floral offering, representing a letter, placing the same upon a ray, which, when completed read:

"CHRIST IS RISEN, HE IS NOT HERE."

Below is the programme of exercises:

Voluntary—Duett.
Chorus—"Deck the altar with bright flowers." (Wm. A. Ford.
Sentences; Confession; the Lord's prayer; Versicles.

Offering—Anthem—He is risen, He is not here.
Chorus—"Lift your glad voices"..........Leman.
Benediction.

The ladies constituting the following committees deserve particular mention for the work and good taste displayed in their respective lines of duty:

On flowers—Miss Betts, Miss Langdon, Miss Wilkinson.

Altar society—Mrs. F. O. Herring, Mrs. William Pelletier, Mrs. E. C. Finch, Mrs. J. Hart, Mrs. N. P. T. Finch, Mrs. C. S. Munn, Mrs. William Kleinecke.

On design, "Christ is risen, He is not here"—Miss Guion, Miss Jennie Harriott, Miss Morgan.

The music at both services was a special attraction and worthy of notice. The quartette did nicely and the boy choir under the tutorship of Mrs. W. A. Freeman, an efficient instructress did their part to the satisfaction of all. The organ voluntary duetts by Mrs. Freeman and her son, Arthur, were well rendered.

HOLY CROSS CHURCH.

The Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, was crowded yesterday morning, by a large and fashionable congregation. Before the services commenced there was only standing room, camp chairs being brought into requisition in the centre aisle. A large number of strangers were present from this city and adjoining towns. The musical programme as published in THE PRESS on Saturday, was fully carried out by the vested choir, and the selections were nicely rendered. All were under the direction of Mr. Chas. W. Kellogg, choir-master, and the young organist, Mr. Wm. E. MacClymont, performed his part with credit. He was assisted by Mr. Eli Long, Jr., by the introduction of the violin. The decorations of the pretty church were elaborate, and consisted of a lavish display of choice plants, lillies, vines and ferns, which were tastefully distributed throughout the chancel, altar, and around the large fount. On the pulpit and lectern there were crosses and crowns of the very choicest flowers.

The rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy, preached, and chose for his text: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor., 15:57. A large number of the congregation remained to partake of the Holy Communion. The Easter offering was the largest in the history of the church.

The children's service in the afternoon was largely attended; long before the opening the church was packed, and many had to stand. When the doors of the nursery of the church were opened, it was a beautiful sight to see the children march into the church, preceded by the choir, each class bearing its own silken banner, and singing the Processional hymn.

They marched down the side aisle and up the middle aisle to the seats that had been reserved for them. Each banner was deposited in its proper place at the end of the pew, and the display of the various colors, 17 in number, with the lights and flowers in the foreground, presented a very pleasing appearance. It was the largest, the most interesting, and the greatest success of any previous Easter festival held by the children. They were addressed by the Rector, and by their Superintendent, Mr. Henry B. Wells.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Easter Sunday was fittingly celebrated in this church. Services are being held in the Sunday School rooms preparatory to opening the new church edifice, and owing to the cramped facilities the display was not as elaborate as it would have been under more favorable circumstances. The pulpit was beautifully decked with choice plants and cut flowers.

The pastor, Rev. E. P. Ketcham, preached an instructive and interesting sermon, taking for his text Luke, 24th chapter, 5th verse. Sabbath school and Bible study was conducted by the pastor at 3 P. M. The Y. P. S. of C. E. met at 4:15 P. M.

MT. OLIVE BAPTIST.

The pulpit decorations in this church were modest and neat. In the morning Rev. Mr. Mitchell preached an appropriate sermon on the Resurrection, and in the evening the Sunday school rendered selections from Rev Dr. Lowry's Easter piece, "The Third Day." Mr. C. T. Kissam was present and made an address. The attendance at both morning and evening services was large.

TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

At the morning service, nearly every seat in this large church was occupied. The floral decorations were under the immediate supervision of Mrs. C. Schenck, Mrs. S. M. Runyon and Miss N. Randall, assisted by other members of the Ladies' Christian Work Society of the church. The pulpit and platforms were literally banked with blooming plants and fragrant cut flowers, presenting a magnificent scene. A beautiful cross of white cut flowers occupied a prominent and well-chosen position in front of the pulpit desk. The pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck showed his appreciation of the beautiful floral display by publicly thanking those who contributed in any way toward its accomplishment.

The regular church choir had been further strengthened for the occasion by the addition of Mrs. J. S. Cutter, Mrs. E. Bird, Mrs. J. Van Dyke and Mr. Fred. Cutter. After repeated rehearsals during the week past, under the careful training of Mr. A. L. Titsworth, everything bid fair for a grand chorus of voices, but during Saturday night Mrs Cutter was suddenly afflicted with bronchitis and totally unfitted to take the prominent part assigned her. The programme as arranged, was not changed however, and those constituting the choir did themselves credit. Trinity church is proud of its organist, Mr. A. L. Titsworth, and on this occasion his playing was faultless. Following is the musical programme rendered during the service:

Organ voluntary.
Grand offertoire de concert in C......W. E. [illegible] [Thayer.
Te Deum Laudamus in F..........B. Tours.
Response in Ep.
Gloria in F.
Anthem—"Christ the Lord is risen"...T. Spencer [Lloyd.
Hymn 120—This is the day the Lord hath made.
" 271—Christ the Lord is risen today.
" 267—Morning breaks upon the tomb.
Postlude—Hallelujah chorus from the Messiah [Handel.

The pastor's discourse on "The resurrection of the body," was a clear and logical effort and showed careful preparation. His text was 1st Cor., xv—35.

In the evening "The Immortal Dawn," a well-arranged Easter service of singing and responsive readings, was very creditably rendered by the choir and Sunday School, Superintendent E. E. Anthony presiding. Our fellow-townsman, Mr. Jas. Moffett, made an excellent address to the Sunday School, which commanded the closest attention of the youngest and oldest person present. Altogether Trinity church enjoyed a happy Easter-day.

GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH.

Easter services were held in the morning and evening. After the morning service the Lord's Supper was administered. The topics of the sermons were in accordance with the day. The text in the morning was taken from St. John 14:19 "Because I live, ye shall also live", this being the great Easter message and promise for the right feast participants. In the evening the text was Mark 16, 1-8. The resurrection of Christ being a wonder beyond the expectation of man wrought out by Gods power to the joy and redemption of mankind. The floral decoration was very fine and tasty.

PARK AVENUE BAPTIST.

There was a large attendance in this church yesterday morning and the floral display was large and beautiful. The decorations were in charge of Mrs. J. W. Johnson and Miss Hysinger who displayed both taste and skill in their arrangement. The choir consisting of Mrs. W. S. Lowry, Miss Ella H. Runyon, Miss F. Hawkins, Miss L. L. Runyon and Messrs W. S. Lowry, D. Mandell, Chas. Van Winkle and Nelson Van Winkle, rendered special Easter music, under the leadership of choir-master and organist, Mr. R. H. Lowry. Rev. Jas. Reed Dilts, the pastor, preached from the text: "Verily, verily, I say unto you except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone," John 12:24. Following is the programme:

Hymn—"Crown Him"..........Choir.
Organ voluntary.
Doxology.
Lord's prayer.
"Gloria," choir..........Choir.
Scripture Reading, Psalms XVI.
Sentence, "O Father Hear Us"..........Main.
Hymn, "Altogether Lovely"
Scripture reading, Mark, 16th chapter.
Prayer.
Hymn, "The Conqueror of Death."
Anthem, "Go forth to the Mountain"....Danks.
Anthem, "Lift your glad voices."
Prayer.
Hymn, "Let all the earth praise Christ."
Benediction..........By Pease.

In the evening, Rev. Dr. Lowry's Easter service entitled "The Third Day" was rendered with appropriate music.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

St. Mary's church was crowded at the three masses, yesterday morning. At 10.45 High Mass took place, with Father Smyth as celebrant. At the Credo Father Smyth delivered a short sermon, appropriate to the Resurrection of our Saviour. The altar was very nicely decorated with flowers, and with the numerous lighted candles formed a grand spectacle.

The musical programme was under the direction of Mr. David Lyon, so long the organist of the First Baptist church of this city. The several selections were very acceptably rendered by a choir of men and boys who have been under the tuition of Mr. Lyon for some time, and the fact of their doing so well on their first public appearance, shows that the Professor deserves great credit as a teacher of music. It is only a question of time when the choir will compare favorably with any in the city. The mass was followed by the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, by the rector, Father Smyth, assisted by Father Stafford, thus closing in a fitting manner the exercises of the day.

CHURCH OF OUR SAVIOUR.

The Church of Our Saviour at Netherwood was filled with a devout audience at the choral celebration. This had been preceded by an early celebration 7:30 A. M. and morning-prayer at 10:15 A. M. The ladies of the church displayed more than ordinary skill and taste in arranging the floral decorations in and about the chancel. The window above the handsome dossel was covered with cloth on which was placed in white flowers the words "Christ is Risen," and above it the body of a dove, with outstretched wings, was suspended. The effect was heightened by the lighted candles on the altar. The musical portions of the service, with Mr. Wheeler as organist, were led by a quartette from Elizabeth, and their singing was very fine. The Rev. S. P. Simpson, the priest in charge, conducted the services and preached a thoughtful and helpful sermon. In the afternoon the Sunday school enjoyed the festival at a delightful service.

M. E. CHURCH.

The pulpit of this church was handsomely decorated with flowers, furnished by Mrs. Geo. H. Burgess, of Central avenue, and the attendance at both the morning and evening service was large. In the morning the Rev. Chas. E. Mitchell, the pastor, preached from First Corinthians, 15: 12 — "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" The regular church choir rendered special Easter music. In the afternoon the Sunday school observed the day by holding appropriate exercises, which included missionary offerings, singing and speaking by the scholars. In the evening the pastor preached from Matthew, 23: 37.

WARREN UNION MISSION.

The Easter service at the Mission chapel last evening was a grand success. The platform on either side had a large frame work covered with blooming plants. At 7:30 the building was filled to overflowing with the members of the school and their friends to take part and enjoy the programme under the title of "The Lamb of God." The following programme of music, accompanied by organ, piano, violins and cornet, interspersed with Scripture readings and recitations was rendered:

He Arose..........School.
Hallelujah..........School.
Glad breaks the day..........Choir.
Hail the Victor..........School.
Jesus loves the children..........Primary.
O Love Divine..........School.
Easter Chimes..........Choir
Jesus is risen.......Solo Lena Squires and Choir.
The stone is rolled away..........School.
Sing out a royal song..........Choir and School
The Master is risen..........School.
Chime on sweet bells..........School.

Recitations were rendered by Robbie Ingram, Ida Vermeule and ten members of the primary class, all doing credit to themselves. The address of the evening was given by the Rev. N. W. Cadwell, of Westfield, who gave a very instructive and pleasing address, and long to be remembered by all who were present to hear it.

CHURCH OF THE HEAVENLY REST.

Services were held at this church at eleven o'clock A. M. followed by Holy Communion. The Rev. J. P. Taylor, D. D., officiated. In the afternoon the children held their Easter exercises. The following is the musical programme of the morning service:

Opening, "Awake Glad Soul Awake"
Anthem, "Christ Our Passover"..........N. Millard
" "Gloria Patri"..........Thomas
" "TeDeum"..........Rogers
" "Jubilate"..........Dudley Buck
Hymn......."Christ the Lord is risen to-Day."
"Kyrie Eleison"..........Gwadoris
"Gloria Tibi"..........[illegible]
Hymn......."At the Lord's High Feast we Sing"
Offertory, "He is not here but is Risen"..........Millard

At Hope chapel, Bethel mission and in St. Joseph's church in North Plainfield, there was a fine display of flowers and in each of these places of worship commemorative exercises were held.

School Opening.

The new school, corner Monroe avenue and Fourth street, was opened Monday for the reception of pupils, under the supervision of Miss Suikley, Principal of the public schools of this city. Judge Wadsworth of the Board of Education was present. The attendance of new scholars was not large.

The Board of Education earnestly request all parents living beyond Plainfield avenue, having children of school age, to send them immediately to the new school, that they may be properly graded, and the school put in complete running order prior to the Summer vacation. The building is replete with every convenience and comfort for both teacher and scholar, and reflects great credit upon Messrs O. S. Teale the architect, and Isaac W. Pangborn, the builder.

New Laws.

Governor Green recently signed the following bills:

Senate 49, establishing a new township in Bergen county, to be known as the township of Boiling Spring.

Senate 217, placing the appointing of County Superintendents of Schools solely in the State Board of Education, and repeals the part of the Act giving Boards of Freeholders confirmatory powers.

House 419, authorizes counties to acquire and improve lands for public parks, to maintain and regulate the same, and appoint commissioners to condemn lands therefor.

House 435, provides that the Superintendent and Warden of each Lunatic Asylum in the State shall present to each Board of Freeholders an itemized bill of all moneys due such county for public patients, which bill shall be sworn to by such officers

House joint resolution No. 7. provides that a committee of two Senators, the President of the Senate, three Assemblymen, and the Speaker of the House, be appointed to tender to the Army of the Potomac the courtesies and hospitality of the State at their next annual encampment, to be held at Orange in June next, and authorize the payment of the expenses of the encampment by the State.

House 325 was filed without approval. It exempts physicians of twenty years' practice in the State from complying with the act regulating the practice of medicine and surgery.

To be Regretted.

It is to be regretted that Senator Mallon was so stubborn as to vote against the confirmation of Hon. Robert H. Livingston of this city, as Supervisor of the State Prison, on Saturday last, thereby referring that gentleman's nomination, made by the Governor to so responsible a position, and one which Mr. Livingston would have filled with ability and credit. It is understood that Senator Mallon wished the office for a friend of his, hence his vote against Mr. Livingston's confirmation.

Thrown from a Horse.

On Saturday afternoon Mr. Frank Van Buren, brother of Mr. Edward M. Van Buren, who was seriously injured in New York recently, met with as painful if not more serious accident than his brother. While mounting a horse on Second place, this city, the animal turned suddenly throwing its rider backward, who struck on his head, causing concussion of the brain. The patient has since remained in a stupor, but Dr. Endicott, the attending physician, entertains hopes for his recovery.

Gamblers Surprised.

Sunday afternoon Chief Carey, by a flank movement pounced upon a number of gamblers in the neighborhood of Potter Press Works, who were busily engaged in a game of cards, and resulted in the arrest of one Aleck Wilson, colored.

In order to secure the pool and paraphernalia in use, he was obliged to let the others escape. The city has now to its credit, $4.18 in cash, one pack of cards, and one corduroy coat, all of which were confiscated from the gamblers. Complaints have frequently been made against this rendezvous, and Chief Carey has done a commendable deed by breaking it up.

A Dishonest Domestic.

Mr. F. S. Miller, proprietor of Hotel Netherwood, has of late been missing articles of wearing apparel, jewelry, etc, and the theft was traced to one of the female help who left his employ a few days ago. The girl, whose name is omitted out of consideration for her parents, who are said to be respectable people living in Raritan, was called upon at a house in East Second street, where she was stopping early Monday, and her trunk was searched. The missing property valued at upwards of $30 was found concealed in the trunk. The girl was arrested by Chief Carey and she now languishes in the city jail awaiting a hearing.

Strange to say that while the girl's trunk was being searched a lady drove up in front of the house for the purpose of engaging her for general housework.

Since the above was written the prisoner has been committed to the county jail in default of $300 bail.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION SPEAKS.

At a regular meeting of the Board of Education, held recently the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That a requisition be made upon the Assessor and Collector of taxes in the City of Plainfield, N. J., to assess and collect for the current year, four-tenths of one per cent. on the taxable valuation of real and personal property in the City for school purposes in District No. 1, as provided for by an act, dated April 20, 1885, and ratified by a vote in the District at a charter election held in December, 1887, and also such sum as shall be required for the payment of bonds and interest as provided by law.

The amount thus derived from taxes, it is thought will see the Board of Education through for the year, and will also provide for the maintenance of the new school in the Fourth Ward, not yet named.

Last year the total tax levy for school purposes was $27,811.23, or a percentage of 64 cents on the $100.

Took Goods, Mortgage and Good-will.

John Angleman, at one time a member of the defunct firm of butchers doing business in this city under the firm name of Flemming & Angleman, has become complicated in legal proceedings. The facts in the matter are these:

It appears that on September 27, 1887, Mr. Angleman while living in North Plainfield, gave a chattel mortgage on his household goods for $200, for three months. The following September he moved to Newark, taking all his effects with him. He made himself liable for so doing, but Justice Nash the mortgagee, was lenient with him, and had the mortgage transferred to Essex county, where it was recorded. No part of the mortgage or interest has been paid the mortgagee since the document was executed. About three weeks ago, a bailiff was sent to Newark for the purpose of recovering either goods or collateral. He was told by Mr. Angleman, who refused to surrender the goods, to go to Court and recover the claim. Last week Justice Nash in company with Counsellor W. K. McClure of this city, visited Newark, for the purpose of bringing the fellow to terms, and recover the property if possible. They were met with the same reception, but succeeded in getting possession of the goods. Mr. Angleman was also arrested and brought before Judge Otto at Newark, but at the request of plaintiff, was allowed to go on his own recognizance, to appear before the Grand Jury.

"THAT SCOTCH PLAINS SCHOOL HOUSE MATTER."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Will you kindly pardon a few necessary words in correction of some of the errors of fact contained in the communication signed "A Voter," published in your issue of April 15.

The Trustees did not ask for $20,000, but for $17,000; $15,000 for the building and $2,000 for a lot.

They did not propose to locate the school house "near the railroad" as your correspondent "hears" they did.

No one of the Trustees was "heard" to say what "A Voter" says he said, or anything bearing even a remote resemblance to it.

The Trustees would have had at the meeting the zealous opposition of your correspondent in raising any amount whatever for a new school house, his plan being at that time to patch up and perhaps enlarge the old building.

There was "considerable misapprehension about the cost to each individual tax payer for a new school house," and it was a misapprehension which was zealously fostered by the opposition, the mortgaging of farms and raising of rents being intimated as the necessary consequences of a measure, the real cost of which at present rates of valuation would be 36 cents on $100!

I may remark in passing that the average attendance of children the past year has been 130 and not "about 165." "A Voter" is welcome to the benefit of this fact.

It would seem that your correspondent proposes pretty "hard lines" for the six or eight families from the abandoned school district called the Jackson School House." They are advised "if the school taxes are too high for them" to hire "a teacher of their own" as "they still have the old school house."

It is true as he says that they would not need to "pay so large a school tax," but how that result could be worked out so long as they or their property were within the limits of District No. 14, and liable therefore to the school tax for that district, would seem to require the same sort of mathematics by which the expenditure of some $9,000 on the old school house has been justified during the last sixteen years.

Respectfully, etc.,
DAVID F. HALL.

Scotch Plains, April 16, 1889.

SUBURBAN NOTES.

It is bad enough for a family to move, to pack-up, and put together and look after the different loads and see that nothing is left behind; all this is a diversion sufficient for any ordinary family, and furnishes an excitement which few persons care to go through more than once or twice in their life. But there was a still more violent removal going on last week—an ancient and venerable house casting loose from its foundations and starting on a journey down the road.

Everybody knows the old Thys' house—the Front street landmark. For years it has stood there, jutting out upon the sidewalk and obtruding its very front door in the path of the passer-by. The quaint ice house sunk in the ground, with the "sweep well" and the bee hives in the rear, gave this old homestead an odd and pleasing air. One Thys' after another lived here and then went off, and William Reynolds and his wife were the last occupants of the place. I saw John Thys —young John—standing on the door-step as the work of removal was going on. He said the old place looked hardly familiar now. A great many people will be glad that the old house is gone, as they thought the bend in the sidewalk caused by the projection of the house an unsightly defect.

The man who undertook the job of removing the house was attacked by a chill or something of that sort, and moving operations were suspended for awhile. The consequence was that at this writing the old house was reposing peacefully in the middle of the road, directly opposite the residence of Mr. Joseph Clark. A house in such a location has at night-time a rather startling appearance, which fact may serve to account for the husky ejaculation which a young man who was walking home late the other night was heard to utter "There's Thys' ol' house, gone out into' road, I—guess—I've got 'em again."

The house on the hill, formerly occupied by Mr. Force, is undergoing extensive repairs. A new veranda is being constructed on the East side; this gives the house an appearance of breadth, which, in view of its extreme length, is a great improvement.

The grounds at the railroad station have had their usual Spring treatment and now present an appearance of freshness that is fitted to the season.

During the blasting of the old stump on the lot at the corner of Front street and Hunter avenue, a gentleman who was passing barely escaped a fatal accident. The dynamite was in the stump and the match had been applied; two of the men were warning the public against approaching. A gentleman who was coming along the street, mistaking the signals, walked unconcernedly on and was dangerously near the stump when the explosion occurred. Had he walked a little faster, and been twenty feet nearer the stump than he was, the consequences might have been serious, as the air was filled with fragments of wood, many of them as large as a man's arm.

The following are the appointments for librarians for April: Mr. Fred Hoppel, April 20th and 29th; M'Cready Sykes, the 22d; Stephen S. Townsend, the 24th, and Robert L. Johnston, the 27th.

SUBURBAN SAUNTERER.

Let Us Observe the Day.

The bill making Inauguration day a legal holiday was signed by Governor Green on Friday and the day will therefore be one for general observance. All business should be suspended and every householder who owns a flag should hang it out. He who does not should buy one. Remember, this is the only chance the community will have in this particular line. The observance of the next centennial will have to be delegated.

Considering that this is the first time the piece has been performed in public, and judging from the frequent encores and hearty applause by the audience, "Up To The Times" made a decided hit. The play abounds in fun, song and dance, and the performers are all artists of merit. We predict success for "Up To The Times." Mr. Ed. Marble is business manager of the new venture.

The Committee also reported progress in the matter of flagging. The Committee was continued.

Mr. Babcock, Chairman of the Committee appointed to purchase a piano, reported that a Weber square grand had been secured. The new school will be open for the reception of pupils on Monday next.

EVONA VOCAL CLUB.

The first private concert under the auspices of the Evona Vocal Club, was held in the Evona Union Union Mission School, Tuesday. The school building was taxed to its utmost capacity to accommodate the members and friends of the Club. Mrs. Kate C. Conant creditably acquitted herself as musical directress, as did also Miss Margie Atkinson, the accompanist. The following artists assisted the club in rendering a delightful programme of solos, duetts, part songs and medleys: Miss Bella L. Watson, soprano; Miss Edith Tuttle, contralto; Mr. Robert Schreyvogel, tenor; Mr. Wm. T. Angel, baritone; Mr. R. Fletcher Tilton, pianist. The programme was according to the following:

PART FIRST.

Part Song—May Song .... Mendelssohn
Evona Vocal Club.
Tenor Solo—Come Where the Lindens Bloom .... (D. Buck)
Mr. Schreyvogel.
Alto Solo—The Children's Home .... Cowen
Miss Tuttle.
Part Song—Last Night .... Kjerulf
Evona Vocal Club.
Soprano Solo—Dear Heart .... Mattei
Miss Watson.
Medley .... C. A. White.
Evona Vocal Club.

PART SECOND.

Duetto—After the Rain .... Pinsuti
Miss Watson and Miss Tuttle.
Tenor Solo—Thine Eyes so Blue and Tender .... Lassen
Mr. Schreyvogel.

Evona Vocal Club.
Baritone Solo .... Selected
Mr. Angel.
Soprano Solo—Betrayal .... Meyer-Helmund
Miss Watson.
Part Song—Sleep While the Soft Evening Breezes .... Bishop
Evona Vocal Club.

The soprano solo, "Dear Heart," by Miss Watson, and a duett, "After the Rain," by Miss Watson and Miss Tuttle, were exquisite, showing the ladies' voices to perfection. The other numbers on the programme deserving of special mention, were: a tenor solo, "Thine Eyes so Blue and Tender," by Mr. Schreyvogel; a baritone solo, selected, by Mr. Angel, and the soprano solo, "Betrayal," by Miss Watson.

By special request Mr. Tilton, organist in St. James church of Brooklyn, rendered some selections from Italian opera.

On the whole the concert was a grand success, and too much cannot be said in praise of Mrs. Kate C. Conant for the able and efficient manner in which the entertainment was conducted, and to other members of the club who assisted in the preliminary arrangements. It is understood that the club will give another concert in the near future.

The officers of the Club are: President, Mr. R. J. Shaw; Vice President, Mr. C. W. Oley; Sec'y, F. Rupp, M. D.; Treas'r, Mr. J. Fowler Pound; Librarian, Miss Elizabeth G. East.

—One year ago on Easter Sunday, the old bell in the Crescent Avenue church belfry, called the worshippers to church for the last time. On that day the bell was broken and forever silenced.

Broke His Thumb.

While playing ball on the Crescent ball grounds on Saturday afternoon, Mr. John Sharp, Jr., who was acting as first baseman, had the thumb on his left hand broke, just below the joint, the bone protruding through the flesh about a quarter of an inch. Dr. Berg dressed the wound which was very painful.

A Smashup at Grant Avenue.

About six o'clock Saturday A. M. a coal train on the Central railroad bound East, slowed up at Grant avenue, closely followed by a Baltimore and Ohio freight, drawn by engine No. 186. A dense fog prevented the engineer of the latter train from seeing many feet ahead of him, and when he discovered his close proximity to the coal train, he reversed his engine so suddenly that a flat car was forced under a box car raising it clear from the track. The only damage done was to the flat car which was completely demolished. A wrecker arrived about half-past seven o'clock, and by ten o'clock no trace of a wreck could be seen. The third track was blocked for a time.

Elders' Meeting.

The regular semi-annual meeting of the Elders' Association of the Presbytery of Elizabeth, was held at Woodbridge on Tuesday of last week.

The Moderator, Mr. I. C. Pierson, of Plainfield, called the meeting to order. There was a fair representation from Elizabeth, Plainfield, Rahway and the smaller towns in the Presbytery.

Mr. William H. Sampson of this city, chairman of a committee appointed at the last meeting, "to formulate a plan for systematic beneficence, etc.," presented a comprehensive report, embodying a number of suggestions to pastors and elders. The report was ordered printed, and a copy to be sent to each pastor and elder in the Presbytery.

"The Fairchild-Searing Case."

The case referred to in Thursday's PRESS as The Fairchild-Searing Case, was not the "Fairchild-Searing Case" in which Mrs. Searing's property was seized in attachment obtained by Mr. Fairchild. Mrs. Searing was completely successful in upsetting the attachment, and recovering possession of her property through the judgment of Judge Magie in the higher Court. Justice Nash did not undertake to reverse the higher Court. He simply gave judgment for a debt that Mrs. Searing never disputed. What had put Mrs. Searing on her metal was that before Justice Crosley for the same debt, a writ of attachment was issued under which she was deprived of the possession of her property. She fought to recover possession. She won. Before, Mr. Fairchild had the property without the judgment; now he has the judgment without the property.

Funeral of William Adair.

The funeral of the late William Adair who died on Monday, took place from the deceased's late home on North avenue, afternoon April 17, and was largely attended, members of Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., and the carpenters' and Joiners' Union, with which the deceased was identified, being present in a body. Rev. C. L. Goodrich, pastor of the Congregational church officiated. The pall-bearers were Messrs L. R. Blackford, John Morton, C. W. Tallman, Wm. Boe, Levi V. Kline and Edward Fluck, members of Plainfield Lodge.

The deceased, although without relatives in this country, was not without friends, as was evidenced by the grand floral display. Among the beautiful set pieces was a pillow with the words "Willie at Rest," and another with the words "At Rest" inscribed thereon. Wreaths, Easter lillies and fragrant cut flowers were strewn on the casket.

The remains were taken to Hillside cemetery and interred according to the prescribed rites of the Odd Fellows.

Death of ex-Health Inspector Platt.

(From the N. Y. World.)

"Dr. Joseph Hall Platt, formerly a well-known physician of Plainfield, N. J., and at one time its health officer, was Thursday found dead in bed in the room he had taken at the Putnam House, Twenty-sixth street and Fourth avenue. He entered into the hotel about 1 o'clock that morning. When discovered about 11 o'clock in the morning, he had apparently been dead some hours. Deputy Coroner Jenkins was of the opinion that death was due to heart disease, but an autopsy will probably be made, for it was known that Platt always carried nux vomica with him.

"The Doctor was born in Albany 58 years ago. He graduated with honor at Union College and began the practice of medicine in Red Bank, N. J. He afterwards went to Plainfield, where he established a good practice, but eventually came to this city. Troubles came and little by little he lost his practice, and he was finally obliged to accept a clerkship with a lawyer. Wednesday he was discharged.

"Platt was married three times. His first wife died, he was divorced from the second and separated from the third."

Dr. Platt was in Plainfield a few days ago, and was apparently enjoying excellent health.

Post No. 73 G. A. R. Entertained.

Last Friday the Women's Relief Corps No. 10, auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., of this city, entertained the members of the Post at the rooms of the latter, and a very enjoyable time was had by all present. The writer could not help contrasting the present with the past, when twenty-eight years ago our country was in peril and these brave boys voluntarily went to the front, endured the hardships and privations of war, and then to look upon the happy gathering last evening, the contrast was so great that one could hardly realize it.

The occasion was an invitation from the members of the Woman's Relief Corps No. 10, to attend an informal reception given to the Post. The attendance was fair and everything passed off pleasantly. Following is the programme of the evening's exercises:

Welcome address .... President Mrs W. S. Addis.
Organ solo .... Clarence Rittenhouse.
Vocal selection .... Mrs. Robert Walker.
(Mrs. F. E. Dodge, Mrs W. S. Addis.
Recitation—"The Shipwreck" .... Miss Try Mattox.
Recitation, "Barbara Fritchie," Mr. W. R. Mattox.
Vocal selection .... Mrs. Walker, Mrs. F. E. Dodge.
Address .... Mr. John E. Stewart.
Recitation—"Roll Call" .... Mr. Wm. Addis.
Address .... Capt. Wm. Hand.

The entertainment concluded with "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," in which all joined in singing.

—Because of attractive Easter services in the different churches, and the absence of organist and choir, the usual meeting in Reform Hall was on Sunday evening adjourned by President French for one week.

Heavy Postage.

There was paid on one small parcel sent through the Plainfield post office, on Saturday last, from the Chautauqua institution to New South Wales, the sum of $6.90 postage.

Flower Thieving.

Some thief entered the front yard of Mr. E. P. Thorn's residence on East Front street, Sunday evening, and stole five handsome hyacinthe flower plants. Mr. Thorn takes great pride in growing the beautiful flowers which adorn his premises, and it seems contemptible for parties to thus wantonly destroy them.

Base Ball.

The Y. M. C. A. Crescents and a nine from the Pond Tool Works will play a match game of ball on the Crescent's new grounds, Saturday afternoon, beginning at 4 P. M. The Pond nine will be a strong one and an exciting contest may be expected.

On the following Saturday the Crescents will compete with the Y. M. C. A. Club of New Brunswick.

The Lee Brothers' Tax in 1834.

Mr. E. P. Thorn of this city, is in possession of the duplicate tax books of 1834-5-6-7 for Plainfield, when his father, Jacob Thorn, was Collector. It is interesting to note the difference in taxation of persons in those years and at present. For instance, in 1834, the Lee Brothers, whose munificent gift to the Scotch Plains Baptist church at their death recently, were taxed respectively on $650 and $250 each.

Farmer Hilbert Will Recover.

The condition of Farmer Joseph Hilbert of Myersville who was so seriously injured by being thrown from a load of lumber in a runaway accident on Park avenue on Tuesday of last week, has so much improved that the patient will probably be able to leave Muhlenberg Hospital on Saturday next. The wounds are healing nicely, and everything looks favorable for his speedy recovery.

Mr. John W. Murray as a Fireman.

In referring to the great grain elevator fire in New York, Friday, the Sun of Saturday said:

"Besides the railroad employees there were a good many hundreds of insurance men in the crowd, and very many of them turned in to do what they could to help protect themselves from the threatened loss. John W. Murray, Vice President of the German-American, was one of those who stood on the pier as long as the firemen did, and helped handle the hose and move the freight like an ordinary laborer."

Church Officers Elected.

At the annual parish meeting held Monday at Holy Cross church, North Plainfield, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Delegates to Convention—Messrs W. J. Leonard, Geo. F. Edwards, John H. Carman.

Vice Templar—Miss Ida S. Naylor.

Past Chief Templar—Miss Leona Burdick.

At the meeting, last evening, three new members were initiated into the lodge. Visitors were also present from out-of-town, including District Deputy F. B. Robertson of Newark, and others.

Condoling the Death of a Brother Member.

At a regular meeting of Noah Dove Encampment No. 28, I. O. O. F., held Thursday evening, a committee of three was appointed to draft suitable resolutions out of respect to the memory of the late William Adair. The following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst a beloved brother William Adair, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, his associates, while submitting to the decrees of an all-wise and ever righteous God, deeply deplore our loss, and extend our heartfelt sympathy to those who are near and dear to him by family ties.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be published in the city papers and a copy be sent to his bereaved parents.

E. D. FLUCK,
L. R. BLACKFORD,
E. C. MORSE.

At a special meeting of Plainfield Lodge No. 44, I. O. O. F. held Wednesday afternoon, April 17, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in his all-wise Providence to remove from our midst Brother William Adair, to that bourne from whence no traveler returns.

WHEREAS, In his death we are called upon to mourn the loss of a beloved and faithful member of our fraternity.

Resolved, That as we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, we will remember He does not willingly afflict the children of men, but rather that this affliction shall work out for them a far exceeding and greater weight of glory.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be published in the city papers and a copy be sent to his afflicted parents.

The Reform Club Treasury Filled to Overflowing, and the Purchase of a New Piano is Now Assured.

Reform Hall was not overcrowded last Thursday at the conclusion of the Ladies' Temperance Aid Society's Fair and Festival, owing to the many other attractions in various parts of the city, but the business done was all that could be expected under the circumstances. Everybody present looked cheerful, and from all appearances it was evident that they were having a good time. During the evening there were vocal and instrumental selections rendered in a highly creditable manner. The Reform Club will doubtless be benefitted through the efforts of this noble band.

A few of the many curiosities on exhibition were: A coat taken from the body of a British soldier during the Revolutionary War; Continental money and passes; a copy of the Life of Henry VIII, 217 years old; a China set, 90 years old; a magnificent piece of perforated paper work, executed by a prisoner in Trenton State Prison in the year 1831. This piece of work is really wonderful, the only instrument used by him being his finger-nail, sharpened to a point, with which the work was done; a piece of gold lace, 109 years old, brought to this country from India, and a brass instrument which was picked up at Germantown during the Revolution.

Great praise is due to the ladies under whose supervision the fair was conducted so successfully. They are: Mrs. P. M. French, President; Mrs. J. D. Titsworth, Chairman; Mrs. E. P. Williams, Chairman of refreshment dep't; Mrs. F. A. Dunham, in charge of French booth; Mrs. C. Frank French, at the fish pond; Mrs. Jno. VanDyke, fortune teller; Miss Poole and Miss Conkey presiding at the flower bower, assisted by other members of the Society.

—State Deputy Wm. A. Rielly of Newark, of the I. O. G. T., will deliver an address in the W. C. T. U. rooms, No. 73 West Front street, on Friday evening, under the auspices of Alpha Lodge, No. 4, I. O. G. T., of this city.

A Plainfielder Injured in New York.

Edward M. Van Buren, a son of Mr. Daniel T. Van Buren of East Ninth street, this city, was knocked down by a horse car in New York city Friday, and badly cut about the head. The injuries were of such a serious nature that it was deemed advisable to remove the patient to a hospital, where he has since been confined.

Death of Ex-Sheriff Forsyth.

Ex-Sheriff and ex-Freeholder Thomas Forsyth, of Elizabeth, died, on Thursday, aged fifty-five. He was for forty years a member of the Fire Department, was Chief Engineer for two terms, and Superintendent of the fire alarm system for several years. He served three terms as Freeholder, and was one of the Trustees of the Exempt Firemen's Association. He earned the reputation of being one of the largest bearted men in the city, and was always ready to relieve the necessities of the poor. He carried on for thirty years a large grocery in Elizabeth. Mr. Forsyth leaves a widow and three children.

Union County Roads.

Friday afternoon the Union County Board of Freeholders took advantage of the new county road law by resolving to raise $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the proper improvement of certain roads. The money is to be raised by an issue of bonds, bearing interest not to exceed 4½ per cent. per annum, and to be known as county road bonds. Four roads were designated and will be maintained as county roads as follows: From Elizabeth to Rahway; from Elizabeth to the village of New Providence, passing through the townships of Union, Springfield and Summit; from Elizabeth to Plainfield, passing through Roselle, Westfield and Cranford; and from Rahway to Westfield through Clark township. These roads will be graded and macadamized.

Paid Well for Their Sport.

Friday evening Wm. Whittemer, Peter Russ, Henry Hegeman, and Lewis King who were under the influence of liquor, indulged in a free fight on Somerset street, and for a time they made things lively. The disturbance resembled a riot on a small scale, but the efficient Borough Marshals assisted by ex-Marshal Becker, by strenuous efforts subdued the frantic mob, who were locked up for the night.

When brought before Mayor Cooley next morning, Whittemer was fined ten dollars with costs, and there was imposed a fine of fifteen dollars on each of the other three, with costs. The costs in each case was $2.55, making a total of $65.20 in all, which the four men will contribute toward improving the borough streets and beautifying the borough lockup.

What the Nolan Murder Trial Will Cost.

County Collector, Hugh Gaston, of Somerset county, in referring to the cost of the Nolan murder case, which is now on trial at Somerville for the third time is quoted as saying:

"It is impossible to get at the exact figures, as jurors, constables and Sheriffs' bills are a mixed up lot. A few weeks since a committee of the Board of Freeholders met at my office and we went over all the court bills paid this year and those of last year after the occurrence of the murder, and we found, adding in also the board of the prisoner, jurors, constables and every cost, that there has been spent to the present time $5,467.74." The present trial will cost the county in the neighborhood of $2,500, thus swelling the total cost to the county to about $8,000.

Read How Messrs Geo. Watson & Co. Intend to Distribute Their Broken Lots of Pantaloons as Gifts Among Their Customers.

The plan of distributing their broken lots of Pants as presents among their customers by Messrs Geo. Watson & Co., after 9 o'clock on Saturday night was a great failure, as the rush was so great that it was impossible to confine these gifts to regular customers of the house, and few could be correctly fitted. A new plan has been adopted for the benefit of their customers, or those who may become customers, which will be made known on application and will be duly advertised.

This week they open their elegant styles of Spring Cassimere and Cheviot suits, in all the grades usually sold for $15 and upward, at the uniform low price of ten dollars a suit for any kind you may select. Perhaps you may pick out a suit that cost them more than ten dollars to make up, or you may choose one on which they have a little profit, but no matter what you select the price will be $10 for the complete suit.

Their immense lines of elegant Dress Suits at $15, $15.50, $16, $17.50, $18, $19, $20, $22 and $25, in all the new forms and handsome custom fabrics, are now hung all ready to put on, complete in all the details of half sizes in solid colors, bird's-eye and dice effects, and with beautiful silk threads skillfully interwoven with the goods.

You should certainly see the handsome garments their tailors are now finishing daily, and remember that it is the correct cut as laid down by the Standard American Fashion Plate, to which their designers are the principal contributors, that makes the rush of business so strong toward the corner of Broad and Market streets.

If you wish to become a customer of the house of Geo. Watson & Co., and share in the presents of all their broken lots of elegant Cassimere Pants, distributed as Gifts weekly only among their customers, or those that become customers, register your name and address without delay. The presents will be delivered free where their new delivery wagon can reach, and outside on payment of express charges.

Full particulars will be furnished on application in person or by mail to Messrs Geo. Watson & Co., the Popular Clothiers of No. 725 Broad street, four doors below Market street.—Newark Press.

HALF THE TRUTH!

Figures don't lie, it is said. No they don't if you let them alone. But they can be so twisted as to be mighty deceptive. Half the truth is the biggest kind of a lie. It reminds us of the sailor who, when selling a Quaker a parrot, and being asked if it could talk, replied: "It would delight thee to hear him talk." No doubt it would have, but the Quaker never had the pleasure. What's all this to do with Clothing? Just this: the marvellous bargains of $50 suits for $20, and $40 suits for $8, and $15 overcoats for $7 so largely advertised are but half the truth. No doubt the advertisers can show you an $8 suit bearing a ticket formerly marked $40, but that's just where the figures are made to lie. Our goods are just what we claim for them; they speak for themselves. They are dollar for dollar's worth every time.

The assortment is large, the styles good.

GEORGE AND MARTHA

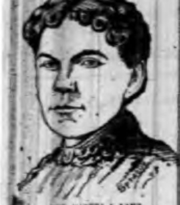
Personal Habits of Gen. Washington and His Wife.

An Interesting Interview With Mrs. Martha J. Lamb, the Historian of New York City, on the Personality of George and Martha Washington.

[COPYRIGHT 1889.]

"George Washington could not tell a lie, but it is safe to say that a good many lies have been told about him.

Mrs. Martha J. Lamb, the historian of New York, is an authority on the life and character of Washington and his contemporaries. Probably no person in the country has rendered more assistance to the Centennial Committee in their preparations for the forthcoming celebration than she. Mrs. Lamb has studied the



MRS. MARTHA J. LAMB.

George and Martha, not the ideal [illegible] man and woman, but the people of flesh and blood; the man who liked his [illegible] in the morning and the woman who [illegible] and darned and kept a close eye on her children.

I was sitting in Mrs. Lamb's office the other day chatting about the coming Centennial celebration, when she touched on the topic.

"There has been so much fiction about George Washington that it would be interesting to know just how much of a flesh and blood man he was," I began. "What sort of a man was he?"

"It is not possible for Washington to be idealized so as to lose sight of the man. His was of a well rounded character, and by no means illiterate although his education was obtained in the usual way of that time. He is known to have had good sense, and he was reared in a home where the absence of moral and religious training would have been esteemed a disgrace. He stepped into public life absolutely free from and unincumbered by [illegible] and deteriorating habits. His breeding was that of a gentleman. He was never sent to any collegiate institution as some of the Virginians were, but he made use of his many opportunities and became well informed on a great variety of important subjects while yet [illegible]. His mother was a woman of wide reading and great breadth and strength of character. His brother Lawrence was a traveler to many parts of the world. In his early life he was [illegible] active and very much in the open air. [illegible]

[illegible]

"Is the estimate of history in dealing with Washington a correct one?"

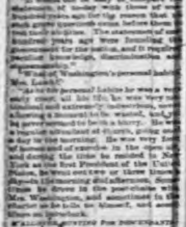
"History, in the main, has dealt very fairly with him. It would hardly be possible to over estimate his greatness. His military abilities are best known by the [illegible]."

"How do the statesmen of to-day compare with the statesmen of the Colonial period?"

"It would not be easy to compare the statesmen of to-day with those of one hundred years ago for the very reason that [illegible] such grave questions come before them [illegible]. The statesmen of one hundred years ago were founding the government for the nation, and it required peculiar knowledge, discrimination and statesmanship."

"What of Washington's personal habits, Mrs. Lamb?"

"As to his personal habits he was a very early riser, all his life he was very methodical and extremely industrious, never allowing a moment to be wasted, and yet he never seemed to be in a hurry. He was a regular attendant at church, going once a day in the morning. He was very fond of horses and of exercise in the open air, and during the time he resided in New York as the first President of the United States, he went out two or three times a day in the morning and afternoon. Sometimes he drove in the post-chaise with Mrs. Washington, and sometimes in the chariot as he tells us himself, and sometimes on horseback.



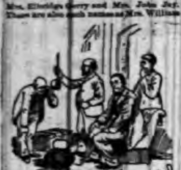
WALL STREET HUNTING FOR DESCENDANTS.

"His voluminous correspondence shows that he was not an illiterate man, he writes equally as well as any of the educated men of that day."

"Can you describe Martha Washington?"

"Mrs. Washington was about the same age as her husband although she seemed older by reason of the dress prescribed by fashion at that date for ladies over fifty. She always obeyed the edicts of fashion. She was regarded with great interest by [illegible] of her heroism in the Revolution when she traveled on horseback to [illegible] to visit her husband at headquarters. She became on this occasion very much endeared to the soldiery of the country. She was well-informed on all topics without any special education. She was observant and critical, very self-possessed. She never expressed her opinions on public questions nor joined political discussions in her presence. She was courteous and dignified, but does not seem to have had any particular vivacity or humor. She was philanthropic in her character, always courteous, and [illegible] well. She was evidently fond of dress in her younger days, and while she lived in New York and Philadelphia as the wife of the President she might be said to have been the leader of society. Among other society leaders in New York at the time she resided there were Mrs. Jay, Mrs. Knox, Mrs. Hamilton, and Mrs. Langdon, also Lady Kirby Duer and others."

For some weeks past there has been a [illegible] in progress for direct descendants of these society leaders. They are to be made useful in inaugurating the grand ball at the Metropolitan Opera House on the evening of the 29th. The ball will begin at 10:30 p. m. with a great Virginia reel to be danced by thirty-two couples. All sorts of influence is being brought to bear upon President Harrison to induce him to lead the reel with Mrs. Morton for a partner. If he consents Mr. Morton and Mrs. Harrison will constitute the next couple. Then will come ex-Presidents Cleveland and Hayes with partners yet to be chosen; Governor Hill and Mrs. [illegible] and Mayor Grant and Mrs. [illegible]. The direct descendants will be chosen from to make up the remaining thirty-two couples. Ward McAllister has been and still is conducting the search, and he has had a hard time of it. Not that our forefathers were childless, or that their children have left nobody to bear their names or preserve their blood, but that not all of the direct descendants are eligible to association with the Four Hundred. It would be so easy to pick out scores of ladies whose standing in society seems to guarantee a long line of blooded ancestry but—when the records are consulted it appears that their aristocracy is of recent creation only, or that they were nobodies until they married their present husbands. Poor Ward! he has actually [illegible] himself in history, his brain fairly teems with marriage certificates and the birth pages of family bibles, and still there are gaps in the double file of people who are to dance in the "Centennial" reel. Among those that he has selected, Miss Schuyler, a descendant of the Mrs. Langdon above mentioned, Mrs. Frederick J. de Peyster, Mrs. Elbridge Gerry and Mrs. John Jay. There are also such names as Mrs. William Astor, which would lead one to infer that McAllister has stretched a good many points, for she and several others do not come actually within the line of direct descent from Revolutionary heroes and statesmen.



DISTINGUISHED CITIZENS SITTING ON RELICS.

While the hunt has been going on for living suggestions of the old days another committee of distinguished citizens has been sitting on relics. It is intended to have a big display of "ancient" goods and chattels, and the committee has had a fine time trying to distinguish the genuine antiques from imitations. The main trouble is that a large part of the articles submitted are in the way of kitchen utensils, the like of which none of the committee ever saw before, unless, possibly, in their boyhood. It is a puzzling thing to decide whether a rusty iron dipper was the actual soup ladle with which Washington helped his generals at White Plains, or the joint contribution of some wretched tar-burner of modern times. They do say, however, that the collection is going to be an excellent one, and may be the beginning of a new museum.

DAVID WECHSLER.

SUPERSTITIONS OF BRITTANY.

Events Foretold By the Action of Animals, Birds, Etc.

When winds are ghostly [illegible], foul weather is expected, and cats are [illegible] to love [illegible]. Three hairs taken from the "cross" on an ass's back will cure the whooping cough, but the ass will die. If bees swarm on a rotten tree, a death in the family will occur within the twelve-month. It is unlucky for a stray swarm of bees to alight on one's premises. When cats wash their ears more than usual, rain is at hand. The crowing of a hen indicates good luck to a bride. Cattle give warning of an earthquake by their uneasiness. A cinder bounding from a fire is either a purse or a coffin. If a milkmaid neglects to wash her hands after milking, her cows will go dry. Crickets bring good luck to a house; it is unlucky to kill them. If a crow croaks an odd number of times, it means foul weather; if an even number, fine. The clicking or tapping of the beetle called the death watch, is an omen of death. It forebodes evil to a child if any one rocks its cradle when empty. Dogs give warning of a death by scratching at the door of a house. If a bat or a mouse, during the night, gnaw one's clothes, it is indicative of some impending evil. Pigs running about with straws in their mouths foretell rain. If you count the number of fish you have caught, you will catch no more that day. It is unlucky if a hare runs across the road in front of you. To eat the food which a mouse has nibbled will give a sore throat. A fried mouse is a specific for smallpox. To meet a sow with a litter of pigs is very lucky. When porcupines are hunted or annoyed they shoot out their quills in anger. Spitting for luck is a most common superstition. A blacksmith, who has a stubborn horse to shoe, spits in his hand to drive off the evil spirit. For a pugilist to spit in his hand will make his blows more telling. A spider worn in a nut shell round the neck is a cure for fever. If a swallow builds on a house it brings good luck. To kill a swallow is unlucky. When swallows fly high it will be fine weather, and vice versa.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

An Interesting Sketch of a Noted Greek—How He Became a Man-Hater.

TIMON was one of the wealthiest of all the Athenian noblemen. His income was almost fabulous, and he was as liberal as he was rich. He was not one of those men who tremble when they lend a lead pencil for fear the lead will not stand all the way through.

Lord Timon lived in a large, elegant house in the fashionable part of the city, and the latch-string always dangled on the outside. Everybody was welcome. Even the tramp was led into the salle à manger, and the dignified parlors were [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] and his pudding.

As may be well imagined the Athenian dudes and sports worked Timon for all he was worth. He panned out better than a candidate with a barrel; for he was always on tap, whereas the candidate is only in session a few weeks before the election.

The Athenian poet did not waste his energies climbing up four flights of [illegible] stairs to dump his ideas, etc., into the ear of a daily newspaper. Not much. He merely dedicated his stuff to Lord Timon, and the result was a check for one thousand dollars and an invitation to come and help eat more than a square meal with all four corners on it.

Artists who, like the Ancient mariner, saw no sale from day to day, offered their daubs to Timon, and next day they could be seen on the streets in recently purchased clothes, inquiring the price of real estate and smoking twenty-cent cigars.

In fact, Lord Timon had only one real friend. His name was Flavius, and he was Timon's private secretary and business manager. He was a blunt, plain-spoken man. One day Flavius remarked to Timon: "If you don't cut down your expenses, some of these days you will be as poor as an amateur violin performer."

"I guess not," replied Lord Timon, lighting his cigar with a fifty-dollar bill.

"No matter how rich a man may be, unless the horn of plenty is corked with economy it will soon become empty," observed Flavius, solemnly.

"You are always boiling over with dismal forebodings, good Flavius. There is no danger of my becoming a pauper," replied Timon.

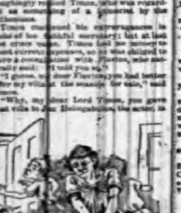
"I hope not, but you should lay up something for a rainy day."

"I'll buy an umbrella, in the meantime, you get your head bored for the simples," laughingly replied Timon, who was regarded as something of a [illegible] by the Athenians.

Timon continued his extravagances in spite of his faithful secretary; but at last the crisis came. Timon had no money to meet current expenses, so he was obliged to have a consultation with Flavius, who naturally said: "I told you so."

"I guess, my dear Flavius, you had better offer my villa at the seaside for sale," said Timon.

"Why, my dear Lord Timon, you gave that villa to Jim Heliogabalus, the actor, in return for a ten-dollar spotted dog which he gave you on your birthday."



TIMON SEIZES JAKE TELEMACHUS.

"That's so; I had forgotten all about it. Then I suppose I'll sell that block of buildings near the Acropolis."

"You gave that to Bill Pericles, the local editor of the Daily Sycophant, because he proposed your name for the Presidency in 1892, and referred to you as a typical Athenian."

"Right you are. What's the matter with my house on the Hill of Mars?"

"You presented that to Miss Topsy Libon, the song and dance artist."

"Yes, yes, I remember now, but tell me, good Flavius, has anybody got my steam yacht?"

"Yes; you presented it to Charlie Alcibiades, in return for a pair of imitation cuff buttons he gave you on Christmas."

"Well, then, I guess I'll have to call on some of the boys who owe me money. Go out, good Flavius, and tell them I'm broke. Besides the immense sums in cash they owe me debts of gratitude."

"Candidly debts of gratitude are computed at ten cents on the dollar, but I don't think you'll average that much. However, I will try. Au 'reservoir.'"

When Flavius returned he wore a dejected air, and there were dusty footprints on his coat.

"Did you see Sam Sardanapalus?" asked Lord Timon.

"Yes, but he refused to pay a cent. He said you were an egotistical wart."

"A joke, no doubt. Perhaps he hasn't any money."

"Yes, he has, for he won heavily on the Presidential election."

"Did Frank Lysimachus pay up? He recently inherited a large estate."

"No, and he didn't pay down either."

"Why, when he was cooped up in jail for debt I paid his debts for him, and gave him a check for five thousand dollars."

"I heard him tell a friend that you were like a corn. That cutting you was the only way to get rid of you."

"And I thought he was my friend."

"The only real bosom friend is the warm chest protector or the adhesive porous plaster," replied the cynical Flavius.

"Didn't Bill Sempronius offer you money?"

"Yes, he offered me a dollar to tell you that he was not in when I called."

"I have found him out myself. I've loaned him thousands of dollars. He also said that his purse and his hand were at my disposal."

"So they are, and there is nothing for you in either of them."

"Well, there is no use crying over spilt milk."

"That's so," replied Flavius, "there is water enough in it already."

Each one of the mercenary lords to whom Timon had applied returned an evasive answer or a direct denial. From now on Timon's private mansion was forsaken by his friends. It became a shunned and hated place. Instead of thronging with feasting and tumultuous guests, it was beset with impatient and clamorous creditors, usurers and extortioners, fierce and intolerable in their demands, iron-hearted men who would take no denial. Timon's name was even omitted in the elite directory.

To the surprise of everybody, Timon, the setting sun, suddenly shone with new and incredible luster.

Once more he sent out his invitations for a dinner. His former friends rallied around him. They thought Timon's pleading poverty was merely to try their friendship. Others supposed that Timon was joking; the guests came and expressed their regret. When they had squared themselves at the table and tucked the napkins under their chins, Timon said to them, pointing to the covered dishes: "Uncover, dogs, and lap." There was nothing in the dishes but warm water.

Before they could recover from their surprise Timon seized Jake Telemachus and shoved his nose into the warm water. He then chased the whole gang off the premises, joining the tournure of Bill Sempronius as he jumped the fence. Instead of taking interest in their welfare he interested himself in their farewells.

This was the last surprise party that Lord Timon gave his friends. He bid farewell to Athens and to the society of mankind. He fled to the woods and took up his abode in a hole in the ground. He lived on roots au naturel, which he dug from the ground with a borrowed spade. One day while reminiscently pursuing a root with his spade, he struck something hard. It was an immense treasure, buried probably by Captain Kidd.

Had Timon been disposed, he had now sufficient wealth to resume his former social status, but he scorned the idea. He said he would rather have the scalp of Jim Heliogabalus stretched on a shingle than all the money in Canada.

Just at this crisis General Alcibiades and his troops came marching past yelling: "On to Athens," and Timon turned over all the treasure to him on condition that he would destroy the city of Athens and plant the site in onion seed.

The Athenians were so hard pressed that they sent a delegation to Timon asking him for advice. He was very cynical, telling them they should mount a mule and then they would be better off. He also showed them a tree on which they could hang themselves very conveniently.

Not long afterwards a soldier found a tomb on the verge of the sea on which was inscribed words indicating that it was the grave of Timon the man-hater. He had probably crawled into the hole and pulled it in after him, after writing the inscription.

An inquest was held but the manner of his death has never been cleared up. The general inference is that, like a defaulter who committed suicide, he died from exposure.

The moral of the story of Timon is: DON'T EXPECT TOO MUCH FROM YOUR FRIENDS.

No Heat Required.

There was a certain judge who, though honest, was believed by the lawyers to be dull and incompetent. Among the practitioners of his court was Colonel M—, an old lawyer noted for his learning and ability, marred by the habit of intemperance. He had acquired a great disgust for the judge, and displayed it with a frankness that was any thing but refreshing to that functionary.

One day the old lawyer was sitting in the court-room half dozing under the influence of his cups, when his attention was attracted by hearing the judge remark:

"Gentlemen of the bar, can we not dispose of that sewing-machine case now?" And before anybody else could reply Colonel M— looked up and said:

"I hope y'r hon'r'l get on swimmingly, now that you've got something you can work with your feet."

Why He Voted for Harrison.

"I like Mrs. Cleveland," says a society woman of Washington, "but I am glad she was not re-elected. I really and truly am."

"Why, what a horrid thing to say; and you and she such good friends, too."

"Well, if Mrs. Cleveland had been re-elected, you see the bustle would have been defeated. I told my husband on election morning, I says to him, says I: 'John, how would I look without a bustle?' He looked me over a minute, and said:

"Helen, you'd look like a match or a thin streak of thought!"

"'John,' says I, 'if you love me, vote for Harrison.' And he did. I've no doubt Mrs. Cleveland's message on the reduction of the surplus shortage was what defeated her. Poor thing!"

The Inner and Outer Life.

No matter how pure and perfect the outward life of a man may be, there is that in him which often disturbs his peace of mind. Temptation assails from within, and it is only after the tempter has laid of the mind that outward allurements prove dangerous. "To the pure all things are pure," and to the person whose mind and heart are free from guile, the visible forms of temptation are harmless. Hence it is of the greatest importance that we should systematically develop our better self and that we should enlist worthier friends to combat temptation from within. The struggle will, in many cases, be a hard one; but after the first victory has been won, the second will seem almost a matter of course.

Not of a Retiring Disposition.

Mr. Wealthy (who has just dropped into the parlor)—Well, young man, how is business with you?

Mr. Kneebow—I'm doing nothing just at present, sir. How is it with you, sir?

Mr. W.—Booming! Never better!

Mr. K.—I should think—er—you would—er—retire, sir.

Mr. W. (who thinks he sees a hit)—Not yet, young man. I'm always the last one to go to bed in this house.

Didn't Suit.

Mother—"Well, did you get the situation as office boy?"

Little Son—"Nope."

"What was the matter?"

"Don't know. The boss is a lawyer, and he asked me if I was a good whistler, and I told him I was the best whistler on our street, and he said I wouldn't do. Guess he must want a reg'lar professional."

EXTREMES MEET.

A Little Episode From Real Life—The Man Who Kept Cool.

THE electric bell leading to the third floor flat occupied by Rev. James Langdon rang out vigorously. Eveline Langdon's heart made an unnecessary amount of commotion as it passed through her mind that, in spite of the storm, Paul Barbour might have come to spend the evening.

Mrs. Langdon looked up from her sewing to remark: "It is probably the man with the laundry. I wonder he has brought it out in this pelting rain, it will take all the starch out of the clothes."

The minister laid down his paper with some eagerness: "I am half expecting the deacon in this evening to talk over the new society, perhaps he has come—but it rains almost too hard."

A hesitating knock was heard at the private entrance, and James, Jr., went to the door half hoping Johnny Clark had come in to play marbles in the kitchen.

Then the whole problem was solved when a voice asked: "Is the minister at home?" and an aged pair were ushered into the parlor.

The old gentleman's hands were shaking with age and anxiety, and he pulled his gloves off and on nervously. The woman stood still and straight as a statue. The silence grew quite terrible when the minister collected his wits and said: "Is there anything I can do for you?"

The old gentleman, who must have been eighty, nearly choked in trying to speak and his lips twitched painfully as he caught his breath between every word.

"Katie-and-me-want-to-get-married."

A little pleasurable excitement ensued as the ladies arranged the chairs, and made a space for the pair to stand, while the minister asked the few necessary questions.

When they were asked to stand and join hands the old gentleman looked nervously at the statue of calmness by his side and said: "Take it cool and easy, Kate, don't get excited." And at every pause in the service he anxiously repeated: "Take it cool and easy, Kate."

He seemed to have reached the height of trembling excitement when they came to sign their names to the certificate. The woman took the pen firmly, quietly, not an unnecessary muscle moving.

"Keep cool, keep cool, don't get nervous," trembled the groom.

There was a look of disappointment on the minister's face when the pair had gone and his purse was no fuller by a farthing, and he gave a small talk to his family on the greed of mankind in general.

It was several weeks later that a carriage stopped in front of the flats where the Langdons lived. An old gentleman ran briskly up the stairs to the private door, and a steady hand pressed a ten-dollar bill into that of the minister.

"I should never have thought of this if it hadn't been for Kate. That woman beats all for thinking of every thing, she's as calm and steady as clock-work. No, thank you, I can't stop now, Kate is waiting in the carriage."

JEAN E. LANCASHIRE.

Mistaken in His Man.

"Are you the business manager of this infernal pill foundry?" he demanded, as he threw himself into position before the desk.

"I am," said the man addressed, glancing toward the fire escape.

"You publish this!" continued the first speaker, producing a pamphlet upon the covers of which were lithographs of the human digestive plant.

"Yes, sir. We issue that work for gratuitous distribution."

"Oh, you do, eh! Well, what business had you to tack my name onto an amateur diagnosis of a general breaking up of the human system! I never had any of your pills on my premises. Do you dare say that I wrote that?"

He opened the circular at a marked page and thrust it into the face of the man sitting at the desk.

"Great Scott!" ejaculated the official. "We have made a mistake, sir. We understood that you were dead, sir. Here James!" calling to his clerk, "see that the name appended to testimonial No. 298, under the head of 'The Evidence of the Public,' is changed in the next edition!"—Time.

The Effects of It.

"The light of my life has gone out, snuffed to darkness like a tallow candle. Ah! me."

"Wherefore sighest thou, Augustus, and why these dyspeptic moanings of spirit?"

"Darling Clarissa, carest thou for the gruesome sorrows of my Bostonian soul which can not pierce the tumult of the brain, nor argentine the clouds aslant their border?"

"Darling, be not, nor dear me, nohow youth. But, beshrew me, an' I do not feel my heart-strings quake with sympathy. What would'st thou?"

"There came a shadow athwart my life, and the light of my hope died in deep-eyed gloom, when thou did'st smile, some moments since, upon that blatherskite from New York, Mr. Barnes."

"Go to, Augustus, I merely did upon him one seraphic glance from mine azure eyes bestow, because they say he has the rocks. But, let that pass. Kiss me, Auggie, and make me quiver with your strong embrace, as they do in the 'Quick and the Dead.'"

COLLECTION OF CURIOS.

The Fascination of Having Something Your Neighbor Can Not Get.

According to a writer in the Philatelic Gazette, one of the reasons, if not the main one, why philately has such a fascination about it, is because the desire to obtain something which your neighbor lacks is so strong as to keep the collector in what may be called a state of delightful expectancy. He is always looking out for something rare, and when he obtains a stamp which none of his companions possesses, or, possibly, has ever seen, what a thrill of joy radiates throughout his whole system as he triumphantly exhibits it! Thanksgiving dinners, the new gun and such trifles sink into insignificance alongside the pleasure experienced in the possession of that stamp, and if, in his transports, he feels a momentary superiority can we blame him, for have we not all, at some period in our life as a collector had a taste of the same pleasure?

Taking this, then, as an acknowledged fact, I feel safe in saying that the collection of oddities or rarities is by far the most fascinating branch of the whole pursuit and for these reasons:

The regular issues of stamps can be obtained from any large dealer by simply paying his price, and if your means are unlimited your album will be graced (or disgraced) by few blank spaces.

Then these stamps are the same as all collectors get, but where is there a dealer who can supply oddities on demand? True, there are a few dealers who cater to the wants of collectors in this line, but they can not furnish any variety which may be ordered. They only have a number of varieties on hand, and when they are gone they must wait for others to turn up, with no certainty that they will "materialize," while, with the regular issues, it is somewhat different, as there are few stamps which can not be produced if the price is forthcoming.

If you look over two or three collections of the regular issues you will find that they comprise pretty much the same specimens, allowing, of course, for the size of the collection, but examine the same number of "odd" collections and you will find them containing hundreds of different specimens.

A collection which has been obtained through exchanging or from your own efforts in discovery affords much more pleasure than one which has been purchased. This opinion I suppose will sound strange as coming from a dealer, but I nevertheless firmly believe in what I state.

A collection which has been purchased possesses interest as having cost many dollars, but valuable specimens which have been picked up at various times possesses a greater interest as having cost nothing in money, but much in time and patience, and it is this time spent in discovering which gives oddities interest in the eyes of the possessor, as time and patience must be his mainstay in order to obtain them, and all who will practice these are sure to meet with abundant reward.

Here, then, is where oddities possess a peculiar charm. They can not be had on demand, so the collector delves for them, and while others are striving to obtain the regular issues, which all collectors have, he is unearthing specimens, of which some are very hard to duplicate, and while exhibiting his collection he can point with pride to certain stamps and say: "I never saw others like these." How many collectors of the regular issues can say the same.

The Law and the Lady.

Patient Man—Suppose a woman makes it so hot for her husband that he can't live with her, and he leaves her, what can she do?

Lawyer—Sue him for support.

Patient Man—Suppose she has run him so heavily into debt that he can't support her, because his creditors grab every dollar as quick as he gets it, besides ruining his business with their suits?

Lawyer—If for any reason whatever he fail to pay her the amount ordered, he will be sent to jail for contempt of court.

Patient Man—Suppose she drives him out of the house with a flat-iron, and he's afraid to go back?

Lawyer—She can arrest him for desertion.

Patient Man—Well, I don't see anything for me to do but to hang myself.

Lawyer—It's against the law to commit suicide, and if you get caught attempting it you'll be fined and imprisoned. Ten dollars, please. Good day.

Acknowledging Faults.

One of the hardest tasks for the average person is the frank acknowledgment of a fault or even an error of judgment; and yet no action carries with it a more complete feeling of genuine satisfaction. Many dear friendships are severed by a rashly-spoken word for which no apology is offered, and many ties of affection are never formed because men and women will not admit that their "first impressions" of persons with whom they come in contact were erroneous. A gentle word spoken in time will brush away these cobwebs of personal pride, and often convert an enemy into a friend; while at the same time it will make the person who makes the advance more contented with himself. In this troublous world it does not pay to nurse egotistical pride, and the sooner we make peace with all our fellow-men the better it will be for our own tranquility of mind and happiness.

Secret Charity.

"Nearly all charitable acts," said he, "have vanity as their motive. For my part I hate ostentation. I remember once when I was traveling in the southern part of the State, where nobody knew me, I came upon a lonely little way station where, in the waiting-room, there was fastened to the wall a contribution-box for the benefit of sufferers through a recent flood. There was not a soul there, nobody saw me or knew my name and I went and dropped a five-dollar gold piece in the box and slipped away unseen, unknown. Now, sir, what I contend is that my secret offering was a more meritorious one, intrinsically considered, than if it had been made on a public subscription list, with a loud flourish of trumpets."

"You are quite right," said one of his hearers, "that was genuine modest charity, and I don't wonder that you brag of it."

A Hibernian Verdict.

Job Lott (meeting his porter on the "Elevated")—Well, Pat, what do you think of the new Cabinet?

Pat (looking up from his paper)—Well, sor, Oi suppose they have a great future ahead. Most av thim didn't have much av a future behoind, sor!—Puck.

Containing a Moral.

"Weren't you knocking at the side door a moment ago?" inquired St. Peter, as he cautiously opened the main entrance.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, you can't come in. We have no use for people who frequent side doors."

A Unique Club House.

Lexington, Ga., thinks that it has one of the most unique club houses in the country. It was built by the members, who reared a log hut, chinking the spaces between the logs with clay. At one end they built an enormous fire-place. The club is composed of wealthy young men, and has a weekly supper. The day before the supper a big fire is built in the fire-place, and the next evening there is a splendid bed of live coals, and on this, birds, fish, 'possum, oysters and other good things are cooked under the personal supervision of Solicitor General Howard, whose success in roasting birds and planking shad has given him an enviable reputation.

A Family with a Pedigree.

Down in Massachusetts, not far from Sagamore, on the line of the Cape Cod ship canal, is the Tupper farm. The remarkable thing about the farm is that it was purchased, or secured, or pre-empted in 1634 by the founder of the Tupper line, Thomas Tupper, who settled on the land when the place was an Indian village known as Shaum, and that his will, still in existence, has kept the farm in the Tupper family, without break, for six generations. There isn't much pomp about the Tupper family, but they've got lots of pedigree.

THE GREAT RESERVATION
AND
Milk River Valley
OF MONTANA

Have just been opened for settlement to the home-seeker. You have a right to a homestead under your government rights. Why not use it before it is too late? Land all free to settlers, and is the only part of the United States where free land suitable for stock and grain raising can be taken, at or near stations on the line of a railroad. You can take your choice from level valley lands or gently rolling bench lands. Soil very rich, and produces all grains and vegetables without irrigation. Climate delightful, being made very mild in Winter by warm Chinooks from the Pacific ocean. Timber, water and coal in abundance. Cheap land seekers' and settlers' tickets. Buy tickets to Glasgow, Chinook (Bawes), Benton, Great Falls, Helena and Butte. Plenty of government land near those points. For further information, the new pamphlet, "The Great Reservation", maps, etc., apply to F. I. Whitney, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, St. P., M. & M. R'y, St. Paul, Minn.

NAMING THE BABY.

(Original.)

One often catches glimpses of life's history from behind a bit of flimsy lace that shields our windows from public gaze, and so I saw part of the story I am going to tell you, and the other part was told me by an old friend of mine.

For many years I had been an invalid and confined to the limits of my couch, and I lay there watching the busy life from which I was shut out and my hold on it came through others touching mine.

Opposite my window was a vacant lot that a party of young people had rented for a tennis court. The smooth turf and the graceful attitudes of the players attracted me, and at last I came to know them and wove little romances about them. One dark-eyed girl with bronze hair I watched, for she and her Saxon lover—a man older than she, with a grave and dignified mien—made a picture as they sat side by side in the gloaming, and watched the others play, whilst they played their own love-set in the court that Cupid reigns over.

In looking out one morning I saw the fence down and the turf upturned and signs of building going on, and I regretted that I could no longer watch my young friends. Workmen took the place of the players, until at last, after many weeks, a Queen Anne cottage stood on the grounds and I wondered who my neighbors would be. I heard at last that Prof. Beton, of N——, was building the house and that he was going to bring his bride there, she being an English girl, whom he had met while she was at a relative's in this city.

The house was finished, dainty curtains hung at the windows and I caught glimpses of the interior. I read the account of the wedding, copied from the English Journal, and waited patiently for my new neighbors.

At the end of a sunshiny day in May a carriage stopped at the house over the way, and fancy my amazement at seeing my lovers of a year before step out. As they went in I saw him bend over her in the hallway and tenderly kiss her. Tears came into my eyes as I thought what might come to me if—well this isn't my story.

The days seemed less dreary to me as I watched the girlish figure across the street. I watched her with her work at the window and when "the evening lamps were lighted" I saw a sweet home picture, for they forgot to draw the curtains. The room with its pictured walls, easy couches and chairs, cases filled to overflowing with books, tables ladened with bric-a-brac and seated in an easy chair the Professor read to his wife as she worked on some airy fabric. These glimpses of domestic bliss made sunshine in the shady nooks of my life, and when Fall came I was loathe to take my flight with the birds for a warmer clime.

I was gone for nearly a year and on my return my first look over the way showed me the house closed. My friend told me the following story:

Mrs. Beton was more than happy in her new home and life seemed one glad day of sunshine for her, and her happiness was complete when a wee stranger came to dwell with them.

Then arose the discussion what shall the stranger be called. Prof. Beton said, "Linda, I have long ago decided that my first son should be called Ludwig Gustavus Adolphus."

"O!" said Mrs. Beton, holding the baby in closer embrace and looking down on its dimpled loveliness, "you surely don't mean to call our boy by such a name? Why it is utterly absurd, my dear."

Then Prof. Beton launched forth—and his wife saw that he was utterly in earnest—and climbing a genealogical tree, he branched forth on what was in a name, and how as the baby grew to years of discretion he would be proud to have it, and not some appellation that had pleased his mother's ear.

Poor Mrs. Beton pleaded, but vainly—she grew angry, and said Baby shouldn't be called such a name. And the Professor left her alone.

It was the first "rift within the lute," and Mrs. Beton did not want to have "the music mute."

Days went on, and each day the topic of naming the Baby was broached, and Cupid took flight and left Mars to be the household god. Prof. B. stayed evenings at the University and poor Mrs. Beton wept at home and whispered to Baby—"No! mamma's darling shan't be called Ludwig Gustavus Adolphus. Papa is cruel to wish it, so he is." Then came the thought into Linda's mind, "Royal is tired of me, and I am alone, in this strange land unloved."

So the days went on, each day bringing more coldness into their feelings until they were completely estranged. Linda thought, "What's in a name? I would yield, only I am not beloved any more, and I won't give in."

So Baby was called "Baby," and lived his little life, not knowing what havoc his naming had caused in two loving hearts. The day the Baby was four months old, Mrs. Beton was holding him in her lap when suddenly he gave a little cry and threw out its tiny arms moaning piteously.

The physician was sent for. Linda went to the Professor's study and kneeling before him said, "If God only spares the Baby I'll yield, for what is in a name? Oh, Royal! Royal! how blind, foolish and wicked I've been. Can you forgive me?" Putting his arms around her, and drawing her to his side he said, "It is my fault, not thine, beloved;" and in one long kiss all past unhappiness was forgotten, and together they watched the tiny life, as it lingered between life and death.

But alas! its short race was run, and as the day died a little angel was welcomed in heaven.

On a wee tombstone in Greenwood is "Our Baby," and the date; and the first outgoing steamer carried Linda and her husband, both with heavy hearts, for what should have given them new joys, only brought them sorrows and now although they are reunited, yet there will always be in their hearts that "deeper pain reflection brings."

SYKES' TWIN BROTHER.

How He Made Life a Burden to Him and Spoiled His Chances for Political Preferment.

Few people were ever more astonished than I was not long since. I happened to be riding through Harlem on a Fourth avenue surface car when I saw something that bewildered me very much.

Standing on a corner was a man grinding away at a hand organ. Of all the horrible discord that I have ever heard this was the worst. It was like dragging a cat backwards by the tail from under an ash barrel. It was more excruciating than the music of a Japanese tom-tom orchestra. It was worse than the eventide song of an American tom-cat.

However, the discord was not what excited my surprise, but the fact that the organ-grinder was none other than my friend Sykes. Now, Sykes is a gentleman of refinement and culture. Moreover, Sykes is a man of means. Not longer ago than last year he inherited thirty thousand dollars from a deceased uncle, who died. Then why should Sykes be twisting hideous discord out of a wretched hand organ. It was an inexplicable mystery; however, as I had a business appointment and was late, I could not stop to investigate. Here was something more mysterious than the Keely motor, for I was perfectly satisfied that the talented organ-grinder was none other than my friend Sykes.

A few days later I met Skyes near City Hall. He didn't have his musical instrument with him.

"Skyes, do you ever have crazy spells?" I asked.

"Of course not."

"Do you ever make silly bets and lose, and then play a hand organ on the corner like a demented idiot?"

"What are you talking about," he asked, angrily.

"Nothing; except that I am willing to bet the drinks that I saw you playing on a hand organ day before yesterday at the corner of One Hundred and Sixteenth street and Madison avenue."

Sykes' eyes rolled furiously. He clenched his fists, gnashed his teeth and said, in a voice hoarse with rage, as he jumped up and down:

"O, I'll murder that scoundrel yet. I'll murder him in cold blood. I'll get a gun and cause him suddenly to die of lead poisoning."

"What scoundrel?"

"Never mind. Some day you will read in the paper in big headlines 'SYKES THE FRATRICIDE.' Some day my patience will give the press a chance to compare me unfavorably with Cain, and I'll also give the public a chance to see how Tom looks inside."

"Fratricide! So you have a brother?"

"Yes, a measly twin brother—condemn him—who is trying to drive me into suicide or an insane asylum. But I might as well tell you all about it. Come along."

Following Sykes I entered a saloon; in the secluded back room, at a table on which was a bottle of wine and two glasses, Sykes cleared up the mystery.

"So it was your brother I saw grinding the hand organ?"

"Yes, it was my twin brother, Tom. We are so much alike that it is almost impossible to say which is which. He takes a mean advantage of this resemblance to make life a burden to me, but he is strutting on the edge of a volcano."

"What is the cause of his enmity?"

"It grew out of that legacy left me by my Uncle James Sykes in Boston. You see I was named after him, and that I think is why he left me thirty thousand dollars. He didn't leave Tom a cent, and consequently Tom has been playing for even ever since."

"Where does Tom live?"

"Tom lives over in New Jersey, and I live in Harlem, and we rarely visit each other. The people in Harlem don't know that I have a twin brother, and he took advantage of it to defeat me when I ran for the Assembly."

"How did he manage it?"

"You see I am very popular and have a great deal of influence in my district. I was solid with the church people, for I attend the Episcopal church and pay big pew rent. I am, or rather was, the popular idol of the Germans, and I contributed so liberally to the Parnell fund that I am, or rather was, the darling of the Irish voters. Every class of voters fairly doted on me. There never was a candidate with such a pull."

"Then why did you drop out of the race?"

"Because this twin brother of mine did me up. He is a cur if ever there was one."

"How?"

"I'll tell you. One Sunday I happened to be out of town. When I got back I noticed that the members of my church gave me the cold shoulder. Some of them glanced at me reproachfully, and finally my pastor came to me with real tears in his eyes and, after urging on me the necessity of joining a temperance society, gave me a book entitled 'The Fallacies of Infidelity.'"

"Why did he do that?"

"I investigated and discovered that on the previous Sunday while I was out of town, just as the congregation was emerging from the sacred edifice, I appeared on the sidewalk in a beastly state of intoxication and hurrahed for Bob Ingersoll."

"Didn't you suspect who the guilty party was?"

"I knew right off that Tom was the guilty party, but when I explained about my twin brother my friends smiled incredulously, and some said I talked like a liar who had been practising a thousand years."

"Did you see your brother Tom about it?"

"I did. I went over to Jersey City, and asked what he meant by it, and he said that was nothing at all to what he was going to do if I did not divide the $30,000 inheritance with him."

"Did you give him the money?"

"No, indeed."

"Well, what next?"

"About a week afterwards I met one of my warmest and most influential German supporters, Fritz Schimmelpfenig. 'How goes it, Fritzy? Let's have a swei glass beer,' says I, cordially. Fritz drew himself up with immense dignity and replied: 'Herr Sykes, aff you would blease oggscuse me. May be you vould not like doze aromas of sauerkraut and limburger,' and he passed on with his head and tail feathers up, so to speak. Other prominent Germans cast indignant glances at me, and said harsh things about me in German.

"I suppose your twin brother had been getting in some more of his work on you?"

"Right you are. I learned that at a political meeting at which I was not present at all, I had denounced the Germans as mere reservoirs of sauerkraut, that I had ridiculed Bismarck, and given utterance to such pronounced know-nothing sentiment that I was jeered out of the meeting. Yes, I knew brother Tommy was helping me out. I published a card and denounced my twin brother, but that only made matters worse. I was even compared with Eli Perkins. It created much amusement that I should have a convenient twin brother at election times. It was regarded as an entirely new campaign dodge."

"Your twin brother seems to have gotten even with you pretty effectually."

"Well, that's what I thought when a big, raw-boned Irishman hopped on me, and left me a dismal wreck. I supposed Tom had been around blaspheming the Irish or praising the English. Even the Israelites, among whom I had influential supporters, refused to speak to me; that is, all except old Absalom Rubenstein, who is very influential. All he said was: 'So, Mister Sykes, you vant all us Hebrews to go back to Jerusalem where we coomed from?' I knew then that Tommy had been tampering with my Hebrew vote. There were some negroes in my district that were going to vote for me, but they said that I had compared them unfavorably with the chimpanzee in Central Park, and that they had changed their minds. I was in bad three weeks after the indignant Irishman got through with me, but the public did not believe it, for Tommy was disgracing me every day in the neighborhood while I was prostrated on my couch of pain. At last he got arrested for being drunk and disorderly."

"So vengeance overtook the villain at last?"

"Not a bit of it. He was brought up before a police justice who was a friend of mine, and he, supposing that it was myself, turned Tommy loose without even a reprimand. I withdrew from the canvass, but even that has not appeased my twin brother."

"I think I'd appease him with an axe-helve."

"O, I'll do worse than that. He has destroyed my domestic happiness."

"You don't say so!"

"Yes, somebody told my wife that I had been seen riding in Central Park with two variety actresses. My social standing went long ago. I am regarded as a social outcast, and now he even goes around to my neighborhood with a hand organ. He wants my neighbors to lynch me, I suppose."

"What are you going to do?"

"I don't know myself. I'm not going to give him any of that $30,000. I can move away to some other town and get a new social status with all that money; that is, if I can keep control of myself, but some day you may see the name of Sykes and Cain in the headlines of the daily papers, and then you will know that the worm has turned at last. Let's go."

As Sykes made no effort to settle with the bar-keeper I remarked:

"This is your treat, aint it, Sykes? You invited me in here."

"Not much do I pay for this little spree. I've won the bet. You said you would bet that it was me playing on the organ, and I've won. That's why I've been telling you all about it. So you want to rob me, do you? Why, you are as bad as that twin brother of mine. Good morning!" and Sykes hopped out into the street and onto a passing car. I paid for the bottle of wine and waved my hand at Sykes, and called out loud, so he could hear me: "Three cheers for your twin brother!"

ALEX. E. SWEET.

HE DENIED THE STORY.

A Political Anecdote That Carries Its Own Moral.

Mr. Blaine used to express his opinion of the reliability of the newspapers of the day by telling the following story:

There was once an Irish editor who was bothered with so many calls for copy that he reached the end of all truthful news and called upon his imagination. The foreman came into the sanctum demanding more copy, saying: "We must have enough to fill another half column."

"Kill a baby in Cork and describe the murder," said the badgered editor.

An hour later the foreman came in, saying: "We need enough copy to fill about two inches at the end of the column."

"Did you kill the baby and picture all the horrors of the scene?"

"Yes, sir, and it don't fill the column."

"Then deny the report," was the response of the at last triumphant editor.

This may be a fable, but something similar occurred in real life at Washington a few years ago. A Virginia Congressman was interviewed by Perry Heath, and the interview was revised and corrected by the Congressman before Mr. Heath sent it out to his paper. In the article the Congressman expressed himself as against further immigration of foreigners to this country, without certain restrictions. He was especially outspoken and bitter towards Germans and Jews.

Two weeks later he came in great trepidation to Mr. Heath and said: "That interview which you published in your Indianapolis paper has been copied in Virginia, and is making me trouble. Some of my best supporters are Germans and Jews, and they will knife me in convention and at the polls. It is very unfortunate."

"Well, the interview was genuine and authorized, wasn't it?" inquired Mr. Heath.

"Certainly it was, and there's the trouble. I can't deny it, and can't get out of it."

"Why don't you follow the regular custom?" said Mr. Heath.

"I don't know what is the custom, nor what to do in the matter," replied the worried Congressman.

"The regular and proper thing to do," said the correspondent, "is to deny the report. Swear that you never said any thing of the kind to the correspondent of an Indianapolis paper, nor to a correspondent of any other paper. Tell your friends that if you ever meet that rascally correspondent you will horsewhip him, and maybe kill him. Go right out boldly and deny the report. Write a card to all the papers in your district, and assert over your own signature that it is all an infernal lie."

"But you would run me down if I did that, wouldn't you?"

"I would if you had done it without consulting me first. But, inasmuch as you have been exceptionally manly—much more manly than the average politician, and have acknowledged to me that the interview was correct, I will be satisfied to let you get out of the scrape in your own way. Hence, you may deny the report and abuse me as much as you please. It won't hurt me, and it may help you."

He did so, was renominated and re-elected for several terms.

A LITERARY MAN.

After many years of self-sacrificing labor J. W. Newton had succeeded in establishing a great literary publication, the Weekly Iliad. Indeed the Iliad was not only well established, but was regarded as an institution of extreme wealth. Mr. Newton, following a bent which seems to be natural with so many self-made men, was proud of himself. He was a man of almost painful dignity, and his wife, finding herself the center of a group of "female poets," was flattered into a state of extreme self-satisfaction. There was only one other member of the household, a handsome daughter named Mildred. This girl, strange as it may seem, was inclined to be practical. She regarded her many accomplishments not as divinely bestowed gifts, but as the results of decidedly human exertion. Old Newton's most thrilling hope was that Mildred should marry a literary man—a man capable of taking hold of the Iliad and, by a transfusion of the blood of letters, give it a new strength.

One evening when Newton came home his face wore an expression of deep anxiety. He sat down with a sigh.

"Wesley," said his wife, "you do not look well."

"I am not well," he answered.

"Is your ailment physical or does it come from a disturbance of your highly-organized mental system?"

He looked at her with a half sarcastic glance. There were times when her pretentious expressions rasped him.

"Mental!" he said; "mental! All my troubles are mental. Hang it, if I had no mind I should have no trouble."

"Will you not confide in me? Perhaps I can assist you."

"I doubt it. The fact is, I want an Easter story for the Iliad."

"Well, surely that should not trouble you," she rejoined. "Among your many contributors there is certainly one who can write an Easter story. The subject is by no means an experimental one."

"That's the trouble," he replied. "If it were new nearly any one could write it, for its very newness would make it interesting, but, being old, the hand of a master is required to relieve it of backneyed plodding. Thus far fourteen stories have been submitted, but each one is as flat as the paper upon which it is written."

Mildred entered the room. The father frowned. "Mildred," said he, "did I not tell you—"

"Yes, father."

"When did I tell you?" he exclaimed.

"I hardly know, sir."

"Why, then, did you say yes?"

"To show you that I was paying attention."

The editor grunted. "You may pay attention to my voice," said he, "but you do not heed my words. Didn't I tell you not to associate with Tom Carpenter?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, but why did you disobey me?"

"Why, I am sure that Mr. Carpenter is eminently respectable."

"But that is not the point."

"What is the point?"

"The point is that he does not belong to your set."

"What is my set?"

"Have you lost all the sense you ever had?" he demanded. "You belong to a literary circle, that's your set."

"Yes, but I make no literary pretentions."

"But your mother and I do. Carpenter is simply a book-keeper."

"He is bright," she replied.

"So is a milk pan, but it is shallow," he exclaimed. "I have told you time and again that the man who marries you must be able to take charge of the Iliad. What could Carpenter do in an editor's chair?"

"We could sit there, I suppose."

"Yes, and yawn. You needn't try to defend that fellow, for I know that your praises of him are but the errors of your haphazard judgment."

"But I love him."

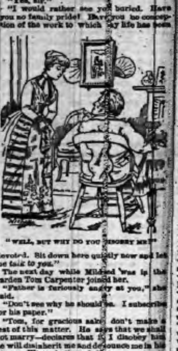
The mother screamed and the father sprang to his feet. "You love him!" the editor exclaimed.

"Yes sir."

"Ah, and you hope to marry him, I suppose."

"Yes, sir."

"I would rather see you buried. Have you no family pride! Have you no conception of the work to which my life has been devoted. Sit down here quietly now and let me talk to you."



"WELL, BUT WHY DO YOU DISOBEY ME?"

The next day while Mildred was in the garden Tom Carpenter joined her.

"Father is furiously angry at you," she said.

"Don't see why he should be. I subscribe for his paper."

"Tom, for gracious sake, don't make a jest of this matter. He says that we shall not marry—declares that if I disobey him he will disinherit me and denounce me in his paper. What shall we do?"

"Have to work with the old gentleman, I suppose," he replied.

"Oh, working with him will do no good, for he is determined that I shall be the wife of a literary man."

"Well," he replied, with a sort of annoying composure, "can't I play literary? I have known ham actors to play a literary role on the stage."

"Yes, but we know that it is but play. If you were to attempt any thing of the sort with father he would turn upon you, not only in an unkind, but in a really cruel manner."

"Oh, I would play too well to be caught. I would talk about the literary market, for instance; the price of poetry; the disadvantage of middlemen in literature; the fresh country product; the likelihood of a literary trust; the disasters that would follow a cornering of the market and—"

"Oh, for goodness sake, hush, Tom; you are but making fun of our serious position. You almost make me think that you do not love me."

He seized her hands. "There, now," he said, in a tone of deep seriousness, "do not give way to such feelings. Your literary men, with natures purposely weakened into an unhealthfully receptive state, are easily depressed, but the alert and vigorous business man, educated to deal and receive blows, hangs not his head when an ill wind comes, but stands with determination."

"I wish father were practical enough to appreciate your strong sense," she said; "but," she added with a sigh, "he is not."

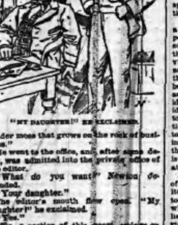
"If he knows so little about business how did he make his paper so prosperous."

"Oh, he has never had any thing to do with the business."

"Doubtless this accounts for the success of his sheet. Well, little girl, I must go. I must go to the office and have a talk with your father."

"Oh, no, not to-day," she cried. "He is so wrought up over his failure to get a suitable Easter story that—well, above all times, this is the worst."

"I'll attend to that. Trust me. The literature of this country is, after all, but the tender moss that grows on the rock of business."



"MY DAUGHTER!" HE EXCLAIMED.

He went to the office, and after some delay, was admitted into the private office of the editor.

"What do you want?" Newton demanded.

"Your daughter."

The editor's mouth flew open. "My daughter!" he exclaimed.

"Yes."

"Sir, a section of this room swings on hinges—the door, do you understand?"

"Oh yes, perfectly; ought to understand, for I used to be a sort of a carpenter. Now, Mr. Newton, let us talk like two sensible men. I love your daughter and she loves me."

"But you shall not marry her, sir."

"Oh yes, but not without your consent. I understand your wishes. I know that you want her to marry a literary man, and to show to what a degree I respect your wishes, I will say that I have decided to become literary."

The editor snorted. "You—you a literary man! What do you propose to write? A review of the multiplication table!"

"I propose to write an Easter story."

Mr. Newton laughed. "Write it," he said, "write one that shall answer my purpose and you shall have her."

"I thank you for a proposition so generous," Carpenter replied. "I shall call again soon."

Two days later he returned. "Here is the story," he said, handing the editor a manuscript. Newton took the sheets of paper and began carelessly to read the writing.

Carpenter sat down, and with his hands thrust deep into his pockets, awaited the decision. It was evident that the reader was impressed, the rapidly turning leaves showed that he was becoming more and more interested. The last page. A fluttering moment. The editor sprang to his feet and, seizing Carpenter's hand, exclaimed:

"You have won her;" then, after quieting down, he added: "Mr. Carpenter, you have not only written a beautiful, but a strangely original story. I ought to reprimand you for so long concealing your talent. I can see now why my daughter loves you. Come with me."

They went to the editor's home. Mildred was in the drawing-room. When the two men entered, the girl sprang up in a flutter of excitement.

"My daughter, he has won you," said the editor. "He is a genius."

Carpenter caught her in his arms, the mother rushed into the room.

The editor caught her in his arms. "They are to be married," he said. "The fellow is a genius. He has written the story I wanted."

Mrs. Newton's face was bright with a smile of joy. "Oh," she said, "I was afraid to say any thing, but I have long known that Tom was literary."

The wedding took place three weeks later. It was a great event in literary circles. The old man was proud of his son-in-law. "A new life shall open unto him," the editor said. "We shall work side by side, and, when I have grown too old for the harness, he shall wear the collar and hames."

Tom and his wife, after supper, sat in an alcove, almost sheltered from view by an oleander.

"How delightfully it has all turned out," said the young wife.

"Yes," Tom replied. "Just as I thought it should."

"But dear, why did you not tell me of your wonderful talent; why did you keep your light hid under a bushel of modesty?"

"It is not my nature to be boastful," he replied, with a peculiar smile. "There's one thing that bothers me a little, Mildred."

"What is it?"

"Why, I was thinking just how that the old gentleman would feel rather depressed if he knew that I hired a night police reporter to write that story. However, as one of your literary men has said: 'Every thing is fair in love and war.' With me it was both love and war; love for you and war against the old gentleman."

OPIE P. READ.

No Stumbling-Block.

The miraculous power of the resurrection is no stumbling-block to those who believe in the omnipotent God and perceive the perpetually recurring miracles of human life and birth. The doctrinal power of the resurrection rests, of course, upon the fact. That being established, it stands in vital relation to all other Scripture doctrines. Christ's rising suggests that all men shall be raised: "for if the dead rise not, then is not Christ risen." The power that can raise one can raise all. There is less reason why Christ should be raised if men are to perish. His resurrection is the all-sufficient pledge and proof of our own. Because He lives, we shall live also. The resurrection strengthens the doctrine of immortality. It would seem to be an aimless waste of power to raise the dead if they are to be annihilated.

HOSTESS AND GUEST.

Their Respective Duties Ably Defined by a Lady Writer.

The first duty of the hostess is to make her guests acquainted with each other, writes Jane Allen in the Christian Union. In some circles it is considered etiquette not to introduce, but, as a young lady justly observed: "It may be etiquette, but it is not a polite etiquette." The very origin of this word "etiquette" suggests its limitations. It means nothing more than "a ticket," and was at first the wooden tag on a bundle indicating its contents. To-day it represents the mark placed by society on its approved usages, and may be freely translated by "good form." It is, of course, only a mirror which reflects every change of fashion, while politeness is a substantial and permanent expression of good will and kind feeling.

If we accept it as the dictate of courtesy that one's guests should be introduced, it follows that they should be introduced in such a way as to make it easy to fall into conversation. It is not necessary that the hostess should present Mr. Smith as "the Australian explorer," or Miss Brown as "the author of that charming poem in the Age." Such an introduction almost necessitates a personal turn to the conversation, and makes it decidedly awkward for the other person, who may never have heard of the Australian expedition or the poem. In nothing is the skill of the hostess so clearly shown as in this word with which she shows the host of new acquaintance off the social strand. A hint of some topic in which the people introduced are mutually interested, an allusion to an acquaintance which they hold in common, a mention of some place, book or picture familiar to both, launches them successfully; and the hostess may turn to her other guests with her mind at ease. If she is wise, she will have asked several persons, preferably young girls, to act as assistant hostesses, to share the duties of introducing and entertaining. She will also have invited several more men than women, in order to have a circulating medium; as a man may without awkwardness be left standing alone, a woman never.

Nothing in the line of party-giving is so easy as a small evening party. It is often pleasantest when most informal. Invite only such guests as come to see you, and do not, as Emerson says, interpose a screen of things between you and them. Have done with apologies! Deficiencies speak for themselves, and their mouths are not to be shut by explanations. Welcome your guest heartily, set before him your best of material and spiritual refreshment, and then cease to be over-anxious as to his enjoyment.

Let the rooms be softly, but not dimly, lighted. Lamps, except for odor of kerosene are preferable to gas, on account of the milder light. Strew the tables with books and photographs, draw chairs and sofas into easy groups, that four or five guests may talk together without effort. If refreshments are to be passed, have every thing ready in a side room, and strive to time the serving so that it may fill a pause, instead of breaking in upon a full tide of conversation or music. Instruct the servant that all the people in the same group are to be served at the same time. If not too warm, light a fire, as a gathering point. Add to these surroundings the inspiring presence of a genial host and hostess, and what guest could fail to respond by a cheerful readiness to enter into the spirit of festivity?

Alas! there are people who settle back a leaden weight upon their entertainers; people whose eyes are fixed on a hole in the sofa cover while they listen languidly to their host; people who appear to regard vivacity as a mark of inferior breeding—social oysters, who hope, by never opening their shells, to deceive the world into the belief that they hold a pearl. All these are as common as they are depressing. The ideal guest is much more rare than the ideal hostess. The role involves the power to play second fiddle gracefully, to take time from the first violin, and aim simply to aid the general effect. With no personal interest in making a party a success, to throw one's vital energies into the breech is a stretch of altruism as rare as admirable.

Much of the explanation of the lethargy of guests lies in that phrase: "The expenditure of vital energy." We, as a race, are too tired for social enjoyment. An editor who was invited to a literary gathering, to listen to a paper, responded, with more vigor than civility: "Good gracious! would you ask a man who had been felling trees all day for a living to come to a wood-chopping party in the evening for fun?"

The task of making society sociable may well stagger a hostess if it involves first regulating the business day of the guest. But that a leisure class does not solve the problem is sufficiently attested by Byron's description of

"Society, one vast and polished horde, Formed of two mighty tribes, the bores and bored."

This is the verdict of one who had tried all the luxury and elaboration that could be devised by a class which made society a chief pursuit. Suppose, then, we begin at the other end, and try what help may lie in simplification, and the adaptation of society to the requirements of business men and business women! in adopting a social code wherein the only thing demanded of the host shall be a spirit of hospitality, and the only requisition of the guests readiness to be entertained and a desire to contribute something to the hilarity of the occasion.

The Doctor's Mistake.

"Doctor, just an instant, please," exclaimed a caller at the office of a man of physic as he caught sight of the physician disappearing in his private office. "I'll see you shortly, sir," was the curt reply. "But a second is all I want," persisted the caller. "I'll see you directly, sir," with sternness. The visitor took a seat in the general reception room, read the afternoon paper through, looked at the pictures, played with the dog and took a nap. After thirty minutes or more had passed the medicine man came out of his den, and with an air of condescension said to the visitor: "Well, now, my man, I am at your service. Your turn has come. What can I do for you?" "Oh, nothing in particular," was the reply. "I just dropped in to tell you that your neighbor's three cows have escaped from the barn and are having a picnic in your garden and back-yard flower-beds."

He Had a Big Face.

"Major, what a big face you've got," and little George sat upon his knee with wide open eyes, in serious earnest.

"Why, my son, how rude of you. Go to bed this instant," said his mother.

"Well, there ain't no top to his head, nohow," responded the irrepressible pet of the household, as he ran his hand over the Major's face, and clear back over his bald head.

The Loss of Power.

Naval engineers estimate that of every 100 tons of coal burned at sea, 95 are wasted, and only five expended in the work of pushing the vessel forward. Of the 95 wasted tons 40 tons are lost at the boiler in consequence of unused heat passing from the smoke-stack, from incomplete combustion, radiation, conduction and minor causes; that 45 tons are lost in heat, at the cylinder, which has to be conducted from the live steam and the unused, and from latent heat escaping with the exhaust steam. Furthermore, the analysis shows that the loss from friction of engines working under full power at sea amounts to three and a half tons, and that the average losses from power required to work air and feed pumps, and to overcome unyielded resistance due to slip and friction of screw-blades in still water, amounts to three and a half tons.

PATRIOTISM.

We have just passed the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of National Government in this country through the inauguration of George Washington as its first President.

Such centennial observance had, truthfully viewed, a two-fold import. It not only commemorated the successful experiment of popular sovereignty, but it also bore testimony to the dignity and superior excellence of official integrity, the mainspring of which is patriotism.

Patriotism aims to advance the honor of country and to promote the best interests of all sections and all classes of people, utterly regardless of selfish considerations. It ever looks with an impartial eye and acts with honest intent.

Partisanship, as now generally constituted, seeks to consolidate political power for the sake of obtaining official spoils, and for the attainment of that end, frequently panders to the worst elements of society, uses the most discreditable means and at times treats with contempt the soundest of principles.

Such is the difference between genuine patriotism and modern partisanship, and it is as wide as the Atlantic ocean.

Patriotism is not the exclusive possession of any political party, but it ought to be the swaying influence of all parties. That it does not exert such supremacy is a disgraceful fact and dangerous omen of the present time.

To expect the conversion of all politicians into patriots would be essaying the impossible, but to urge the voting masses who are themselves honest, to apply the sovereign remedy they hold in their hands against the growing progress of political infamy, is both reasonable and wise.

Washington was a patriot!

No partisan servilitude ever fettered his actions or warped his just judgment.

Washington was a patriot!

No corrupt or mercenary combination ever dared the effort of turning him from the straight pathway of duty and right.

Washington was a patriot!

All the money and ambition on earth could not impair his allegiance to honor and honesty.

Washington was a patriot!

Would to Heaven that his illustrious example was now the universal rule of official conduct among both Democrats and Republicans.

[illegible] Death as by a Miracle.

As Joseph Gordon was driving across the railroad track at Roselle, Tuesday, his carriage was struck by a train, thrown against a water tank and demolished, and the horse was killed. Mr. Gordon escaped injury.

Flag Raising.

A handsome flag was unfurled to the breeze from the top of a sixty-five foot pole erected in the yard adjoining the new parochial school building, at the corner of [illegible] and Liberty streets, Tuesday morning. The scholars of the school assembled in a body and sang appropriate music, as twelve of their number hoisted and unfurled the flag. Rev. Father Smyth spoke a few words to the children.

Dunellen's New Postmaster.

Mr. J. H. Harrold on Saturday received his appointment as postmaster at Dunellen, to succeed Mr. Chas. Boice, the present incumbent. Postmaster Harrold is a son-in-law of Mr. Robert Radford of this city, and was at one time in business here. Thus Plainfield is again honored by the appointment of one of its former residents to the postmastership at Dunellen.

Divorces Under the New Law.

Already, those desiring to have the bonds of matrimony annulled, are taking advantage of the new law which makes two years' desertion a ground for divorce when the parties are actual residents of the State. Under the old law the time was three years. The bill, which passed the Legislature, this year, has only recently been approved, and the two first petitions for divorce under it were filed in the Court of Chancery on Monday.

C. T. A. Union.

The annual convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Societies of New Jersey will be held at St. John's Hall Trenton, on Tuesday, May 14. The local societies have been engaged in making preparations for their guests, both clerical and lay.

The delegates will visit the State Prison and State Capitol in a body during the day and in the evening there will be a grand public rally which will be addressed by a number of clergymen. Delegates will attend from this city.

[illegible] a Y. M. C. A. [illegible]

The new Postmaster-General of the United States was formerly General Secretary of the Philadelphia Y. M. C. A. Several years ago a secretary wrote asking his opinion of the Association buildings. He answered the following:

"Replying to your favor of the 13th of March, as to the value of the Association buildings, I am free to say that a city like Philadelphia, with its hundred thousand young men, could get on better without its street railroads than without the [illegible] building of the Young Men's Christian Association. No better [illegible] made in this city by its [illegible] churches and business men than the [illegible], library, reading room and baths that they have for its young men. I consider it of great importance that every city should have a building as headquarters for its young men."

JOHN WANAMAKER.

Mr. Wanamaker gave $100,000 towards the building to which he refers.—Ex.

The Licensing Power.

The Press has frequently been asked the question whether or not the passage of the Werts bill by the Legislature annuls and declares void the elections in the several counties of the State, where "no license" was voted under the Local Option law of 1888. We would say that it does, to be plain and simple.

Chief Justice Beasley in opening the Warren County Courts on Tuesday, said:

"It is [illegible] that no license to [illegible] should be granted by the Court [illegible] by force of the statute of [illegible] people have declared by their votes against the sale of liquor in this county, [illegible] been repealed [illegible] regarding the subject [illegible] By the repeal of [illegible] the prohibition against granting licenses has been done away with [illegible] the power and duty of the Court to [illegible] old law been restored [illegible] the people shall [illegible] will regulate the [illegible] the subject so far as the [illegible] licenses is concerned [illegible] with by the Court as of old. As to [illegible] of the law that prohibits the [illegible] liquor on Sunday, all that I [illegible] the subject is that [illegible] to be in a state of [illegible] that it is desirable that they be [illegible] before the courts as soon as [illegible] for elucidation and exposition."

Card of Thanks.

The members of the Woman's Temperance Aid Society desire to thank all those who took part in the recent entertainment, also those who loaned articles of [illegible] or contributed in any way or manner towards the success of the Easter Fair.

By order of the Society.

Shooting at Keller's Grove.

In a shooting match at Keller's Grove, North Plainfield, Tuesday, between Mr. Fred. Bechtel and another member of the Plainfield [illegible] and Turn Verein, Mr. Bechtel won a prize, having scored the most points in the long range shooting contest. Considerable money changed hands on the result.

Mr. Chas. Dossett and Mr. Christian Kunkle also shot a match at 100 yards, the latter named winning.

He'd Better Keep [illegible] Side of the Brook.

Frank Dodge, ex-Secretary of the Reform Club, who was so unfortunate as to cross the brook when he was intoxicated, recently, and was consequently arrested and sent to Somerville, is said to have been released upon the payment of his fine by a female friend.

He was reported as around Plainfield Tuesday, celebrating, but he steered clear of North Plainfield.

Dr. [illegible], Mr. Vincent and Dr. Hale.

The one-hundredth meeting of the Hurlbut Circle, C. L. S. C., will be held in Vincent chapel, Thursday evening of next week, at eight o'clock.

The programme will include an address of Welcome, by Dr. J. L. Hurlbut; a Talk on Modern Athens, by Mr. George E. Vincent, and an address by Dr. Edward Everett Hale. An informal reception from 10 to 11 o'clock will close the evening.

A New Kind of Chicken Thieving.

While Mr. Randolph Gibbs, a farmer living at Piscataway, was at dinner, Tuesday, he heard a great commotion in his henery, and going into the dooryard he discovered two large red foxes running off in the direction of a hay barrack, each carrying a chicken in its mouth. Mr. Gibbs and his sons secured shot guns and gave chase. Arriving at the hay barrack, the party shot one of the two foxes and captured two fine cubs. One fox escaped, but the one was also shot about dusk that evening.

Mr. Gibbs has been missing chickens of late, but until now he has been at a loss to account for their mysterious disappearance. The hay barrack is located in a field, some distance from Mr. Gibbs' residence, and it is thought that there are several other cubs in the barrack.

THE PLAINFIELD Y. M. C. A. BUILDING.

The Building Committee of the Y. M. C. A. have issued the following notice to subscribers:

"We desire to inform you that we have purchased, as the site of our building, the lots Nos. 53 and 55 East Front street, for the sum of $7,000. $27,000 have been subscribed. In estimating our needs originally we apportioned our proposed fund as follows: Lot, $10,000; Building, $35,000; Furniture, $5,000; making a total of $50,000. The $3,000 saved on the estimated cost of the lot will give us so much more with which to make the rooms attractive. We still have $23,000 to raise. We shall endeavor to raise the $7,000 needed for the lot before the last payment, so that when the title is transferred we ought to have $34,000.

"The experience of many places where buildings have been recently erected, shows that when such a proportion of the amount needed is subscribed, it is well to start the building, as the remainder can be more easily secured while the building is going up. We recognize that a few subscriptions were made conditional on the whole amount being raised, and we have no right, therefore, to call for such at this time. But we feel confident of securing the amount required, and of soon being able to begin the erection of the building. We believe, however, that much depends on immediate action. In anticipation, therefore, of the work of erection, and in order to prepare for it, we deem it wise to give notice, in accordance with the subscription agreement, that thirty days from date, the first of four equal payments on your subscription will be payable.

"We shall be glad, of course, to receive any subscription in one payment. Remittances may be sent to E. St. John, Treasurer, or the amount may be handed to any member of the following Committee: Wm. D. Murray, C. T. Kinnan, E. St. John, E. Otis Newman, Henry A. McGee, D. H. Wentworth, C. W. McCutchen.

Centennial Services in the Holy Cross and Grace Churches.

At the Episcopal churches of this city and North Plainfield, services were held in commemoration of the Centennial anniversary of the inauguration of President Washington, as appointed for use in the diocese by the Bishop.

The Bishop's address to the clergy and people of his diocese, was as follows:

"The last of the series of Centennial Commemorations, which began in 1876, will occur on Tuesday, the 30th day of April of the present year. On the morning of that day in 1789, in the city of New York, George Washington took the oath of office as the first President of the [illegible] of America.

"At the close of the inaugural ceremonies the President, and both Houses of Congress, with others, went on foot from Wall street to St. Paul's chapel, Broadway, where the prayers of the Church were said by Bishop Provoost, the first Bishop of New York, and one of the Chaplains of the Congress.

"Washington was a devout communicant of our Church, and an office-holder, till the time of his death, in his Virginia parish. It seems most fitting that an event so much [illegible] should be recalled and emphasized at the end of the first century of [illegible] government. On the morning of that memorable day in 1789, the church bells throughout the country were rung, to call the people to prayer, that they might invoke a special blessing on those in authority. That blessing has been granted abundantly. I ask the clergy and people of this Diocese, wherever it is possible to do so, to assemble in their several places of Worship on the morning of April 30th, and join in the same prayers and praises in which the Fathers of the Country besought the gracious help of the Heavenly Father.

"The following order of service is put forth for use on that day. Let us gratefully unite to mark the beginning of a new century, by praying that God may continue to bless our land in the future as He has in the past.

"JOHN SCARBOROUGH,
Bishop of New Jersey."

Trenton, April 2, 1889.

[illegible] a Window Sill for [illegible]

A few nights ago as a young lady and her mother of White House Station beyond Somerville, were about retiring, an object on the outside sill of the window attracted their attention. On raising the window it was found to be a carrier pigeon and on its wings "John Ballard, of Brooklyn, 63d street and 3d avenue." A band tied to the pigeon's leg was numbered 2704. The bird was returned to its owner.

"They've [illegible] 'Em."

The people of New Brunswick are thoroughly aroused concerning the Sunday liquor traffic said to be carried on in that city contrary to law, and strenuous efforts will be made on the part of the officials to put a stop to this illegal selling. It is the determination of the police to do their duty by keeping a strict watch over all places where liquor is sold, and it is reported that experienced detectives have been employed by the temperance people of the town for the same purpose.

More New Laws.

There are up to date 203 chapters of laws, of which 90 originated in the Senate and 113 in the House. The Governor had 124 bills in hand. The Governor has approved Senate bill No. 221, providing that when borough elections have not been held on the first Tuesday of April, as provided under act of March 7, 1882, they may be held on the first Monday in May of this present year.

Senate No. 204, provides that the County Collector shall, when the financial statement of the county is published in newspapers, publish the same in all newspapers designated to publish the laws together with such newspapers as are designated by the Freeholders within 30 days after the annual meeting, provided it is published in at least one newspaper in each legislative district.

Plainfield Deserves Something.

Mayor Mali, President Dumont of the Council, Councilmen Marsh, Erickson and others, have signed a remonstrance that was presented to the Union County Board of Freeholders at today's meeting.

The communication calls attention to the fact that although Plainfield will be called upon to pay one-fifth of the cost of the new county roads, yet none of those roads proposed is of any additional benefit to Plainfield. The Freeholders voted against macadamizing the road from the Morris turnpike in Springfield to the line dividing Fanwood and Westfield, but voted to macadamize a road from Westfield to Rahway. The latter is uncalled for, and even the Westfielders have little use for it, while the former is a connecting link between the fine roads of this city and its suburban towns and those of Orange and the other beautiful places in that vicinity.

The people of Plainfield trust that the decision of the Board in respect to those two roads, will be reversed.

Bishop O'Farrell's Pastoral Address, and Cardinal Gibbons' Letter.

The bell of St. Joseph's church, North Plainfield, was rung for half an hour, Tuesday morning, in commemoration of the centennial anniversary of the inauguration of the first President of the United States.

A mass of thanks was celebrated, followed by prayer for the authorities by the Rev. Father Freeman. The following address issued to the clergy of the diocese, and the letter of Cardinal Gibbons included, was read:

TRENTON, N. J., April 15, 1889.

REV. DEAR SIR—The following letter was published by His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons, and addressed to the clergy and faithful of the Arch Diocese. The sentiments expressed in it receive my most cordial approval. I hereby desire, Rev. Dear Sir, that you read this letter in your church next Sunday, and announce that you will offer a Mass of Thanksgiving on April 30, at 9 o'clock:

REV. DEAR SIR—On Tuesday, April 30th next, as you are doubtless aware, the citizens of the Republic will unite in celebrating the centenary of the inauguration of George Washington the Father of his Country and first President of the United States.

To Washington will remain the imperishable glory of leading this people out of the house of bondage and oppression into the clear light of freedom and national prosperity. The history of the United States is the history of the gradual rise from the foundations of liberty and law and order, [illegible] of that stately fabric of our national institutions, which has become the admiration of the world. Therefore [illegible] our love for him and endeavor to repay a small fraction of the [illegible] debt we owe to his memory by giving [illegible] fair and thriving cities from [illegible] majestic ships, and to our towns by [illegible] and deeper import, is cherished in the hearts of [illegible]

[illegible] that this nation, so [illegible] rising so magnificently upon the [illegible] which he laid [illegible] should honor with especial [illegible] the hundredth anniversary of the taking by the great captain of war of the chair of office in peace as the [illegible] of the land he had fought for with such effective valor. To all it [illegible] a matter of profound satisfaction that the citizens of the United States, without regard to race or creed or previous allegiance to flag or power, are about to recognize the life and achievements of the greatest man this Western world has nurtured, as a gift of Almighty God to his own age and as an exemplar to all the ages to be.

In order, therefore, to give expression to our heartfelt thanks for the civil and religious blessings thus far vouchsafed to us by the giver of every perfect gift, and to pray that the spirit of patriotism which burned in the heart of Washington may continue to animate those to whom the destinies of our beloved country may be entrusted, you are invited, Rev. Dear Sir, to [illegible] at a seasonable time before hand a special service for the morning of April 30, at [illegible] o'clock, or at any hour most suitable to the congregation.

I hereby request you, Rev. Dear Sir, to arrange that a Mass of Thanksgiving be celebrated in your church on Tuesday, April 30, at 9 A. M., in honor of this memorable occasion. The Mass will be that of the Blessed Trinity, with Gloria and Credo—the solemn votive mass of thanksgiving. After Mass the clergy will please recite with the faithful the Prayer for the Authorities, that the Almighty in His infinite mercy, may vouchsafe to continue His gracious blessings on our beloved country.

As an additional expression of joy and thanksgiving the church bells will be rung from 10 to 10 30 o'clock the same morning.

† MICHAEL JOSEPH,
Bishop of Trenton.

By order of the Rt. Rev. Bishop,
J. JOSEPH SMITH,
Chancellor.

—From every section comes the report of good prospects for a large peach crop. We wonder what the excuse will be for high prices when the season for this luscious fruit arrives.

A Remembrance.

(Written during her illness, for THE PRESS.)

Sweet April-lady these clouds upon thy brow;
Wherefore this penitent weeping?
And of all times, to choose this very one,
When all good patriots with joy are keeping
The grand centennial year.

We are [illegible] the hills in tender growth,
Scattering fair blossoms of the [illegible],
Calling the birds their tiny throats to clear,
All we [illegible] to praise
Our grand centennial year.

Did you forget the 100 years will close
On just the lip—all your so fairy to a [illegible]?
Dear April give us smiles in place of tears
And in bright sunshine,
Close these 100 years.

He Nearly Fell Beneath the Wheels.

Sunday night two young men attempted to jump from a moving train on the Central road when near the Union station at Elizabeth. One of them succeeded in landing on his feet in safety, but the other was not quite so fortunate, for in jumping he struck a telegraph pole and fell backwards, almost going beneath the wheels of the moving train. This practice of jumping from cars has cost many lives, and will undoubtedly cause the death of many yet who imagine that they know all.

Milk Inspection.

The Dairy Commissioner of the State of New Jersey in his last annual report, just issued, says:

"The usual inspection of milk has been carried on in nearly all portions of the State. Complaints in cases of violation have been made in the following counties: Essex, 3; Hudson, 16; Warren, 3; Morris, 4; Camden, 3; Hunterdon, 1. Many of these cases are now pending, while the remainder are closed, either by conviction or otherwise. Penalties to the amount of $550 have been paid into the State Treasury. Never since the law regulating the sale of milk was first enacted has the quality of the supply been so excellent. The rigid enforcement of the act for seven years has had a salutary effect, and cases of adulteration are now rare."

Immense Traffic.

Never before, perhaps, in the history of the Central Railroad, has the passenger traffic been so great as it has been for the past forty-eight hours. Fortunately for the Central road, the Centennial anniversary occurs early in the season. Had it been a month later, when people are flocking to the seashore, the company would have been unable to provide accommodation for the masses who are now flocking to New York from all parts of the continent.

During Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night and Monday, passenger trains passed through the city at short intervals. Many of these being through trains from the South and West. Sunday no less than six special trains passed over the road, carrying soldiers from various parts of the Union, who participated in the grand military parade on Tuesday.

The County Road Question.

(From the Elizabeth Herald.)

The Board of Freeholders, notwithstanding the severe storm which prevailed Friday afternoon, took carriages and rode over the proposed county roads to Westfield.

There was some doubt expressed that the road as adopted at the last meeting of the board, which commences at the city line on West Jersey street, was not best, but the board, on returning from Friday's ride, concluded that it was, and, it is said, deemed it best to let the matter stand as it is.

Much dissatisfaction is freely expressed by many who claim that the proper road to adopt would have been the Westfield avenue road, which commences on North Broad street, and is an almost straight one to Westfield. By adopting this route there would have been no railroads to either cross or pass under.

Railroad Discipline.

The N. J. C. Railroad Company has posted special orders at all stations and shops along the line as follows: "No employee will be permitted to leave his work to go to any other part of the road to draw his pay. Orders on the paymaster will be honored when it is inconvenient for employee to draw his pay. All bosses must be present when their employees are paid to identify them. Bills against an employee for board, washing or groceries will not be accepted or paid except on written order of the superintendent. No liquor will be sold under any circumstances. Any employee who neglects to pay his board, clothing, washing and living expenses, will be discharged. No employee will be permitted to ride over the road, with or without a pass, to procure his pay, without proper permission. Suspension will follow a violation of the latter order." The company will give no heed to bills against its employees for liquor.

The Philadelphia Convention of the Y. M. C. A.

[Furnished by Request.]

The arrangements are being completed for this important gathering, which will convene in Philadelphia, Wednesday evening, May 8. The day sessions will be held in Association Hall, corner 15th and Chestnut streets. A reception will be tendered the delegates on Wednesday evening in the Academy of Fine Arts, and the evening sessions of Thursday, Friday and Saturday will be held in the Academy of Music, on Broad street, quite near the Association rooms.

Among the speakers already secured for the Convention and for the chairmen of conferences are Dr. F. L. Patton of Princeton College; Dr. B. P. Raymond, President of Lawrence University, Wis., and President-elect of Wesleyan University, Conn.; Gov. J. A. Beaver of Pennsylvania; Elbert B. Monroe of New York; Thomas Cochran, Jr., of St. Paul; H. B. Chamberlin of Denver; Rev. Geo. B. Stewart of Harrisburg; Dr. F. W. Kelley of Montreal; E. W. Halford of Washington, and J. D. Husted of Kansas City.

The Law Requiring Children to Attend School a Portion of the Year, a Failure.

State Factory Inspector Lawrence T. Fell in his annual report recommends that the first section of the act limiting the hours of labor for children be amended so as to make the age the same for boys and girls, and that the limit be fourteen years of age. He says that experience has taught him that Section 3, which requires that no child between 12 and 15 years of age shall be employed in any factory unless he or she has attended school for twelve weeks during the year, is a dead letter. It is almost impossible to enforce it. He says: "In the large manufacturing districts manufacturers do not care to employ children between the ages of twelve and fifteen who are compelled to attend school for part of the year, as the law provides for, and the rule of the school districts does not admit the children to the school room at any time of the year that may be convenient to the manufacturer, and as for the compliance with the law by attending night school, that, in my experience, is a failure, for children of the tender age of twelve or fourteen who work for ten hours—some in overheated rooms and amidst the din of machinery, breathing the air of poorly ventilated rooms, charged with the dust and odors of the goods manufactured, and subject to more or less mental strain and great physical labor—are not in a fit condition, mentally or physically, to apply themselves to the studies of the school room, and they should have the short time between the closing of the mill and bed-time for recreation and rest."

High Water in the Raritan.

The recent rain raised the Raritan river to a considerable extent. At Bound Brook, all the low lands were flooded; fences were carried away, and several of the buildings on the outskirts were inundated. No loss of life by the high water is reported.

A Centennial Sermon.

There was a large attendance at Trinity Reformed church, Sunday evening, and the entire gathering were deeply interested listeners to the Rev. Mr. Schenck's, instructive "Centennial Retrospect." The text was from Deut. 32:7.

The pulpit was draped with an American flag, and two others hung at each side of the organ.

Funeral of the Late Francis P. Van Buren.

The last sad funeral rites following the death of the late Francis P. Van Buren, whose death on Friday resulted from an accident about ten days ago, were enacted at Grace church, Sunday afternoon, in the presence of a large number of the relatives and intimate friends of the deceased. Archdeacon Rodman officiated and read the prescribed Episcopal church burial service. Mrs. W. A. Freeman and the boy choir sang parts of the service, which was very solemn and impressive. The casket was borne into the church by the following pall-bearers, all intimate friends of the deceased: Jos. Sandford, Geo. Martin, A. G. Slevin, Edw. Munn, Harry Squires and Harry McIntosh. The floral display consisted principally of lillies and roses.

After the service the remains were taken to Hillside cemetery and placed in the receiving vault temporarily.

"Ably Argued."

Under the above heading the Somerset Messenger pays the following compliment to Mr Charles A. Reed, of this city, who was associated with Hon. A. A. Clark in conducting the Nolan murder trial at Somerville this week:

"The counsel engaged in the murder case, which has occupied the attention of the courts for the past week, were the same as in the previous trials—Prosecutor Wm. V. Steele being ably assisted by Hon. James J. Bergen, and Hon. A. A. Clark and Chas. A. Reed, Esq., conducting the defense. We hear many complimentary remarks upon the ability displayed by counsel on both sides. Mr. Reed was the youngest lawyer in the case and made a very forcible argument before the jury. It isn't always the case that a young lawyer can keep himself so well in hand, in a trial of this character, as Mr. Reed succeeded in doing."

Counsel for the defence will apply for a new trial on the ground of an unjust verdict, claiming that the verdict was conflicting with the State's evidence.

Wedding Bells.

At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Jesse Rogers, 18 East 134th street, New York city, at 8 o'clock, Tuesday evening, Miss Phebe Esther Rogers, formerly of Westfield, N. J., was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. George William Field of New York, by the Rev. Mr. Siles. Mr. Henry A. Field, a brother of the groom, was best man, and Miss Lydia Baldwin of Westfield, N. J., was bridesmaid. The bride was attired in a cream colored cashmere, and carried a bouquet of tea roses; the bridesmaid was dressed similar to the bride.

After the ceremony a reception was tendered the happy couple. Supper, vocal and instrumental music and dancing was indulged in until a late hour. Among those present were the following: Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. Lambert Edmonds, Mr. and Mrs. Spear, Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher, Miss S. Hines, Miss M. Loftus, Miss Reid, Mrs. Muse, Mrs. E. Voorhees, Miss F. E. Fawcett, Mr. H. A. Field, Mr. Paul Johnson, Mr. S. Griffen, Mr. Beson, of New York; Miss Lydia Baldwin, of Westfield; Miss B. Fawcett, of Greenville, and Mr. G. S. Martin, of Plainfield. The presents were costly and useful. Mr. and Mrs. Field will make New York their permanent home.

Reform Hall.

A fair sized audience was in Reform Hall Sunday night. President French occupied his accustomed chair, and Mr. Vanderbeck with a fair choir conducted, as usual, the musical programme in superior style. In the absence of Rev. Mr. Honeyman, the regular chaplain of the club, who has been long absent from his post of duty, Geo. M. Angleman, Sr., offered prayer.

The speaker of the evening was Mr Edward L. Morris of this city, who in a clear and convincing manner portrayed the ruinous effects of liquor drinking. He advocated total abstinence from all kinds of intoxicating liquor as the only course of safety, asserting that the first drink led to moderate indulgence and that to the terrible result of drunkenness. Mr. Morris quoted medical testimony in regard to the many evils inflicted by alcohol upon the human system, and advocated the continuance of no license in Plainfield declaring that if liquor selling was conducive to public and private welfare it ought to be free and untaxed, but, if of a contrary character, as it certainly was, it should be entirely prohibited. Mr. Morris was listened to with marked attention. He was followed by Dr. Angleman, Judge Harper and President French in short addresses appropriate to the occasion, and with the singing of America the interesting meeting closed.

To Open an Office Here.

We note with pleasure the engagement of Mr. Fred S. Dunn of this city by the Electric Construction and Supply Co., of New York city, who is to take charge of the Company's interests here. It is understood that the Company is about to open an office here, and to vigorously push the electric light wiring business in all its branches, particularly during the Summer season, when the business is at the lowest ebb, on account of long days, by making prices which will be an inducement to parties contemplating the use of electric light by having their wiring done at this season of the year, rather than to wait until their Fall trade comes on. The long and successful record of this Company in the construction business (embracing among other prominent enterprises the wiring of the Mutual Life Insurance building, and more recently of Austin Corbin's building, corner of John street and Broadway, in which they have placed something over 15 miles of wire), together with the qualifications possessed by Mr. Dunn, will make this enterprise a success, and we endorse hearty co-operation in this move, as it is one of those things which tend to place our City in the lead among cities adopting electric light and other like improvements. Mr. Dunn's experience with the Electric Lighting Co., is a guarantee of the acceptable manner in which the work will be performed, and also that it will be in accordance with the requirements of the Electric Light Co.

A PHANTOM PLOWMAN.

Terrified Farmers Watched Him as He Turned Up the Sod Fearlessly.

In the northwestern corner of Lower Merion township, Montgomery County, Pa., says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, a terrible hubbub has been raised by a phantom farmer, who is nightly seen plowing in a field. The apparition was first discovered by a farm hand who was returning late from courting a pretty maid. Emerging from a wooded pathway that skirted an old forest for miles, this rustic was startled to hear a sepulchral voice commanding a team to halt. He looked in vain about the place for a moment or two, and was about moving on again when the same sound fell on his ear. A shiver crept down his spinal column as he heard the creaking of an unseen harness, and this terror was far from being allayed by the whinny of a horse almost directly before him. At that moment the new moon stole over the neighboring tree tops, and in its misty light the rural swain plainly saw the phantom farmer. It was clearly outlined against the dark background, and its two hands held in steady grasp the projecting handles of a plow. Before it marched a pair of spirited horses, dimly outlined in a misty light, their heads erect and their eyes flashing fire as they moved hastily along. The young man waited another moment to reassure himself, and was about to take to his heels, when plowman, horses and plow suddenly vanished. Then he, too, fled in wild alarm.

At Silas Brown's corner grocery on the night succeeding this, the young man, Albert Cooper by name, told this startling story. Brown, like many of the loungers in the store, smiled incredulously, and advised Cooper to "reform." A discussion arose, in which hot words were made that Cooper was drawing the long bow.

The upshot of the matter was that the crowd adjourned to the alleged scene of the ghost's operations to verify or disprove Cooper's tale.

They had not long to wait. Without the noises that had warned Cooper the night before, the phantom farmer appeared before the eyes of the seven men who sat upon the fence, or, to be more accurate, who almost fell from it in terror. His long white hair and beard streamed in the passing wind. No hat was on his head nor could any portion of his face be seen except the glistening eyes. These shot out from a height of more than seven feet from the ground, indicating that the spectral granger was taller than the average of human kind. About his body, which could not well be traced, there was a phosphorescent glow which dazzled the eyes of the terrified spectators and shown far ahead of the steadily moving horses. The plow he leaned on seemed of skeleton frame, but it tossed off the soft, moist earth as easily as a steamer turns the river waves. On he came, the horses seeming to exhale fire, their heads erect and arching, and footfalls as firm and clear as any the watchers ever heard. At the corner of the field they turned obediently at a word from their spectral driver, and again passed before the affrighted spectators, who thereupon fled in haste.

On the following morning a crowd of rustics determined to go to the field to see whether any traces of the farmer could be found. As they came in sight of the inclosure one of the number exclaimed in astonishment: "I'll be durned if the thing doesn't plow, sure enough." He was right. One-half of the field had been gone over, evidently by no novice. The furrows were not quite so broad as those made by an ordinary plowman, but they were less ragged and more deep, and were as straight as the most experienced eye could make them. A day or two after the same group went out to view the fields again, and this time they found that the phantom had finished his work. The owner of the field was one of the number, and he took a solemn oath that he had not turned a sod in the inclosure.

MARRIED ON A LOG.

Romantic Ceremony by Which Two Lives Were Welded Into One.

The Lithonia (Ga.) Herald tells of a novel and amusing marriage that was solemnized in that city. The contracting parties were both colored, and as the parents of Ella [illegible] objected to her entering the marriage state the groom, Andrew Williams, whose heart was overflowing with love for the fair Ella, obtained her consent and they ran away. In the afternoon about 3:30 the couple perched themselves on a log by the Academy branch and were there made one. The ceremony was performed by Judge James R. George, N. P., in his beautiful and impressive style. We regret that we are unable to give our readers the ceremony in full, but here is a part of it:

"Andrew and Ella, you have met here and perched yourselves upon this log by the side of the calm but frozen waters of this famous and historic Academy branch; under the blue canopy of heaven and surrounded by the grand old trees, which have been shorn of their beautiful foliage by the cold, windy blasts of winter, you are here surrounded by several distinguished gentlemen—Col. Thomas Lowe, Captain James S. George, 'Little' Ed Bailey and Dave [illegible], of Atlanta, and many others—who have come to see you united in holy bonds of wedlock—the grandest, noblest and sublimest state into which people can enter; and may both of your hearts eternally beat as one as you journey down the stream of time, and when you are done with this life may you enter into that realm of bliss 'where the good darkies go.'"

Milk Punches.

"Milk is good for dyspepsia, George, dear. Let me pour you a glass of pure Alderney."

"No, thank you, wifey. It is milk that has upset my stomach so. I took too much milk in the form of punches last night."

It may have been that the proprietor wanted him held until damages were paid and ordered his arrest. At any rate it was purely accidental on the part of the young man. The charge was withdrawn, and he was given his liberty.

Death of Francis P. Van Buren.

At his home on East Ninth street, about six o'clock Friday morning, occurred the death of Francis Persen Van Buren, son of Gen. Daniel T. and Julia Morris Van Buren, in the twenty-first year of his age. The deceased was thrown from a horse on Saturday last, and sustained injuries to his head which resulted in his death.

The deceased was both well and favorably known in this community, especially by the young people. He was kind and aimable in his disposition and had endeared himself to a host of friends and acquaintances. He was also an active member of the Plainfield Bicycle Club.

The funeral took place at Grace church on Sunday, at 2:30 P. M.

German Church Festival.

The church sociable held in the German Reformed church, Thursday, was a very pleasant affair. The attendance was large and every one was in the best of spirits. Light hearts and joyous faces could be seen on all sides. Credit is given to those who contributed their share towards the success of the undertaking.

There was somewhat of a mystery connected with the sociable, with reference to its object, but this was all cleared away when it became known that it was intended as a donation party to the pastor. At the close of the musical and literary programme, refreshments were served in abundance.

Among those who took part in the entertainment were the following:

Mrs. V. Utzinger, Mrs. Meissenbach, Miss Hulda Patzschinski, Miss Anna Ficke, Miss Schelling, Miss Kettenring, Miss Korner, Miss Strebinski, Master Johnnie Voehl, Messrs R. Carney and C. Wolf. Miss Mattison presided at the organ.

Inspecting the Asylum.

Director Hubbard and Freeholders Vanderbeek, Pierson, Ball and Brisant of the Union County Board last week made a tour of inspection to the Morris Plains Insane asylum. Everything was found to be working satisfactory at that institution, and the keeper reports that since making his last quarterly report there has been one death, one patient was discharged and two were admitted for treatment.

An Exciting Runaway.

A horse and business wagon belonging to Mr. F. Clark of Scotch Plains, was left standing in front of Reed's stationery store on West Front street, last week, when a wire dropped from above frightening the horse, and causing him to run away. The animal freed himself from the wagon, and started for home; he brought up in a door yard on Peace street, and was easily captured. The wagon and harness were badly broken.

He Stoned the Ducks.

Mr. Arthur Griffen caused the arrest of a young man of respectable parents, on a charge of stoning ducks in the brook below Grove street. The fellow was very much frightened when taken into custody by the police. He was required to furnish $50 bail for his future good behavior. The practice of throwing stones has become an intolerable nuisance, and it is to be hoped that the arrest will furnish a lesson to other evil-doers.

Young People's Sociable.

The members of the Young People's League of the First Baptist church, held a sociable in the Sunday school room, Thursday, many of the members being in attendance. An informal programme was rendered, which included an address by Mr. S. F. Joseph, recitations by Mr. and Mrs. Hillman, Miss "Dotty" Lears and Master Willie Thiers, vocal selections by Mr. L. H. Bigelow, a piano solo by Miss Minnie Runyon, and an address by Mr. C. W. McCutchen. Refreshments were served in abundance.

Death of Abraham Klisheimer.

It will be a surprise to many of our citizens who were acquainted with the above to learn of his death, which occurred at his late residence, No. 186 East 111th street, New York city, on Wednesday of last week. Mr. Klisheimer had been for eighteen years a member of the New York Fire Department, the last company to which he was attached being 14 Truck in 125th street. He was also a member of Booher Council, No. 73, O. A. F., and Humboldt Lodge, No. 512, F. & A. M., he being one of the organizers of the latter Society.

Delegations from the above societies attended the funeral, which took place Friday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. The members of No. 14 Truck Company turned out in a body and accompanied the remains to the cemetery. They walked on either side of the hearse for several blocks, when they stopped, and with bared heads they allowed the funeral procession to pass. They then entered coaches that had been reserved for them, and preceded the hearse to the cemetery. It was touching indeed to see these noble men walking the distance they did, in the face of a pelting rain, showing the last mark of respect to their dead comrade. Interment was made in Woodlawn Cemetery, according to the Masonic ceremony for the dead.

Mr. Klisheimer left a widow and family, the former being a daughter of the late James Breen of this city.

Grace Church Fair.

The fair for the benefit of the Grace Church Building Fund, held at 17 La Grand avenue, came to a close evening of Apl. 24. The attendance, both afternoon and evening was not as large as the ladies desired, but notwithstanding this the articles on sale were rapidly disposed of and the receipts, over and above expenses, will amount to about $275. Many of the articles on sale were of a superior quality. The rooms were very tastefully decorated with bunting. The ladies in attendance were all business and worked hard to dispose of the goods on sale. The refreshment and lemonade stands did a flourishing trade. It is regretted by many that the fair has not continued for another day as in all probability the treasury would have been greatly benefitted thereby. The following Committees deserve great praise for their efficiency shown in conducting the affair.

General Committee—Mrs. Massett, Chairman, Mrs. Lamson, Mrs. G. C. Smalley, Miss Harrison, Mrs. I. R. Taylor, Mrs. E. M. Rodman, Mrs. Craft, Mrs. Stover, Mrs. Stockton, Mrs. Scott, Mrs. DeGraff, Mrs. Henry Smith, Mrs. Chas. J. Ames, Miss Mary Tweedy.

Attendants at candy table—Miss Massett, Miss Betts.

Ladies in charge of fancy tables—Mrs. P. Fiske, Miss Fiske, Mrs. Brooks, Mrs. G. C. Smalley, Mrs. Massett, Mrs. I. R. Taylor, Mrs. Stockton.

Cashier, Mrs. Robert C. Dingee.

THE LAWYERS WON.

The ten-pin match between the doctors and dentists on one side, and the lawyers and others on the other, came off at the Olympia Bowling Alley, April 24, resulting in a victory for the latter team, said team having made 1,099, their antagonist's score being 1,062.

The lawyers, many of whom have had considerable practice at bowling of late, have nothing to brag of. They did poorly, running far behind their previous records, as the score will show. On the other hand the physicians and dentists did remarkably well, considering the little practice some of them have had. Below is the score:

Must Pay His Wife Alimony.

Judge Truax of the New York Superior Court Thursday directed Joseph Shackleton to pay his wife, Ruth Emmeline Shackleton, alimony at the rate of $15 a week pending her suit for an absolute divorce. The defendant is Superintendent of the Shackleton Car Works at Bound Brook, N. J.

Oh, for a Town Cistern.

As the warm weather is approaching, it would be well for the City Fathers to provide a town pump and be "up to the times." Just think of it, a stranger coming into the City on Sunday, must either go plowing through flower beds in private door yards in search of a pump, or go dry. Water is a necessity, even for bathing the feet.

How They Write Obituaries in the West.

In a Western town a few days ago, a well-known sporting man died, and the local paper thus eulogized him:

"Alex. Ragala, a well-known sport, but better known as 'Shiner,' cashed in his checks last Saturday night and quit the game of life to play no more. He 'staid in' as long as possible, but was finally 'called' and had to 'lay down his hand.'"

Of Interest to Teachers.

At a meeting of the State Board of Education held recently the rules governing examinations were changed as follows:

"Any County Board of Examiners shall accept from any applicant for a second or first grade county license, any certificate of any grade of license given after the adoption of this regulation for any further examination in the academic branches covered by said certificate; provided, that the applicant shall have attained a general standing in all the branches of eighty five per cent., and shall present satisfactory evidence of having been a teacher in good standing during the time subsequent to the granting of said certificate; and, provided, that the first-grade county license may be renewed without a re-examination."

This differs widely from the regulations previously adopted and published generally by the papers of the State. It virtually reverses or revokes them, and makes it necessary that teachers should be aroused to the full import of the change.

Address to the Good Templars.

State Deputy William A. Reiley of Newark, delivered a practical and interesting address before the members and friends of Alpha Lodge, No. 4, I. O. G. T., of this city, in the W. C. T. U. rooms, on West Front street, Friday night. The attendance was small.

Mr. F. B. Robinson of Newark, made the opening address, followed by Mr. Reiley. The latter spoke of the Good Templars as an organization, and told of the good work, which has been accomplished by the Order within the past thirty-five years.

Remarks were also made by Rev. Mr. Schenck and others. Recitations were given by some of the juvenile members of Alpha Lodge.

On May 14th the District Lodge will meet in Newark, and delegates will attend from this city.

A Relic of the Revolution.

Previous to breaking ground for Mr. Edward Love's building which is now in the course of erection at the corner of North avenue and Peace street, it was necessary to move the frame dwelling on Peace street adjoining the property, several feet Northwest. While excavating for the cellar on which this dwelling was placed, the workmen ran foul of an immense root of an apple tree. While the work of removing the root was in progress Mr. J. N Jenkins, the house mover, picked up an old rusty saber of an ancient pattern and gave it to Mr. William Moore of East Second street. It is suggested that Mr. Moore loan it to the Centennial Committee to be used on the occasion of the celebration.

It is a most peculiar incident that this relic should have been unearthed at this time while preparations are being made for the celebration of the inaugural of our first President, and Commander in Chief of the American forces during the Revolutionary war.

Concert at Reform Hall.

The concert by the Theodore Drury Operatic Concert Company for the benefit of Mt. Olive Baptist church, at Reform Hall, Friday, was largely attended, notwithstanding the fact that the weather was unpleasant and there were several other attractions in the city at the same time. Included in the audience were many white persons. On account of the illness of one of the members, the male quartette failed to materialize, but the other members of the company proved themselves equal to the emergency and rendered a programme which thoroughly delighted the large audience present. Among those who are deserving of special mention are: Mr. Theo. Drury, a pupil of Prof. Howard of New York, who sang, "Oh Happy Day," Miss Katie Mitchell, known on the posters as "Miss Cassadalla Mitchello," the elocutionist, and a trio composed of Mr Drury, Miss E. Belden and Miss Maggie Scott. The latter responding to an encore sang "The Maid at the Mill." Following is the

PROGRAMME:

Reading..........Miss Mitchell
Solo—"Oh Happy Day"..........Theo. Drury
Recitation—"A Scene from Mary Stewart"..........Miss Mitchell

On the whole the concert was thoroughly enjoyed, as was evidenced from the hearty applause given the performers, and Mt. Olive church will doubtless be financially benefitted. Mrs C. M. Oliver was the accompanist.

The Middlesex Gun Club's Big Shoot.

There was a large gathering of crack shots at the Middlesex Gun Club's centennial shoot, held at Dunellen, Tuesday. Sweepstakes at live birds and inanimate targets were shot from 10 o'clock in the morning until dark.

The live birds killed, some 500 in number, were a fair average lot, very irregular in flight, and they puzzled many of the experts. The artificial targets used were blue rocks and keystones, and were shot under the popular keystone system. The event of the day was a guaranteed purse of $150 at 15 live birds, $15 entrance fee, shot under modified Hurlingham rules. Twenty-five of the crack shots of this country entered, making the purse $375, to be divided into four parts—40, 30, 20 and 10 per cent.

F. Mahlon of Trenton, Wm. Siegler of Montclair, and Capt. Jones of Jersey City killed their 15 birds straight, and divided first money—$150.

J. Frank Kleinz of Philadelphia, Frank Class of Pine Brook, M. Lindsley of West Hoboken, Chas. VanCamp of Trenton, Moss Williams of Elizabeth, E. A. Francis of Newark, and Capt. Brewer of Philadelphia, each killed 14 and divided second prize, $112.50.

J. Riggott of Rockaway, R. E. Irwin of Philadelphia, S. Castles of Newark, Chas. Smith of Plainfield, and John D. Voorhees of Bound Brook, killed 13 and divided $75.

C. M. Hedden of Newark, E. D. Miller of Springfield, H. E. Buckwalter of Philadelphia, S. G. Smith of Plainfield and E. R. Mills of Washington, grassed 12 birds and divided fourth money, $37.50.

Cannon, the one-arm expert of Newark, killed 11; Williams of Trenton and John Erb of Newark, killed 10 each.

—It is now claimed that the time to prune trees is when the leaves are two-thirds grown in the Spring. It is the opinion that the wounds made at this time of the year heal rapidly and perfectly, and that the vitality of the tree is lowered less than at any other time.

Dunellen's Need.

One of the greatest needs in the Borough of Dunellen at the present time, is a system of street lighting. A gentleman from this city who returned from Dunellen on a late train last Friday, told a PRESS reporter that he left a certain residence there during the evening and proceeded but a short distance along the sidewalk in the darkness, when suddenly he waded knee-deep into a mud puddle, spoiling an eight dollar pair of pantaloons.

Friends on Temperance.

The regular semi-monthly meeting of the Friends' Temperance and Literary Society, was held at the residence of Mrs. Rachael G. Bogert, on East Second street, Wednesday of last week, with President Robinson found in the chair. The attendance was good and considerable interest was manifested. Quotations on temperance from the various authors were read by the President, Col John Deitrich and others.

The Society decided to hereafter hold its meeting in the Friends' Meeting house, corner of Peace and Third streets.

Borough Licenses.

Judge Magie, at Somerville, Friday, granted the licenses of G. Sutterlin and Eugene Hoerster, beer bottlers in North Plainfield, to sell in quantities of from one quart to five gallons, the same not to be drunk on the premises. The Judge also refused a saloon license to Chas. Graeder and an inn and tavern license to Frank Linke. Under the new law both of the latter persons will be obliged to make a special application for bottling purposes, and unless this is granted their bottling priviliges will expire sixty days after the passage of the Werts bill. Heretofore the bottlers have paid no license fee, but henceforth they will be obliged to pay $150.

GOT CLEAR OF HIS OFFSPRING.

A short time since while Miss Cassie Walling, daughter of Mr. John Walling, a young lady residing in Union Village, was busily engaged about her house, attending to her daily duties, a stranger called carrying in his arms an infant. The man asked permission to leave his care with the young Miss, stating that he had business to attend to in the "village" and would call for the child in a little while. Miss Walling kindly granted his request, but he did not keep his promise, consequently the kind hearted lady is burdened with a great care and promises that she will never again be placed in the same predicament.

Anxiously she has been waiting in vain for the stranger's return, but he cometh not, and what to do with the infant she does not know. The sudden change in her line of duty is keenly felt. "Within the twinkling of an eye great changes are wrought," is very suggestive in this instance.

Read How Messrs Geo. Watson & Co., Intend to Distribute Their Broken Lots of Pantaloons as Gifts Among Their Customers.

The plan of distributing their broken lots of Pants as presents among their customers by Messrs Geo. Watson & Co., after 9 o'clock on Saturday night was a great failure, as the rush was so great that it was impossible to confine these gifts to regular customers of the house, and few could be correctly fitted. A new plan has been adopted for the benefit of their customers, or those who may become customers, which will be made known on application and will be duly advertised.

This week they open their elegant styles of Spring Cassimere and Cheviot suits, in all the grades usually sold for $15 and upward, at the uniform low price of ten dollars a suit for any kind you may select. Perhaps you may pick out a suit that cost them more than ten dollars to make up, or you may choose one on which they have a little profit, but no matter what you select the price will be $10 for the complete suit.

Their immense lines of elegant Dress Suits at $15, $15.50, $16, $17.50, $18, $19, $20, $22 and $25, in all the new forms and handsome custom fabrics, are now hung all ready to put on, complete in all the details of half sizes in solid colors, bird's-eye and dice effects, and with beautiful silk threads skillfully interwoven with the goods.

You should certainly see the handsome garments their tailors are now finishing daily, and remember that it is the correct cut as laid down by the Standard American Fashion Plate, to which their designers are the principal contributors, that makes the rush of business so strong toward the corner of Broad and Market streets.

If you wish to become a customer of the house of Geo. YOU CAN'T PLEASE EVERYBODY!

Is an old saying. But it's astonishing what a number of people we manage to please with our stock of Spring Clothing. This is especially true of the goods we make up for the little ones. It would take a good deal of space and an eloquent pen to do justice to the many pretty and tasteful garments which we design and make up for the youngsters. All of these styles are our own, and are the result of much patient thought and effort. There may be places where an assortment equal to our own is to be met with, but you'll travel a long way to find it, and when you succeed you'll note that the prices are far above our limit for a similar class of goods. We study to please, and we succeed. Mothers are pleased because they find just what suits their boys without a long hunt for it. The boys are pleased because the clothes fit them so well and look so handsome. The rich and the poor are both pleased because they secure good value and everybody is pleased with the prices. Our Clothing for larger boys and men has the same artistic and shapely appearance, and as to value for the money, it is simply unapproachable.

PRESIDENT'S MESSENGER.

How the Chief Executive Communicates With Congress.

The Important and Ceremonious Functions of Isaac Bassett Who Has Been a Senate Employe for Sixty Years—Octavius Pruden's Duties.

[Copyright 1889.]

One of the most interesting events in public life in Washington, and one of the most common during the special session of the Senate, is the formal communication between the President and that august body. It is an action that may occur at any time when Congress is in session, and whenever it does, the telegraph wires all over the country echo with repeating the information to all daily newspapers, and so to millions of readers, that "a message was received from the President." The substance or text of the message then follows, and the reader goes his way rejoicing or sorrowing as the case may be. But how many readers know how that message was sent, delivered and received?

The business of sending letters from the White House to the Capitol calls for the services of two interesting public servants who have held office for many years. The first is Mr. Octavius L. Pruden. He is officially known as the Assistant Private Secretary to the President, but from the nature of his duties his more popular title is President's Messenger. Pruden is a holdover. He came to Washington from Glens Falls, New York, at the beginning of Grant's first administration, to take the office which he has held ever since. Cleveland found that he could trot around about as well as any democrat in his list of appointees and made no effort to displace him. As a matter of fact, though, Mr. Pruden's trotting is usually done by two door-horses, driven by an elegant colored man in livery. The assistant private sec. sits in dignified ease within the vehicle and looks with lofty contempt upon the uniformed district messengers running their dear legs off in their anxiety to be prompt and save their customers any annoyance. (This description of the uniformed messenger is copied from the pictures hung up in telegraph offices and may therefore be relied upon as accurate.)

Pruden's salary is $2,200 annually. In addition to his errand running, in a special carriage, he looks after various details which are beneath the attention of [illegible] that is and Dan'l and others that were. Whenever there is a message to go up to the Capitol, a very long mile and a quarter distant, Pruden prepares manifold copies of it. It does not follow that he sits down at a typewriter personally and pounds typographical errors out of the rattling keys, or [illegible] carbon and tissue paper with a stylus. The figures following the "P" above quoted imply that he has a deputy assistant private etc. who performs the physical labor. Pruden looks after the head work, and the fact that he is still [illegible] is proof enough that the [illegible] does it well.

When the message is ready, the original being sealed and tied into a big blue envelope addressed to "The Senate," and the manifold duplicates sealed in another [illegible] envelope, Pruden summons his carriage. For all that it is the vehicle of conveyance of the President's messenger, it is not a very luxurious affair. It is a plain ordinary carriage, and that is all. The messenger does not dress for the performance of his duty. He goes to the Senate in a business suit that makes him look as if he employed a good tailor.

Since the 4th of March the President's communications have been limited to nominations for office, and the temporary residents of Washington look with keen interest for Pruden's carriage. As he makes his way from the porte cochere to the Senate door he is always surrounded by eager men, but his pleasant face never betrays the slightest hint of what is within the big envelope, the seals of which are never broken until they have been placed in the proper hands. Right here it may be said that the form of letters from the Chief Executive to the Senate is very simple. There is no waste of words, not even "Dear Sir," or "Yours truly." It runs as follows:

"To the Senate:
I nominate Timothy Titmouse to be Consul-general of Hot Scotch.
BENJAMIN HARRISON."

When the messenger arrives at the Senate door he looks in to see if the coast is clear and to catch the eye of the other interesting individual who figures in the transmission of the President's official correspondence. That is Isaac Bassett, a man with a figure and face that artists would like to study. He is tall, dignified and patriarchal. A thin, snow white beard falls down low upon his breast [illegible]. Few men have a deeper respect for their public or private positions than he has for his, and his every movement indicates that he knows his place and its importance, and that he will perform its duties with regard to the strictest propriety and unswerving fidelity. Isaac Bassett has been on the pay roll of the Senate for more than sixty years. He began his public service as a page to Daniel Webster. Now he is assistant doorkeeper.

At the conclusion of his sixtieth year in the chamber, one of the Senators moved a resolution that the pay of the assistant doorkeeper be increased during the term of the present incumbent. The old man listened with grateful attention, but he was sadly disturbed when another Senator rose to oppose the resolution. The Senator appreciated the desire of his colleague to bestow a graceful compliment upon so deserving and honored an official, etc., etc., but would it not be better to make the compliment more significant by immortalizing the name of the assistant doorkeeper. He therefore moved a substitute, raising the pay of Isaac Bassett during his lifetime as an employe of the Senate. The original motion was withdrawn, the substitute carried, and Mr. Bassett's name will be found immortalized in print by the future historian who shall pore over the records in search of important events in the nation's existence.

The good old man uses snuff after the manner of the times of Webster, Clay and Benton. He is chock-a-block with reminiscences, but he is very chary about giving them away. He is writing a book, and he proposes to save them for the emolument of his own pen.

The minute that Mr. Bassett sees Messenger Pruden at the door, he beckons [illegible] to keep him. Then they wait until the coast is clear. Only on rare occasions do they actually interrupt the proceedings. If a Senator is making a speech, they usually wait until he has finished. When it is evident that an entrance would be appropriate, the second stage in the journey of the President's message begins. Bassett marches solemnly down the aisle with Pruden, and from that until the [illegible] the proceeding is as good as a scene from a comic opera.

Down the aisle go the two functionaries until they come to the open between the Senators' desks and the Vice-President's chair, [illegible] occupied, of course, by Senator Ingalls. Then they pause, and both bow very low to the President of the Senate. When they have regained an upright position, Assistant Doorkeeper Bassett begins a speech:

"Mr. President."

He never gets any farther. In all his sixty years of service that is all the speech that the Senate has permitted him to deliver.

After Mr. Bassett's remarks, the President raps his desk with his gavel, and addressing the Senate, says:

"A message from the President."

Then he turns to the two men in front and quietly ignoring the patriarchal Bassett, recognizes Pruden.

"Mr. Secretary."

Whereupon Mr. Pruden delivers various remarks, more at length than those of Bassett, but they are always the same in text. He says:

"Mr. President, I have the honor to deliver to the Senate a message in writing from the President of the United States."

After that both Bassett and Pruden bow very low again, and Pruden gives the blue envelope to Bassett; Bassett takes it up to the Secretary of the Senate; the Secretary of the Senate rises and passes it back to the presiding officer. Then Bassett steps down, bows with Pruden again, and conducts the messenger out of the chamber.

A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

In case of ordinary sessions of Congress messages from the President are usually left on the table until pending business has been disposed of. During the special session there has been no business other than that presented by the Presidential nominations. Therefore, when Bassett and Pruden have withdrawn, Senator Edmunds rises to move that the Senate go into executive session. All formal motions of this kind come from the Vermonter, for he is the senior member of the body. His method is a bit peculiar. He rises slowly, puts one hand [illegible] both hands to his face, waves a movement with his fingers as if he were [illegible] his lips, and then speaks. The President, hearing no objection, immediately calls upon the Sergeant-at-Arms to clear the galleries, whereupon lady visitors give expression to their disappointment in ill-concealed "Oh my's!" and "Oh dears!" The order is relentless, however, and everybody is driven into the corridors. The faithful Bassett sees that one of his colleagues is stationed at each door, and when none are within the chamber save Senators and officials, out come the cigars, snap go the matches, and in five minutes there is a column of blue and beautiful scented smoke above the desks of four out of five Senators. During the special session the Senate has gone into executive session many times in order that the members might avoid the importunities of office seekers, and catch up their private correspondence.

After Pruden leaves the chamber, he takes one of his manifold copies of the President's message to the office of the clerk of the House, and sends the other by a page to the correspondents in the gallery. What use is made of it there may be inferred. Then the Assistant Private Secretary to the President gets into his carriage and trots back to the White House.

F. H. BURTON.

An Ample Excuse.

In a Buffalo church a recent Sunday evening, when the pastor had got well into his sermon, he noticed an unusual commotion among the choir, at his right. He tried to ignore it, but the trouble became so lively that he felt it his duty to rebuke the singers in a loud voice. The disturbance finally quieted down and the services proceeded with due dignity. A member of the choir managed to communicate to the much-put-out pastor the cause of the commotion before the services were concluded. It was a mouse—only a little mouse. But with the perversity of its kind, this little mouse had managed to get under the skirts of one of the ladies. The good pastor forthwith explained to the congregation that the trouble had been unavoidable—that no blame attached to the choir.

AUNT PRUE'S RIDE.

"OW, Massa Car'l, don't be in such a flummix," and Aunt Prue drew up her ample form with a protesting gesture.

"Flummix," repeated Carrol Hastings impatiently, "it would flummix an angel to see you get ready, Aunt Prue. Now, do hurry, if such a thing be possible, for we must be away in one hour positively."

"Laws, chile, I'll be ready in half that time."

"I hope so, I'm sure," and the young man looked at his watch impatiently. The morning had been a very trying one, for the husband had left his wife at home sick to come for Aunt Prue. She was an invaluable servant when she was fairly wound up for duty, but when she was off duty it was like pulling teeth to get her ready to take up her work again, and upon this occasion she had been unusually exasperating.

She became periodically depressed and unhappy unless she could attend church among her own people, a privilege which she greatly prized, for she was a devoted Christian, and in view of the fact that she would be closely confined to business during his wife's illness she had been granted a two weeks' holiday, but the ten-mile drive had never seemed so exasperatingly long as on this Sabbath morning, with his wife's parting words in his ears: "Hurry, Carrol, for every five minutes will seem like an hour while you are gone."

He had found Aunt Prue just getting out her "meetin'" clothes when he arrived, and had urged her to return with him at once, but she was immovable.

"Laws, Massa Car'l, I couldn't think ob it," she said, obstinately. "Brudder Peerose am gwine ter preach an' I couldn't miss it nohow. We kin go home d'rectly after de meetin', so, mon, it'll be all right."

She had fussed and dawdled over her meeting preparations until Mr. Hastings' patience was almost exhausted before he succeeded in getting her headed on the church steps.

"Brudder" Peerose preached unusually long that morning, and Mr. Hastings paced the church steps, impatiently waiting for Aunt Prue to come out. The last hymn was sung, the people began to come out, still no Aunt Prue, and Mr. Hastings went inside in search of her. There she was, shaking hands and exhorting as she came slowly down the aisle, as if she had all day before her. The sight was exasperating, and Mr. Hastings was excusable for speaking sharply as he took her fat arm in his strong grasp, saying, sternly: "Now, Aunt Prue, I'll not be trifled with any longer. The wagon is at the door and you must go without further delay."

The old woman was actually astounded, for she had never seen her employer so nearly in a passion, and she trotted down the aisle without looking to the right or left, and it seemed as if a start was going to be made at last.

She looked in his face as they reached the porch. "Now, Massa Car'l, ye wouldn't tink of totin' me home tron de meetin' wid my very bes' [illegible] on?" Her humble tones touched him, and he looked into her faithful black face inquiringly. "Now, Aunt Prue, if I let you change your dress, will you promise to hurry?"

"Hurry, Massa Car'l, my chile, I'll hurry so fas' it'll make de sparks fly, see ef I don'."

Mr. Hastings laughed in spite of himself. "Very well, aunty, I'll give you just five minutes to get on your change, and if you're not ready in that time I shall go home without you and hire big Sally Foster to nurse my wife."

He could hardly have used a more efficacious threat, for big Sally was Aunt Prue's special aversion, and the idea of the obnoxious person attending her beloved Missy was more than she could bear.

"Massa Car'l," she began reproachfully, but the magnitude of the subject choked her, and her sentence remained unfinished.

The five minutes passed by with three minutes of grace added, and Aunt Prue appeared in the doorway equipped for her homeward drive, a bundle in one hand, a basket in the other, followed by several juvenile darkies bearing bundles of greater or less magnitude.

The packing occupied another five minutes, and after that each youngster had to be consoled, and Mr. Hastings' patience was worn to a narrow thread by the time Aunt Prue was ready to hoist her fat form over the wheel to the back seat.

"Here, give me that basket," he said, sharply, as she tried to [illegible] in her hand.

"Laws, Massa Car'l, dem's eggs," cried Aunt Prue in alarm, as he tried to take the basket from her hand.

"Eggs!" groaned Mr. Hastings, grimly; "they'll be poached eggs before we get home, I imagine."

"I couldn't no how come wid 'out [illegible] for Missy. She jest dotes on eggs wen she is sick, Massa Car'l," said Aunt Prue, apologetically.

She was settled at last, and the impatient horses started off on a brisk trot.

Wildly as they went to suit Mr. Hastings' anxiety, [illegible]

THERE SHE WAS, SHAKING HANDS.

until their first gait was a slow trot, comparatively.

"Massa Car'l! Massa Car'l!" came in entreating tones from behind.

Aunt Prue was hanging on to the front seat, her bonnet strings flying out behind, and clinging desperately to her basket of eggs.

"Massa Car'l, dese aigs'll git broke, sho! Can't yo drive a little slower?"

"Couldn't think of it, auntie," replied Mr. Hastings; he had to smile, vexed as he was, at Aunt Prue's irrelevant solicitude.

"If you ever expect to wear that dress again you'd better drop that basket of eggs on the bottom of the wagon." A yellow stream was already oozing out at one corner of the basket, and the whip tickled the flanks of the flying horses.

Away they went over hill and dale, the wagon bounding over the stones as if it were alive, Mr. Hastings occasionally looking back to see if Aunt Prue was still there.

Only once he allowed the horses to slacken their pace, and, looking back, he inquired: "Well, auntie, enjoying your ride?"

"W'y, Massa Car'l," she panted, "I enjy's ridin' well enough, but I mus' say I'd a rather not ride quite so fas'."

"Well, straighten up your bonnet and pin on your shawl, auntie," and Mr. Hastings smiled. The five remaining miles would soon be passed at the rate they were traveling, and his good humor was returning. "We are going to get over the next five miles in just twenty minutes."

"Laws, Massa Car'l, dey aint no sich drivin' hurry," and Aunt Prue pulled on her bonnet, which was hanging back on her shoulders, and gathered up the ends of her black shawl, which had been sailing out behind like piratical flags.

Evidently regrets were mingling with her feelings, for she turned upon Mr. Hastings, as he looked around to see if she was ready for the home-stretch, a reproachful look: "Massa Car'l, you didn't give me time to say howdy to half de folks at de meetin'."

At another time the impatient husband could have laughed at the whimsical unreason of the remark, but his sharp anxiety made it seem doubly unreasonable, and it is possible he took a malicious pleasure in hearing poor Aunt Prue bump about on the back seat as he once more plied the whip.

The landscape fairly flew past them the remaining distance, and as they drove up to the front door a baby's feeble wail greeted their ears.

The sound aroused Aunt Prue's motherly feeling in a moment, and she clambered over the wheel hastily, saying as she did so: "Massa Car'l, we orter a druv faster," and she hurried into the house without even looking into the fate of her precious basket of eggs.

"CAN'T YE DRIVE A LITTLE SLOWER?"

Aunt Prue settled into her working traces beautifully when the pressure of necessity came upon her, and a more devoted nurse for the sick mother and helpless babe could not have been found.

Fortunately no special harm had been done by the delay, and Mrs. Hastings had plenty of skilled assistants, but Aunt Prue never ceased to lament because Massa Car'l didn't drive faster, without taking a particle of blame to herself for her share in the delay.

Good old Prue. She served the little stranger faithfully for two years, gathering him nightly to her ample bosom as only a devoted colored mammy can do, before she went back to her own humble cabin.

They found her there one morning kneeling beside her bed, her black hand clasped in prayer, with a peaceful smile upon her withered face.

Aunt Prue had gone to say Howdy to the blest in Heaven. MRS. F. M. HOWARD.

HEARD IN THE GALLERY.

How a Newspaper Man Took His Best Girl to Witness a Session of Congress.

They sat in the diplomatic gallery of the House of Representatives. He was ruddy and strong. She was young, winsome and fair. She chatted gayly, and looked down upon the boisterous scene. Presently she said:

"Who is that funny little man with the bald place on his crown like a china saucer?"

"That little man is Sunset Cox. He is the wit of the House. Listen to what he says."

"I can't hear a word for that big fellow over there who is interrupting him. Who is that?"

"That is big Tom Reed, of Maine. He is the leader of the Republican side of the House. Listen!"

"What does he interrupt the little man for?"

"He is merely asking him questions. Listen to them."

"I can't hear a word on account of that [illegible] faced man in that high chair who is hammering on that big desk. Who is he, and why don't they arrest him for disturbing the peace?"

"That is Speaker Carlisle. He is trying to preserve order, so that the speakers can be heard. Listen to them."

"I am listening. If Mr. Carlisle is Speaker, why don't he speak? Why does he sit there and hammer? It's too awful for any thing. Why does he sit so high? Is he proud? Does he want them all to look at him? He isn't half so pretty as that little man in the back row with blonde hair. Who is he?"

"Mr. Carlisle does not speak, for it is not right for the Speaker to speak. He is obliged to sit high, so that he can keep order. The pretty blonde man is Dick Guenther, of Wisconsin. Please listen, Mabel, I want to write a report of this speech."

"Then what did you bring me here for? Do you think more of those howling, scrambling fellows, and the man who hammers the desk than you do of me? I'm going right now, so there!"

"Don't, Mabel. Don't go. Please sit still just for a few minutes. I must watch and write this up. Don't you understand, you silly thing, that this is the way I earn my oyster money? This is the way I get my theater tickets."

"Oh, you poor thing. Is that the way you earn the buggies, and things? I am so sorry for you. I shall be very quiet, Major Slofah. I shall be very still. Do we go to the play to-night, and to Loeskam's afterwards?"

"There, now Mr. Cox has the floor. Listen."

"What will he do with the floor? Is he building a new house? Why don't he get new boards?"

That settled it. Major Slofah gathered his hat and gold-headed cane, tucked her tiny pink finger tips under his brawny arm, and sallied forth [illegible] with her. The managing editor telegraphed in vain that night, for a "special" from Washington. Mabel will never sit beside her dear Major again in the House. All is over between them. Slofah gave her a square meal, introduced her to Fred Hendy, and bought a love with a fuller pate. Poor Mabel. Poor Major. The course of true love never did run rougher.

No Place Like Home.

"Best terror scramble, snow place lie home," and he stumbled up the steps.

"Brother life, Lige Linkins. Brother life there's snow place like home. It's a cold day for you," and she swiped him over the head with one of her own home-made pies.

Jeffersonian Simplicity.

"Papa, what is Jeffersonian simplicity?"

"That, my son, is baby food for weak [illegible] which statesmen are reared on the [illegible]."

"How do they use it, papa?"

"They use it as poultices for weak heads."

An Ill-bred Preacher.

"Madame," reproachfully remarked the tramp to whom the young housewife had given a couple of cold biscuits of her own make, "I have asked ye for bread and ye have given me a stone." And the next instant she gave him a [illegible]

WHALING BY ESQUIMAUX.

An Exciting Scene at Point Barrow, in the Northern Part of Alaska.

A letter from New Bedford, Mass., gives the following story of the intensely exciting scene witnessed by a whaleman at Point Barrow:

"I confess that I am a very poor sportsman," said George Leavitt. "I always felt that there was something diabolical in this sporting spirit, and it was not until I took charge of the whaling station at Point Barrow and saw an Esquimaux whaling scene that I was willing to admit that there was any thing but a bloodthirsty spirit back of this gaming. After seeing that, however, I willingly confess that there is one kind of sport that is truly possessed of greatness—a kind of sport where the dangers are not all on one side.

"As a preliminary to all preparation the natives, headed by their medicine men, marched in solemn procession down to the beach, and with incantations, beating of drums and other ceremonies formally ushered in the spring. This done, there was no doubt in their minds but that whaling would soon be at hand.

"Every thing seemed to be unusually favorable for whaling that spring. There had been but few gales during the winter, so the ice was not massed together and jumbled up as much as usual. From our lookout we could command a view of the sea for miles, and none of the usual phenomena of icy jams could be seen.

"I went down to see Mung-gy the next day after he made camp and found him all ready for whaling, while none of the other natives had yet more than begun work. About twenty feet from the hut and on the very edge of the floe, he had built a chute of ice for his canoe. Day after day, from sunrise to sunset, he and his men stood watch for whales. He was in the head of the canoe constantly, ready for action, and armed with a harpoon, which was attached to a pole twenty feet long. The men were near by ready at an instant's notice to grasp the canoe by the thwarts and throw it, Mung-gy and all, at the whale.

"It was a week or two before there was a general breaking up of the north pack. But when disintegration once began the ice receded gradually, leaving a channel a mile or so wide along the edge of the grounded shore ice on which we were encamped. With the open water came signs of whales.

"Occasionally faint blows were heard. Now and then we could see spouts. But these forerunners were shy.

"Close behind these were larger whales, that migrated more leisurely. From my point on the lookout, with long glass in hand, I saw them coming, and I signaled it to my men. Mung-gy read it as quickly as they. I watched them make all preparations for action. Mung-gy gave his orders fast, and sandwiched in frequent anxious glances down the edge of the floe.

"He seemed so explicit in his orders and so deliberate in his preparation that I became anxious for the sequel.

"'B-l-o-w.'

"A whale appeared from behind a point of ice. 'B-l-o-w! b-l-o-w! b-l-o-w!'

"The pod seemed to be a large one, for many spoutings were seen and heard.

"On they came, nearer and nearer, rounding over lazily as they rose to spout and breathe.

"Four times the head one spouted; then, with a splash of the water with his flukes, he sounded.

"'How long will he be down? Where will he rise?' Those must have been Mung-gy's thoughts. Certainly they were mine, and I was whaling with him in spirit, entirely oblivious of my own crews.

"There was a commotion in the water, and a huge, black object slowly rose out. It was in front of the chute, but too far away from any possible reach.

"Where would the next one rise?

"Within the shadow of Mung-gy's erect figure, which was cast upon the water, was a stir.

"He carefully poised his long harpoon and shook the coil of line in his hand.

"The men, with firm grasp on the thwarts, waited breathlessly.

"Slowly the whale rose out as he sounded to go down.

"Mung-gy shouted, but the men anticipated him.

"Like a flash he and the canoe were shot off the glassy surface of the chute at the whale.

"Such a splashing as there was!

"Mung-gy darted low and fastened his harpoon with the bunch of pokes attached to it into the whale.

"The men, shouting at the top of their voices, each took other harpoons and scattered up and down the edge of the floe.

"The instant the whale appeared another bunch of pokes was made fast to him.

"He rounded to go down, but the pokes rolled him over on his side, and before he could recover himself a third bunch was made fast. But as he disappeared he swept his flukes about, swamped the canoe, and spilled Mung-gy into the water.

"All the natives were insane with excitement, and they ran wildly up and down the edge of the floe, jabbing a sharp lance into the whale at every opportunity. As they worried him the water became dyed deeply with blood.

"At every rising of the whale it seemed as if Mung-gy was drowned. The canoe was thrashed about mercilessly by the whale's tail until only fragments were left for Mung-gy to cling to.

"At last, completely exhausted and worried almost to death by frequent lancings, the whale lay, buoyed up on top of the water by the pokes, and with a few more thrusts he rolled over—dead.

Mung-gy, now completely chilled through, and nearly drowned, was rescued. Work was soon begun on the whale, and by night, with all the natives working together, he was cut in and the blubber and meat dragged ashore by the dogs, where it was stowed away in caches, as the next winter's supply of food.

"I had become so intensely interested in this struggle that I had forgotten my own crews, and did not know that they, too, had caught a whale. But it was a tame affair compared to the other, for the men sailed in a whaleboat out to the whale, put two bombs into him and rolled him over dead without a struggle."

A pug party is not, as might be inferred from the name, a slugging social. It is usually nothing worse than a talking match.

THE GREAT RESERVATION
AND
Milk River Valley
OF MONTANA
Have just been opened for settlement to the home-seeker. You have a right to a homestead under your government rights. Why not use it before it is too late? Land all free to settlers, and is the only part of the United States where free land suitable for stock and grain raising can be taken, at or near stations on the line of a railroad. You can take your choice from level vally lands or gently rolling bench lands. Soil very rich, and produces all grains and vegetables without irrigation. Climate delightful, being made very mild in Winter by warm Chinooks from the Pacific ocean. Timber, water and coal in abundance. Cheap land seekers' and settlers' tickets. Buy tickets to Glasgow, Chinook (Bowes), Benton, Great Falls, Helena and Butte. Plenty of government land near those points. For further information, the new pamphlet, "The Great Reservation", maps, etc., apply to F. I. Whitney, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, St. P., M. & M. R'y, St. Paul, Minn.

SO HARD!

I stood at the side of an open grave;
They brought the casket that held my dead,
And placed it there, a cross at the head;
I tried so hard to be brave.

The singers chanted their mournful song,
The pastor offered a plaintive prayer,
And many true friends surrounded me there
I tried so hard to be strong.

I thought how quickly had passed the term
Which we had spent together on earth,
Yet [illegible] in value it at its worth;
I tried so hard to be firm.

There lay the dear one, lifeless and cold,
Gently confined in the narrow case;
Never again should I see that face;
I tried so hard to be bold.

The dead had shielded me oft from harm,
Had given me counsel wise and kind,
Had loved me with heart and strength and mind;
I tried so hard to be calm.

It seemed at that moment I had no will;
I could not reason, I could not forget,
I longed to cry out aloud, and yet
I tried so hard to be still.

I planted three flowers of many a hue,
The bloom and blossom each summer more;
To the memory of the loved one gone
I'll try so hard to be true.

A FEW LETTERS.

They Tell an Interesting Story of Love and Duplicity.

[From Herman Dorman, of Detroit, to Miss Sadie Menton, of Cleveland.]

MY DEAR MISS MENTON—I thought of saying to you what I now intend to write. I meant to say it the night before you left for your visit to Cleveland, but somehow my courage failed me. A friend of yours told me that you had rejected many suitors because you believed their motives to be mercenary. I could not bear to have the deep love I feel for you tinged with such a suspicion and I had resolved to be silent forever. But since you have been away this city seems to me so utterly dreary and desolate that I have made up my mind to at least learn the worst. I may say—and my only excuse for saying it is the remark I have alluded to—that I believe my own fortune is nearly if not quite equal to yours. I do not say this boastfully, but merely to show you that in offering you my hand and heart I am not actuated by any other desire than to hope for yours in return. In case you should look favorably upon my suit I shall be only too glad if your wealth is so arranged as to be entirely beyond the control of any one but yourself.

My dear Miss Menton, I love you truly, devotedly and unselfishly, and I love you for yourself alone. What is your answer?

With deepest affection, yours,
HERMAN DORMAN.

[From Miss Sadie Menton at Cleveland to Mr. Herman Dorman at Detroit.]

MY DEAR MR. DORMAN—I can assure you that no such thought ever entered my mind regarding you. I think I am somewhat of a judge of character and can tell the false from the true. I shall be here some weeks longer, and if you happen to be in Cleveland before I return, I shall be very glad to welcome you.

Yours,
SADIE MENTON.

[From Mr. John Menton, Detroit, to his sister Sadie, in Cleveland.]

MY DEAR SAD—Might I respectfully ask if you've gone crazy? Herman Dorman! of all men in the world! Now, I did think once that you had some sense, but I see you are just like the rest of them. Trust a girl for picking out the very worst man in her set every time. Dorman wants your cash, that's the brutal long and short of it. Now, Harry Raymond is worth ten thousand of such as that shyster Dorman. If you were poor you would have married Harry, you know you would. You liked him, and he has been in love with you ever since you were in the high school. Now you have driven him out to a Texas ranch and have actually engaged yourself to that rascal! My dear Sadie, I have no patience with you. Why is it that an honest man generally has no chance with a plausible scoundrel in the favor of a good and high-minded woman?

Anyhow, don't let the engagement be announced for awhile yet. You will do that much at least for me.

Your brother, JOHN.

[From Miss Sadie Menton, Cleveland, to John Menton, Detroit.]

MY DEAR BROTHER—You must not write to me again in the strain of your last letter. You know that I mean what I say. I will overlook it this time, because doubtless what I wrote you took you by surprise. You are entirely mistaken in your estimate of Mr. Dorman's character. He has admitted to me with sorrow that men rarely understand and sympathize with him. His has been a life of earnest work and unselfish devotion to duty. There is nothing of the boon companion about him as there was about Mr. Raymond. If Herman had received the answer I gave to Mr. Raymond, he would merely have buried the sorrow in his heart and devoted himself to his duty instead of going dramatically off to Texas and making an absurd cowboy of himself. You must not say I drove him there. Herman is entirely disinterested, and to prove it to you I have only to say that his fortune is quite equal to my own. I shall do as you request about keeping the engagement secret for a time. Your affectionate sister,

SADIE.

[From John Menton, Detroit, to Miss Sadie Menton, Cleveland.]

SADIE—Do you know that there is an estimable and valuable, if somewhat uninteresting volume named "Bradstreet's?" Look up the standing of Mr. Herman Dorman. "Fortune equal to your own." Bosh! Distrust a man whom women like and with whom his fellow men don't sympathize.

JOHN.

[From Harry Raymond, Slaughter Ranch, Tex., to John Menton, Detroit.]

MY DEAR JOHN—I'm a wild and woolly cowboy, and don't you forget it. There is more buckskin than culture about me now. My chief recreation is shooting holes in the air around a tenderfoot when he comes to visit the ranch. He generally thinks I was born this way, and that I have an unquenchable thirst for innocent blood. John, I'm afraid I haven't gone far enough west, or am too far south, or something. I don't forget as easily as I thought I would. I've evidently struck the wrong latitude. If you notice the slightest trace of lingering regret at my absence don't stop to write, but telegraph. There is a telegraph line to the fort near here, and some of the boys are in every night to fill up with forty rod, and they'll bring a message out. The moment I get a dispatch I'll take a vestibuled mule train to the nearest railway station so quick that the mules won't know what struck them.

I'd about as soon ride a Woodward avenue car as a broncho, anyhow. Yours, HARRY.

[From Herman Dorman, Palace Hotel, Cleveland, to Isaac Van Brunsteeln, pawnbroker, Detroit.]

MY DEAR VAN B.—Send me $500 as soon as possible to the Palace Hotel here. I'll pay you within three months at any rate of interest you like to put on.

HERMAN DORMAN.

[From I. Van B., Detroit, to H. Dorman, Cleveland.]

DEAR SIR—I would rather see the $400 I have already lent, than lend any more on such poor security as your word for payment.

VAN BRUNSTEELN.

[From H. Dorman, Cleveland, to I. Van B., Detroit.]

Look here, Ikey, if you ever want to see your $400 you'll lend me what I want P. D. Q. Here's the situation: I'm here at an expensive hotel and must keep up style. Every thing depends on it. I'm engaged to Miss Menton, of Detroit. And that's worth half a million, as you know. You can easily find out the truth of what I say by asking —— or —— to both of whom she has written about our approaching marriage. Now don't fail to send the cash, and the moment we are married I'll make her fork over the amount. Yours, H. DORMAN.

[From I. Van B. to H. Dorman, Cleveland.]

DEAR SIR—I inclose you N. Y. draft for $900. I also inclose a three months' note for 1,000, which please sign and return. Engagements are uncertain and I can not take the risk for less. Yours,

VAN BRUNSTEELN.

[From H. Dorman to I. Van B.]

MY DEAR ISAAC—You are not half so sharp as I thought you were. I have cashed the draft. Thanks. But I have torn up the note. I will pay you all right enough if you don't press me too much, but not such rascally usury as that. You know you have no legal remedy—such extortion is illegal, anyhow—so you'll have to trust to

Yours truly, H. D.

[From Isaac Van Brunsteeln, Detroit, to John Menton.]

DEAR SIR—I called at your office to-day, but you were out. I therefore leave this note for you. I understand that Herman Dorman is to marry your sister. He owes me $1,000 which he refuses to pay. I have a letter written by him in which he admits that he marries her for her money. If this letter is worth $2,000 to you you are welcome to it. I. VAN BRUNSTEELN.

[Message by messenger boy from John Menton to Isaac Van Brunsteeln.]

Bring letter or send it by bearer. If it is what you say it is I will pay the sum you ask. JOHN MENTON.

[From John Menton, Detroit, to Miss Sadie Menton, Cleveland.]

MY DEAR SADIE—I inclose you a letter which came into my hands. It speaks for itself, and besides relates to a most dishonorable action on the part of the man who wrote it. It is from a scoundrel of one class to a scoundrel of another, but there was no honor in either of the thieves in this case.

Yours, JOHN.

[Telegram.]

Harry Raymond, Fort Broncho, Tex.:
Come home, you idiot. JOHN MENTON.

[From the society columns of the Detroit Free Press.]

The engagement is announced of Henry D. Raymond, of this city, to Miss Sadie Menton, daughter of the late Samuel Menton. As both Mr. Raymond and Miss Menton are well known in Detroit society it is expected that the wedding will be one of the brilliant events of the closing season. Mr. Raymond but recently returned from his ranch in Texas.—Luke Sharp, in Detroit Free Press.

DON'T EAT HASTILY.

The Habit Ruined the Great Napoleon and May Also Ruin You.

It is a mistake to eat quickly. Mastication performed in haste must be imperfect, even with the best of teeth, and due admixture of the salivary secretion with the food can not take place.

When a crude mass of inadequately crushed muscular fiber, or undivided solid material of any description is thrown into the stomach, it acts as a mechanical irritant, and sets up a condition in the mucous membrane lining of that organ which greatly impedes, if it does not altogether prevent, the process of digestion.

When the practice of eating quickly and filling the stomach with unprepared food is habitual, the digestive organ is rendered incapable of performing its proper functions, says Medical Classics. Either a much larger quantity of food than would be necessary under natural conditions is required, or the system suffers from lack of nourishment.

Those animals which were intended to feed hurriedly were either gifted with the power of rumination or provided with gizzards. Man is not so furnished, and it is fair to assume that he was intended to eat slowly. We must apologize for reminding our readers of facts so familiar. The matter may seem a small one, but it is not so.

Just as a man may go on for years with defective teeth, imperfectly masticating his food, and wondering why he suffers from indigestion, so a man may habitually live under an affliction of hurried dinners without knowing why he is not well, or how easily the cause of his illness might be remedied.

The habit of eating fast and carelessly is supposed to have paralyzed Napoleon on two of the most critical occasions of his life—the battles of Borodino and Leipsic. On each of these occasions he is known to have been suffering from indigestion.

On the third day of Dresden, too (as the German novelist, Hoffman, who was in the town, asserts), the Emperor's energies were impaired by the effects of a shoulder of mutton stuffed with onions. There can be no doubt that Napoleon's irregularities as to meals injured his health and shortened his life.

STATISTICAL FACTS.

Reliable Information on a Variety of Interesting Topics.

A German statistician says: There are at present 3,064 languages spoken by the inhabitants of our globe, whose religious convictions are divided between 1,000 different confessions of faith. The number of males is nearly equal to that of the females. The average duration of life is 33 years. One-fourth of the population of the earth dies before attaining the seventeenth year. Of 1,000 persons only one reaches the age of 100 years, and not more than six that of 65 years. The entire population of the globe is upward of 1,300,000,000, of whom 35,214,000 die every year; 96,480 every day; 4,020 every hour; 67 every minute and 1 and a fraction every second; on the other hand the births amount to 36,792,000 every year; 100,800 every day; 4,200 every hour; 70 every minute; 1 and a fraction every second. Married people live longer than the unmarried, the temperate and industrious longer than the gluttons and idle, and civilized nations longer than uncivilized. Tall persons enjoy a greater longevity than small ones. Women have a more favorable chance of life before reaching their 50th year than men, but a less favorable one after that period. The proportion of married persons to single ones is as 75 to 1,000. Persons born in spring have a more robust constitution than those born at other seasons. Births and deaths occur more frequently at night than in the daytime. It may finally be added that only one-fourth of the male inhabitants of the globe grow up to carry arms or perform military service.

OLD D. D.

SHE was as trim-built a little body as ever gladdened the eyes of a lover of grace, with irregular features that might drive a photographer to despair but would charm the heart of a true artist.

Around her, on the floor, chairs, bed and every other resting place, were many and gorgeous articles of new apparel for man and woman; three immense trunks stood in the middle of the large room, they were each half full and it certainly seemed a hopeless case if the balance of the garments were to be crowded into the space remaining.

It was night, late, and the great boarding-house was in silence.

As the little woman roused herself with an effort and was about to resume her work there was the noise of a closing door, then halting, stumbling footsteps upon the stairs.

She had paused at the first sound and listened intently. The door which she stood facing was slowly opened and into the room came edging, sheepishly, a big, handsome, boyish young man. But his face was flushed, his fair hair disordered; he stood a picture of shame and semi-intoxication.

"Billy Moore!" began his girl-wife, in a gust of passion, "I think you are as mean as mean can be. Here you go out and leave me to break my back with all this packing, and never come home until midnight, and then come home drunk, yes, drunk! It's mean, that's what it is, and I won't stand it!"

"That's right, Henny, pitch into me. Oh, pitch into me; give it to me good; I won't say nothin'. But you needn't bother to pack any more."

"Not pack any more?" repeated the girl in astonishment; "why?"

"'Cause we can't go, that's why. There! now it's all out!" and the poor, weak sinner dashed his hat upon the floor, sank into a chair, and buried his face in his hands.

William Moore, just of age, good-looking, soft-hearted and headed, had married jolly little Henrietta Miles, late a favorite of the Grand Opera-House Corps de Ballet, thereby pleasing himself and entirely alienating all the few relatives of his deceased parents. The sharp, pretty little woman whom he had won loved him truly, and she was worthy the affection of any man, child of the footlights though she had been from earliest infancy.

Three days before the executors had paid to the young man a little over four thousand dollars, all that remained of his father's estate. With this sum the young couple were about to start for the West, where Moore had arranged to take an interest in an established business that would give him a good living and opportunity for future prosperity.

This, the last evening, he had gone out "for a few minutes, just to say 'good-bye' to some of the boys," promising to return very soon and finish the necessary packing.

When the wife saw Willie, whom she fully recognized that she had to protect and uphold, when she saw him penitent and in tears, her hasty anger vanished; she went to his side and cuddled him.

"Come, Billy boy," she said, coaxingly, "tell us all about it; out with it and let's have the worst over."

"Oh, Henny!" he mumbled, "I'm 'shamed to look at you. I went down to the corner, and got into a little game, just a little one, for fun, you know, with Chick Lawton, and I drinked a little too much, and old D. D. he came in and rung himself into the game, and kept a-drawin' me on and on, and—and so it happened."

"Is it all gone, Willie?"

"Every cent—every cussed cent!"

Her face set hard, and she could not stifle the sigh that came from her heart.

"Oh, Henny!" sobbed the man; "I don't care for myself, it's you—when I think of you!"

"You ought to have thought of me before, Willie, then it would a-been some good!"

"It was all the fault of old D. D., Henny, 'twas him that done it. Chick Lawton wouldn't a-took all a fellow had. He's some white, Chick is—"

"Oh, bother your Chick—Chick Lawton! the chicken-hearted, grinning dude! I know him better 'n ever you care to. He's a no good sneak, that's what he is. But I didn't think D. D. would a-done like that."

BILLY MOORE.

"That old D. D. ain't got no heart, Henny, nary heart, all the boys say so; ask any of them, ask Chick—"

"Don't come with any more of your chickin' that Chick at me, Will Moore. He's a little beau, your Chick is, that thinks a girl can't be honest or respectable just because she dances in the ballet. I wouldn't wipe my shoes on the cad. Old D. D. don't set up for nothing but a sport, but if a girl carries herself straight he's always the real gentleman to her. I'll say that for him."

The story told and her anger relieved by the few explosions, this quick-witted, self-reliant wee woman set to work at once to do the best she could under defeat.

"Come, Willie," she said, and her voice at least was cheerful, "get to bed now and sleep so as to wake up spry and sober. I've enough in my purse to square us here. All this trotting harness that we bought to astonish the natives out West we will sell, then we will go away from here, and you can get work, or I can get a engagement and go back to the old biz until you work your way. It's all right now, Billy, only—" and she knelt down beside him and forced his face in front of hers, "only, Billy, promise me, promise me here that you'll never, never again—"

"Henny, I promise you, so help me, I'll never touch another drink or card, so help me."

"Here, kiss the book," and she held up here red, sweet lips.

The husband was petted, tucked into bed and soon slept the sleep of health, exhaustion and light-mindedness. But the young wife sat for an hour and thought deeply, and before she sought slumber remained long on her knees in prayer.

In the morning, bright and early, she hurried her Willie off to find a purchaser while she arranged the goods to best advantage for display. It was a sore task on her brave heart, for she dearly loved finery, and for the first time in her life had been able to indulge in it without stint. But she never flinched as she shook out and placed all the pretty gowns and other vanities. She was on her knees at a trunk when there came a tap at the door.

"Come in!" she cried, carelessly.

The door was opened and a man stood there, silent and immovable.

She sprang to her feet and faced him, her body crouched, her eyes blazing like those of an infuriated tiger cat.

The man was Dudley Dodge, professional gambler. The reverend title of D. D., irreverently bestowed upon him by all acquaintances, was not belied in his looks. Tall, smooth-faced, faultless in dress, with no display of jewelry, and a calm, stern demeanor that nothing was ever known to disturb, he looked like any thing but what might be the popular idea of a leader in his class.

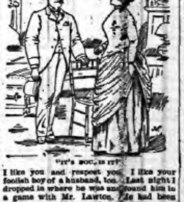
"Mrs. Moore," he said, with a slight bow, and removing his hat, "your husband is not in, I'm glad of it—I wish to see you alone," and before she had time to utter a word he was in the room and the door was closed behind him.

Then the gasping little woman found her voice.

"It's you, is it! You villain! You who made my Willie drunk and robbed him of all he had in the world. Yes, you, oh! I don't know what's bad enough for me to call you—and then you have the cheek to come here and grin over your devil's work. I hate you—get out this room!"

While she panted, breathless with fury, old D. D. opened his mouth and spake.

"Mrs. Moore, listen to me, if you please. You are a good girl. I've watched you long and know how you have carried yourself.



"IT'S DOC, IS IT?"

I like you and respect you. I like your foolish boy of a husband, too. Last night I dropped in where he was and found him in a game with Mr. Lawton. He had been drinking, and I knew what would happen. I insisted upon playing with them, and in an hour or two had checks signed by your husband for every dollar he had in bank."

"I know it, and you—"

"Wait, Mrs. Moore. I told you I liked and respected you. I can afford to indulge in weakness sometimes. Here are your husband's checks." He opened his hand. "What I now do with them you will please tell no one but him—otherwise you will injure my reputation for sanity."

And old D. D. tore those checks into small bits and scattered them at her feet.

"Oh! oh! D. D.—Mr. Dodge! How can I—what can I say to thank you?" she stammered.

"Say not a word. It pleases me to do this for you. I like you even better for what you said in anger. Pack up now and get away from here; tell your husband, from me, to drop the drink and the play, he has no head or nerve for either. Good-bye! If one like me can say such a thing, I wish you God bless you," and he held out his hand.

If "the gurls" had heard of what that little woman did next, they'd have said: "That's just Henny Miles all over!" She put her arms around that ancient rascal's neck and kissed him full and fair on the lips.

Then as he hastily turned out of the door she collapsed into a heap on the floor, sobbing, woman-like, her heart out, in joy and thankfulness.

There was a suspicious moisture in the steel-gray eyes of old D. D. as he slowly descended the stairs; as he stood on the front steps a dapper "gent" rushed up to him. It was Mr. Lawton.

"Hello! D. D.! whatcher doin' here, sir?" he exclaimed. "What's bringing you out so bad this early? I see Billy Moore rushin' up street hit ergo; kinder down on 's luck I guess. Thought I'd run up and see Henny a bit, mebby I might give her a helpin' hand just now—I'm a soft-hearted feller, I am."

"Mrs. Moore is busy now, I have just left her," said D. D., slowly, and with his eyes fixed on the other man's face. "I am sure Mrs. Moore does not wish to see company. Don't go up, you'd much better walk down street with me. Come!"

That "come" sounded like a command, and Mr. Chick Lawton went the man to anger D. D.

He trotted down street beside his silent companion.

"Come in here and take a drink, old man," he said at last. "Derned if you don't give a feller fever'n ager, you're worse'n a ice-cream freezer, you old turnip, you. Come in and drink somethin' to warm the cockles of your heart, if you got one."

"Go you and get your drink; excuse me; I very seldom drink, and just now I have on my lips what would not wash off with liquor for the world!"

And there was a warm feeling under the spotless linen of old D. D.

Had he a heart? ALEX. DUKE BAILIE.

LOVE, NOT LUCRE.

How His Young Cashier Dispelled an Old Banker's Suspicion.

The president of the Swamptown bank was sitting in his library at home the other evening when, according to Texas Siftings, a servant announced that his cashier was in the parlor and desired to see him. The president started, turned a little pale, and muttered: "It has come at last! A confession, undoubtedly. Why did I not have that man watched! Wonder he didn't skip to Canada at once." Then he ascended to the parlor, where the following conversation took place:

Cashier (advancing hesitatingly and speaking in an embarrassed way)—I hope you will forgive me, Mr. Goldbags, but—

President Goldbags (sternly)—Forgive you, sir! There is and should be no forgiveness for an offense like yours. Too much leniency is the reason why these crimes are augmenting in number.

"Crimes, sir!"

"Yes, crimes. I call things by their right names."

"But you will pardon me—"

"Pardon you! No, indeed, I won't. Besides that, only the Governor of the State has the pardoning power."

"I must confess, sir—"

"Well, go on and confess, then. That is about all there is left to do, I suppose [bitterly]; but I have suspected this for some time, and I have been a fool not to have investigated you thoroughly."

"Is it, then, so great an offense? Are not most young men impelled that way? Did you not yourself—"

"Silence, sir! How dare you insinuate, miserable man, that ever I was guilty of betraying the confidence—"

"Betray confidence! I love her and she loves me. I wish to marry her, and so—"

"Love her! Marry her! Who are you talking about?"

"Why, your daughter, of course. You said you had long suspected it and I thought you knew; but it is no crime, sir, indeed it is not."

"Then you are not a defaulter?"

"No!"

"And you do not contemplate skipping to Canada with the funds of the bank?"

"Never thought of such a thing."

"No confession to make, eh?"

"Only a confession of love, Mr. Goldbags, that's all. I ask the hand of your daughter."

"Well, she is yours. You take a great load off my mind."

"In taking your daughter?"

"No, hang it, in removing my suspicions. But I say, son-in-law, don't take in Canada on your wedding trip. The very name makes me shudder."

The young man promised and they parted with lightened hearts.

PECULIAR NAMES.

Choice Gems from an Old Report of the British Registrar General.

The Puritans brought out with them from England some very queer Scripture names, and long after the reinstated Stuarts had in their turn given place to the Dutch dynasty, the Bible continued to furnish a large portion of the given names of the descendants of the Pilgrims. These remarkable cognomens have nearly died out in this country, but we find that others, quite as curious, though for the most part of a widely different style and character, exist at the present day in England.

A friend lent us, a short time ago, an abstract of an old report of the British Registrar General, in which the marriages, deaths and births in the United Kingdom during a period of twelve years are enumerated. The index to this document is the most interesting portion of it, as will be seen by a few items which we propose to give.

In the first place, it appears that Smith is not, as we have hitherto supposed, the most common of all the Anglo-Saxon patronymics. At the date of the report there resided in the British Isles 13,429 Joneses, 12,307 Smiths—majority in favor of the Joneses, 792. The Williamses stand next on the muster roll. They foot up 8,743. The Browns and the Whites also figure prominently in the directory, though far behind the three illustrious families first mentioned.

From the enormous aggregate of names, amounting to several millions, the compiler of the abstract referred to has picked out some choice gems, a few of which we select for the amusement of our readers:

"Jane Stickalerum; Pay Day; Turnerica Henrica Ulrica de Gloria de Lavinia Rebecca Turner; Matilda French Onion; Sansparcil Scadup (in plain English, Unequaled Rascal); Hostilina Iphegenia Maria Hypsebie Wadge; Zaphnathpaaneah Drayton; Acts Apostles Tong; Betsy Toast Divine; Samson-Cashcade Kitchen; Fighton Jones; Prince Albert Gammon and Albertina Regina Victoria Gotha Bolt."

There are hundreds of other names in the catalogue, equally absurd, but the above will suffice as samples.

THE CHAIR BACK.

Used in the Medieval Era as a Protection from Attacks.

The changes in the height of the chair back, says the writer of "Romance of Furniture," have not been purely arbitrary. Its early mission was not only one of support, but also one of defense from any sudden attack in the rear, an explanation likely to lessen enthusiasm over medieval life. It should be remarked, however, that even if the master of the house deemed it necessary to put his person in safety he did not have any serious apprehension for the other dwellers in the house or for visitors, so that in each room there was one seat with a very high back reserved for the seigniour, while the others had either no backs at all or very insignificant ones. Thus there came about a development sufficiently curious, and the seat with a high back became by custom the mark of dignity and power.

Finally the wig became responsible for revolution. When the wig began to descend to the back the high chair back became very uncomfortable. The curls of hair, wool and silk which composed the monumental structure that every fashionable man believed he ought to wear entangled themselves in projections or adhered to the fabric, and produced in the toilet a disorder most offensive to the majestic dignity of the time. One alternative then presents itself, either to renounce the wig or to cut down the backs of the chairs. They resigned themselves to this last measure, and the wig comes out the victor in this singular contest. Afterward the high chair back lost all significance.

In the eighteenth century there was a new and last revolution. The chair back, which in the preceding century had diminished in size, suddenly becomes pliable; as it were, takes a rounded form, becomes small, convenient, agreeable and ceases completely to be solemn.

A PLEASANT SURPRISE.

A Story Showing That Appearances Are Very Frequently Deceptive.

The apparel does not always proclaim the man; in other words, appearances are often deceptive. A friend told Ed R. Pritchard, the ubiquitous manipulator of the Arkansaw Traveler's Kaleidoscope, recently the following story, which aptly illustrates the point:

"I was once," he said, "on board an English man-of-war, during an extended cruise to the Mediterranean. Among the officers in command was a little fellow, a Second Lieutenant, I think, who was what we to-day would call a howling dude. He was extremely dandified in his dress, always carried a light cane when on deck, and wore an eye-glass with all the hauteur and grace of the typical English swell. Moreover, he was considered a martinet by the men under him, not one of whom seemed to either like or respect him, even as a superior.

"One day, when the weather was fine and we were running along before a favorable wind, the engines scarcely working, the cry rang out: 'Man overboard!' Our little dandy, as we had come to call the officer, was pacing the deck, jauntily swinging his cane, and now and then issuing orders to the men when the alarm was given. Quick as thought he rushed to the side of the vessel from whence had come the cry, and in an instant had plunged into the water to the rescue. Boats were lowered as quickly as possible, and in a short time both rescuer and rescued were back on board ship, where the gallant little Lieutenant was heartily applauded for his courage and his promptness in risking his own life to save that of a fellow creature. He took it all very coolly, however, barely acknowledging the congratulations and words of praise which every body now seemed so anxious to bestow.

"It was afterwards learned that he had often distinguished himself in like manner during his career in the navy, and had won medals enough in recognition for his services to have covered his breast, had he seen fit to have made a display of them. He was a splendid swimmer and a fine all-round athlete, and was, besides, as cool and courageous in times of danger as he appeared to be when taking his afternoon promenade on the quarterdeck; but to have judged him by his dress and manners, one would have pronounced him an insufferable snob, a howling little swell, possessing neither brains, muscle nor courage."

GAMBLING TRAVELERS.

An Exhortation Whose Truth and Justice Is Self-Evident.

An Omaha traveler addresses his comrades through the Merchant Traveler as follows: It is with deep regret that I see the habit of card playing getting a firm hold on the traveling men, and this habit is often indulged in at a sacrifice of time which should be devoted to business. I will give one instance, and who of us but have seen this repeated many times over? A few days ago the writer was sitting in the hotel of a Nebraska town engaged in writing when a number of traveling men entered. Having just arrived in the town, they had hardly had time to register when one of the number proposed they have a game of high five, and a four-handed game was at once made up. This was three o'clock in the afternoon. I left there at eleven o'clock that night and the game was still on, they having stopped only long enough to eat supper, and not one of them had been out to call on his customers. Now, boys, I will leave it to your impartial judgment. Is it right to thus spend the time that should be devoted to business. Is that what we draw our salaries for? The firms we represent expect that we will spend our time in trying to make sales, and not in card playing, and just in the proportion that we make our services valuable to our firms, can we expect to receive higher salaries. This can be accomplished only by giving our time and study to our business. Seen from a financial standpoint, we can not afford to play cards, and while we may not all have the same religious views, let us have respect for the Sabbath, and not spend the day in card playing. It is needless to say we could give the names of a good many salesmen who have taken their own lives after losing their own and some of the firm's money at the card table, and this was not done in a gambling den, but in a game with other traveling men who should have been their friends. There is also another view to take of this matter, which is of far greater importance than the loss of time and money. Card playing is but another of the many traps which the devil has set to catch the souls of men, and can we afford to sacrifice our immortal souls through this indulgence of habit? Fellow travelers, is it not time to call a halt? Brace up! Attend to business and be honest and true to yourselves.

WHY EVERY BODY SMILED.

A Notice Which Shouldn't Have Been Read Under the Circumstances.

According to the Boston Transcript, a story that goes back to the meetin' house in Wrentham is one of a worthy man named Habbakuk P——, a resident of the town, and a faithful attendant upon worship, who had been blessed with four wives, one after another. Habbakuk was rigidly orthodox, as his name seemed to demand, and was always in his pew on the Sabbath. He was there in his conspicuous pew, with No. 4 by his side, and on the first Sunday morning after their marriage. It was a balmy June day, and the zephyrs from the open window toyed playfully with the bride's white satin bonnet ribbons and the groom's silken locks. There was a stranger in the pulpit who had exchanged for the day with the venerable Mr. F——, the pastor of the church. After reading a few Scripture passages the stranger proceeded to read a notice which he had found in the Bible, and which was as follows:

"Mr. Habbakuk P—— desires the prayers of the congregation that the death of his wife may be sanctified to him for his spiritual good."

Then, when the congregation was between stupefaction and explosion, the clergyman went on with the services at a rapid rate. He was at a loss to know why the congregation seemed to be throughout the remainder of the services on the point of laughter, but at dinner Mrs. F——, the pastor's wife, explained to him that Habbakuk P—— sat three rows from the front in the broad aisle with his brand new wife, and he had read an old notice that Mr. F—— had probably been using for a bookmark ever since the death of wife No. 3.

Doctor McCosh Caught.

One day, says the Philadelphia North American, Dr. McCosh, when president of Princeton College, came into the mental philosophy class and said: "Ah, young gentlemen, I have an impression! Now, young gentlemen," continued the doctor, as he touched his head with his forefinger, "can you tell me what an impression is?" No answer. "What! No one knows? No one can tell me what an impression is?" exclaimed the doctor, looking up and down the class. "I know," said young Alan Arthur. "An impression is a dent in a soft place." "Young gentlemen," said the doctor, removing his hand from his forehead and growing red in the face, "you are excused for the day."

A WOODPECKER'S JOKE.

The Bird Was Very Funny, But Paid Dearly for His Little Trick.

H. B. Parker, of Salem, Ill., relates a good bird story, which he sends to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat: "I was engaged in the monument and tomb-stone business," he writes, "and made and put up in the Catholic cemetery of a Southern Illinois town a stone imitation of a rustic cross, standing on a pile of rocks. Some few days after I set the cross up I had some other work to do in the cemetery, and my attention was called to a large woodpecker of the yellow-hammer variety very industriously tapping away at my cross. I said to myself: 'Old fellow, I don't think you will pan out very well on that stump.' I watched him with some curiosity. He came to the same conclusion apparently in a little while, and flew to a dead tree that had been left standing about twenty feet from the cross, tried that awhile, and then flew back to the cross, seemingly puzzled to account for things, then backward and forward for some little time, testing the difference apparently, when all of a sudden he left and started for the timber, about half a mile distant.

"I continued my work, thinking no more of the matter, but in the course of half an hour, I should judge, on looking up I saw some ten or twelve birds over my head making toward the cross, one seemingly in the lead, who lit on the cross and commenced tapping for dear life. Most of the others lit on the tree, but finally all got to work on the cross. I sat down and watched the proceedings. The original woodpecker seemed to be running the business, as he would fly back and forward from tree to cross till he had them all at work picking away. They did not seem to be very well satisfied, but he would, as it looked to me, encourage them by seemingly getting something for his work by his actions. I so judged anyway. At last he flew back on the tree by himself, watching them, and I thought I could see a gleam of fun in his eyes. He then, as they were all busily engaged, gave one of his woodpeckerian screeches, and left for the woods in high glee. The rest looked at each other, and I came to the conclusion that they were settling in their minds, if they had any, that they were sold and looked mad; and they all started hot-foot for the timber.

"It was then about time for dinner, and I started for home somewhat amused at the affair.

"After dinner I went back to finish my work, and had to pass the cross on my way to the job I was doing, and noticed a good many feathers lying around in the lot, all from the yellow-hammer bird. I couldn't account for them, and went up to the cross to examine more closely, when I discovered a dead woodpecker lying on the rock at the foot of the cross, every feather picked as clean as possible and his head all picked to pieces. I came to the conclusion that it was the joker who had paid so dear for his fun."

GREAT LESSONS.

The recent Centennial observances in the City of New York were certainly grand in conception and execution, and in several particulars unfolded for thoughtful consideration lessons of value.

The inspiring display of citizen soldiery, fifty thousand military-equipped and [illegible] men marching in line, was an event calculated to inspire and [illegible] pride.

Fifty thousand soldiers in battle-array, and not among them a single conscript or hireling. All cheerful volunteers, all independent and intelligent American citizens, engaged in legitimate business and [illegible] pursuits, all self-supporting, self-respecting, sovereign rulers of the great Republic of Washington, and ready to fight, should necessity demand, for the maintenance and perpetuity of the sacred cause of Constitutional Freedom.

That was an object lesson for monarchists to ponder.

Then again, on the following day, the magnificent sight of over three thousand public school boys walking in orderly procession, each one animated with the patriotic spirit of the occasion, many of them the sons of poor parents, but all equally [illegible], and all rich in possessing the priceless facilities for acquiring useful knowledge offered by the free educational system of our country. Three thousand two hundred manly lads, future participants in business, social and public affairs, passing in dignified review before the President of the United States, who [illegible] stood uncovered in the presence of such a hope-inspiring assemblage.

That, too, was a glorious object lesson.

[illegible]

The Centennial address of Bishop Potter in old St. Paul's Church, New York last week, was a remarkable and [illegible] commingling of praise and censure.

After paying an elaborate, just and eloquent tribute to the exalted personal and public virtues of Washington, the Bishop, without fear or favor, criticised with [illegible] the depravity of modern political practices, and therefrom drew a vivid contrast. He spoke on behalf of right principles, without disparaging any [illegible] individual or party.

He said:

"A generation which regards its descent from the founders of the Republic seems largely in danger of forgetting their [illegible]. They were few in numbers, they were poor in worldly possessions—the sum of the fortune of the richest among them would afford a fine [illegible] for the scorn of the plutocrat of today—but they had an invincible confidence in the truth of those principles in which the foundations of the Republic had been laid, and they had an unselfish purpose to maintain them."

That was a well-directed thrust at the plutocracy of the present day, a class of wealthy political leaders and aspirants, who [illegible] to grasp governing power through the unscrupulous use of money, and discard integrity and decency for the sake of personal ambition or gain.

Such [illegible] politicians, high-professing as they may be, and by whatever partisan name called, they are to be found in both the Democratic and Republican parties, are neither friends to the honor of country nor to the welfare of honest people, and should be driven by popular sentiment into retirement.

Again the Bishop said:

"The conception of the National Government as a huge machine, existing mainly for the purpose of rewarding partisan service—this was a conception so alien to the character and conduct of Washington and his associates that it seems grotesque even to speak of it. It would be interesting to imagine the first President of the United States confronted with some one who had ventured to approach him upon the basis of what are now commonly known as 'practical politics.' But the conception is impossible."

The attaining of political ends regardless of [illegible], however corrupt, the [illegible] of principles for base partisan purposes, and the bartering of official places as mere marketable commodities, constitute "practical politics" of the present age. Bishop Potter did right and deserves thanks for publicly denouncing it. Washington had no affinity with such a thing, as his own words testify. It was he who, when importuned for office, thus replied:

"Should it be my fate to administer the Government I will go to the Chair under no pre-engagement of any kind or nature whatever. And when in it, I will, to the best of my judgment, discharge the duties of the office with that impartiality and zeal for the public good which ought never to suffer connections of blood or friendship to have the least sway on decisions of a public nature."

There was no [illegible] politics about Washington.

Country, not self, prompted and controlled his every public act.

The Bishop further remarked:

"On this high level moved the first President of the Republic. To it must we who are the heirs of her sacred interests be not unwilling to ascend, if we are to guard our glorious heritage."

That was sounding the key-note of imperative duty for every patriotic American citizen.

Ascend is the proper watchword!

Ascend from the foul miasma of modern party politics into the pure and invigorating atmosphere of Washingtonian patriotism.

The County Road From Plainfield to Elizabeth.

Following is the course of road No. 3, designated by the Board of Chosen Freeholders as one of the county roads which the county will hereafter have to keep in repair, and for which work this city will be obliged to contribute its share of the cost.

The road leads from Elizabeth to Plainfield, beginning at West Jersey street at the end of the stone pavement in the city of Elizabeth and following the line of said street, its various courses, passing under the Central railroad bridge at Elmora, thence following the line of North avenue, its various courses passing through the townships of Union, Cranford and Westfield, crossing under [illegible] railroad bridge at Broad street, Westfield, to North avenue, thence following the course of North avenue to the South side of Richmond street, in the city of Plainfield.

—The highest point in the State of New Jersey is Kittatinny mountain, 1,803 feet above sea level.

BOROUGH COUNCIL MEETING.

The Borough Council met in regular session Friday night, all the members being present. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved, and the regular order of business was taken up.

Sundry petitions for peddler's, cartman's, express and scavenger licenses were read, referred and granted. Other petitions presented and referred as follows:

One asking for a lamp on Duer street, near Green Brook road; another for a crosswalk at Grove street and Park place.

A petition was also received from property owners on Willow avenue, asking Council to macadamize that thoroughfare from Washington avenue to a point West known as the "farm" line, said petitioners agreeing to contribute one-half of the cost, provided, however, that it did not exceed $1,000. Referred to the Street Committee.

The Clerk's monthly statement showed these figures: Balance on hand at time of making last report, $52.94; received for licenses, etc., $132.50; total $185.44.

Claims were presented and subsequently ordered paid, as follows: T. W. Morrison, $41.50; P. Hagerty, $7; W. A. Vaughorn, $4.75; T. McDonald, $18.25; A. M. Cook & Bro., $6.80; Jos Coddington, $3.75; C. Mundy, $2.50; Geo. Conover, $4.50; Alex. Thorn, $1.25; Carney Bros., $4.50; D. A. Hageman, Jr., $13.30.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. McGee, from the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, reported on the matter of a fire alarm system, adding that it was necessary, first, to clear up the ownership of the bell now in the tower. He stated that the bell was presented to the fire department by Mr. John Taylor Johnston, and in answer to a letter addressed to that gentleman, the latter had replied that the bell was donated for fire purposes and not as personal property. Mr. McGee stated that the committee was not yet ready to definitely report on the best method for establishing a fire alarm system. Referring to the matter of organizing a fire department, he said that a paper was awaiting signatures. The report was filed.

The Street Committee, through Mr. Smalley, reported that negotiations had been made with the First National Bank for [illegible] in pursuance with instructions given the committee; he further stated that the work of scraping and turnpiking the roads was going on; the total amount spent for work on the streets thus far is $601.77.

The Street Committee further recommended, in its report, the macadamizing of Westervelt avenue from the South side of Jackson avenue to Grandview avenue, the property owners along the line agreeing to pay one-half of the expense. The committee submitted bids from two stone-crushing firms, each agreeing to furnish stone at the rate of about 90 cents a ton at the crusher; the same committee also reported in favor of a crosswalk at Grove street and Park place. The report was received.

Mr. Needham, from the Printing Committee, reported recommending the purchase of new furniture for the Council Chamber, painting the walls and kalsomining the ceiling, at an estimated cost of about $225. The report was received, and later on the committee was, upon resolution adopted, authorized to purchase furniture and make the stated repairs.

A resolution by Mr. McGee, authorizing the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee to negotiate a loan of $1,500 for street lighting purposes, was adopted.

The Street Committee made a supplementary report in favor of the petitions for a crosswalk at Park-place and Vine street, and also for a sidewalk in front of No. 70 Duer street. In the former instance the petition was granted, and the committee was instructed to proceed with the work. In the latter instance the committee was authorized to serve the usual notice on the owner of the property, said owner to lay a walk in conformity with the Borough ordinance.

Mr. Emmons offered a resolution to the effect that $1,000 of the road fund for 1889 be set aside for work on Somerset street, to be used where most needed. The resolution was amended, making the amount [illegible], and adopted, Mr. McGee voting "no."

A resolution by Mr. McGee, allowing property owners to macadamize in front of their own property, at their own expense, went through without opposition.

Mr. Emmons submitted a resolution authorizing the Street Committee to investigate and report on the probable cost of grading, and also as to the number of feet the petitioners ask to have macadamized on Willow avenue. Mr. Bettman answered these questions satisfactorily, but the resolution went through "all the same," Messrs McGee and Bettman voting "no."

WILL BENEFIT A FEW.

Mr. Smalley, from the Street Committee introduced a resolution that was neither fish nor fowl. It provides for the macadamizing of a couple of blocks on Westervelt avenue, leaving the rest of that thoroughfare hub deep in mud during the spring. The resolution provides for macadamizing the avenue from Jackson to Westervelt avenues, while that section of the thoroughfare mostly traveled, from Jackson avenue East to Brook avenue, is entirely ignored. The cost of the work was not stated; furthermore it was not [illegible].

Mr. McGee made a stand against the proposed scheme, and argued hard to defeat it, but the resolution was adopted, Mayor Cooley casting the deciding vote in the affirmative. Messrs Buckle, Bettman and McGee voted against the adoption of the resolution. The latter maintained that it was wrong for the Council to meet regularly and order additional streets and avenues macadamized, without even knowing the cost for the work on the same. He also maintained that if Westervelt avenue was to be macadamized, it was but right and just to extend the improvement at least to Brook avenue where it joins the city line. Mr. Buckle agreed with him.

Upon resolution of Mr. Emmons, the following were elected Special Marshals: Louis Conrad, Wm. [illegible] and Samuel [illegible].

The ordinance fixing the salaries of the Assessor and Collector, was taken from the table, read for the third time and adopted.

The Street Committee was authorized and empowered to contract for crushed stone, at a cost not to exceed 90 cents per ton; also to purchase a four-ton roller.

Council then adjourned.

PROFESSIONAL THIEVES DO SOME GOOD WORK BUT GET NOTHING.

(From The Press of May 3.)

Some time during last night, burglars entered the post office on Front street, forced the safe doors and pried open all the locked drawers in the office; but beside whatever might have been the inconsiderable contents of five or six registered letters, the burglars got nothing.

A view of the scene this morning shows that the work was done by professionals, and very clean and careful work it was. They entered by the back door, boring a big hole beneath the inner bolt and a small hole above the latch. The holes were bored with a carpenter's augur and the chips were carefully laid at one side. As soon as the burglars had entered, the door was shut again and a towel stuffed in the holes so that no light would shine through and attract attention from the back buildings.

The front door was then securely fastened on the inside by a big screw-eye that was driven into the floor. The door of Postmaster Force's private office, through which the large Government-safe can be seen from the street, was closed, and the burglars from all appearances then proceeded with their work leisurely and undisturbed.

A small hole was drilled in the safe door alongside of the combination plates and then chipped larger with a chisel. A steel bar was inserted and with a blow the back-plates of the lock were smashed, the clutches driven out of the bolts and the handles then turned with ease. But inside of the big safe a small steel safe confronted the cracksmen. This they seemed to have neither the time nor the tools to open. In it were the funds of the general account and the money order department, all of which was found intact this morning.

The empty envelopes of five or six registered letters, on the floor, were records of all the burglars succeeded in getting for their trouble. All the locked drawers in the office were pried open and taken to the sorting table in the back of the room. They contained little of value, however—28 cents being the total in cash. The closet in which were stored $2,000 of stamped envelopes and postal cards, was not opened. But such bulky matter that would have to be carried through the streets and subsequently sold, probably offered no temptation to the professionals at work on that job.

No clue to the identity of the burglars is obtainable. Nothing was left behind by which to trace them. They will probably never be captured nor even known. Two strange men who have been roaming about town for a few days past, were supposed to be missing this morning. THE PRESS reporters have had their suspicions aroused and their eyes on the strangers ever since they arrived. Yesterday one of the pair stopped in the Dime Savings Institution and asked a few questions about making a deposit, and as to how soon it would begin to draw interest. He also wanted to know how he could draw the money if he went West. All the time he was talking his eyes were searching the interior of the room. Consequently rumor sought to connect them with the burglary, but these suspects who are said to be harmless advertising agents, are still in Plainfield.

The business men in general are disposed to blame the police. The work of the burglars must have taken some time, and they traveled all around the interior of the room. The usual lights were kept burning and many burnt matches were about the place. But then it must be remembered that on account of the partitions that enclose the office its interior cannot be seen from the street except through a small window and two doors that were left open last night, but found closed this morning. If it had been noticed that these doors were closed—especially the one hiding the safe—the burglars might have been trapped.

No doubt the police are very much to blame, but more particularly censurable is the carelessness of the private watchman who is employed to look in at the interior of the office every hour during the night. But Watchman Wright says he looked in every half-hour all night and could see the safe all the time. He saw nothing out of the way.

In contrast with this inefficiency of the guardians of the city, is the faithfulness of the post office employees. In spite of the fact that the burglars had time and tools to open everything but the inner safe, yet they found nothing left in reach except six cents in one drawer and twenty-two cents in another, that had been paid in for letter postage due. Asst. Postmaster George Godown and Registry Clerk Charles Pratt, had as usual seen that everything was carefully locked within the steel inside safe before they left the office last night.

Each day the receipts from all sources up to three o'clock, are deposited, but later yesterday afternoon quite a large amount had come in. Over $150 from the sale of stamps and about $600 received in the money-order department, was in the inside safe with about $5,000 worth of postage stamps.

The Postmaster's desk was unlocked with the key that was found in a drawer, and then carefully locked again. A fragrant Havana cigar that was in the desk was left, but a revolver was taken and also five cartridges from a box, full—just enough for another load. A smaller safe in the office which contained very little of value, was untouched. The burglars showed themselves acquainted with the kind of safes used in the Government's post offices. They are called the "cut-off" because upon any attempt being made to blow them open, the back of the doors fall in instead of the front blowing out. Last night's operators opened the safe in an easy way that showed they had been there before. They seemed to have recognized also the inner safe of bolted steel-plates, and knew from experience there was no use to attempt getting in it.

The burglary was at once reported to headquarters, and Inspector Hugh J. Gorman, of Philadelphia, arrived at noon today. An examination of affairs is now going on under the supervision of himself and Postmaster Force.

ON TRACK OF THE BURGLARS.

From The Press of May 4.

Detective McManus, from the Pinkerton agency, came out to Plainfield, yesterday, and investigated the post office robbery here of the night before. The detective is following a gang of post office burglars who robbed the post office at New Rochelle, about two weeks ago, and he is of the opinion that the men who broke into the Plainfield office on Wednesday night are the same ones who robbed the New Rochelle office.

While some people were at first disposed to blame the police for allowing a burglary to take place in the most central part of the city, it is reasonable to believe that Officer Flannigan interrupted the burglars in their work, and probably saved the government from being robbed of several thousand dollars.

To a Press reporter last evening Officer Flannigan stated that about three o'clock yesterday morning he crossed over Front street directly in front of the post office, purposely to notice the decorations in the office windows. The police are transferred alternately each month to different locations, and as this was the officer's first night on duty in the neighborhood of the post office he did not particularly notice that the lights were unusually low, or even out in the office. The officer says he put his face close up to the window pane and carefully scrutinized the decorations, but he noticed nothing unusual within the building. It is believed that the robbers saw him and beat a hasty retreat, thinking, perhaps, that they had been detected.

The officer continued his beat along East Front street to Peace street and along that thoroughfare to North avenue, where he noticed a strange man approach the station and try the door leading to Station Agent Haynes' apartments. The door was locked and the stranger next tried the door in the ladies waiting room, but this was also locked. The man then ascended the steps at the East end of the station and awaited the arrival of the 3:29 A. M. train for New York. The officer supposing that he was merely a passenger did not approach him.

Officer Flannigan walked along North avenue to a point near Day's livery stable where he stopped. Presently he heard two men approaching from Park avenue; he saw them pass under a street lamp and go direct to the station. The officer followed the men, but as they were nicely dressed and gentlemanly in their deportment, he took no particular notice of them. He did, however, notice that when the train arrived all three of the men hastened out and jumped on the train. One of the men Mr. Flannigan describes as powerful looking, weighing over 200 pounds and wearing a light overcoat; the other was medium-sized, rather slim, and dressed in black. Neither of these men carried anything in their hands, but the officer says that the first one to reach the station, alone, may have carried a small hand satchel. Nothing further was thought of the matter, and the officer went on his beat as usual. Mr. Flannigan says he knew nothing of the robbery until he reported for duty last evening.

It has since been ascertained that Nightwatchman Wright saw three men pass along Somerset street and turn into Front, soon after Officer Flannigan says he looked into the post office window. This is thought to be conclusive proof that the three men who boarded the 3:29 A. M. train, were the robbers.

Detective McManus last evening showed Officer Flannigan a number of photographs of professional safe breakers, and the latter identified two of them as the men he saw pass under the street lamp on North avenue.

A TOUGH CUSTOMER HELD ON SUSPICION.

One of Inspector Byrnes' force came out from New York, today, and reported the arrest in that city of a man on suspicion. The prisoner is known to the detectives of the city as a tough character given to just such jobs as that of Wednesday night in the post office.

Chief Carey, Postmaster Force, Government Inspector Gorman and Officer Flannigan went to New York this afternoon to see Inspector Byrnes and also have a look at his captive.

Officer Flannigan thinks he can identify any of the three men he saw. One of them had small side-whiskers the same as those worn by the prisoner in New York. This man had on his person when arrested, a time table of the Central Railroad of N. J., and also some small articles of jewelry. One of the registered packages emptied in the Plainfield post office was a small box like a jewelry box.

The prisoner also had some burglary tools, one of which was a drill that fits the holes bored in Postmaster Force's safe.

On Saturday Post Office Inspector Gorman, Postmaster Force, Elias R. Pope, Chief Carey and Charles Wilkinson called on Inspector Byrnes in New York, for the purpose of identifying the prisoner who was arrested on suspicion of being implicated in the Plainfield post office robbery. Mr. Pope was unable to identify the man as the same one who called at his office a day or so previous to the robbery and inquired about making deposits, etc. Mr. Wilkinson, a passenger on the same train the burglars are supposed to have left town on, could not identify the prisoner either.

During Saturday another of the alleged robbers was gathered in by Inspector Byrnes' men and locked up at headquarters. Yesterday Conductor Jacob Archer, who runs the 3:29 A. M. train to New York, was ushered into the presence of the two prisoners and a half dozen dummies arranged in a line in the Inspector's office. He positively identified the two prisoners as the men who boarded his train in this city on the morning of the robbery.

The men were taken to Jefferson Market Court, where Justice Rielly remanded them. Post Office Inspector Gorman then went before United States Commissioner Muirhead and formally lodged a complaint against the prisoners, charging them with robbing the Plainfield post office.

Inspector Byrnes and his men have materially aided the Government officials in ferreting out the robbers, and it is to be hoped that they will be dealt with as the law and justice demands. The names of the two prisoners are withheld in the hope that the third one may be apprehended.

Post office Inspector Gorman has completed his investigation of the post office robbery in this city, and has made an official statement to the authorities at Washington. The total amount of money stolen was 28 cents in pennies, a small quantity of jewelry and a few registered letters, probably aggregating two or three dollars more. The Inspector warmly commended Postmaster Force and his corps of efficient clerks for the great care exercised in protecting the Government property.

There is little or no doubt that the two men arrested by Inspector Byrnes' men, and now awaiting a hearing before Commissioner Shields in New York on Friday of this week, are guilty of the post office robbery here, and there is little doubt that the jewelry found in the pockets of one of the prisoners is the same that was stolen from the Plainfield office. The two men have been identified by Conductor Archer, and the only thing that remains to be done to insure their conviction is to ascertain the whereabouts of Miss Annie Keating, to whom the missing jewelry was addressed.

The sum of it is that if more strenuous efforts were made to ferret out the perpetrators of the burglary, instead of gassing at "those lights" the public would be better pleased.

Those Post Office Lights.

Under the above caption the Somerset street sheet says that Chief of Police Carey states that Postmaster Force was "frequently personally requested to give more light, that the office might be better protected."

It may not be generally known that the Postmaster and the person who "edits" the Somerset street sheet are not on speaking terms, and therefore it is not to be wondered at that any reflection that the latter can cast on the former will be done in the best manner possible. The Postmaster, however, considers the source from whence come these statements and believes it beneath his dignity to make any public statement regarding the false statements and falsehoods contained in the assertion that the Post Office has not been properly lighted at night. He simply brands them as falsehoods.

The public, who have passed the office for months and years past, can testify that the Post Office has always been properly and sufficiently illuminated at night to show any vigilant night officer whether any person was in the room meddling with the safe. The statement made by the sheet above alluded to is in keeping with lots of other "rot" that it has published regarding this burglary and other matters.

—There is a weather-vane on a North avenue building that is like the town clock—it can always be depended on. No matter how the wind may change, it steadily points South-east.

Robert Collyer.

A series of sermons by Unitarian clergymen will be given in this city. The first will be preached by Rev. Robert Collyer the famous pulpit orator in the Seventh Day Baptist church, next Sunday evening. The public is invited to be present. The services will begin at 7:45 o'clock.

Relic in the Council Chamber.

A palm-leaf fan in the Council Chamber bears the following interesting data, showing what years certain members of the Council were in office: "J. R. Myers, June 4, 1877; Walter E. Stewart, June 2, 1879; Robert Simpson, July 26, 1882; F. E. Marsh, August 8, 18[illegible]."

Thrown from a Mustang.

A colored man riding a mustang on North avenue, near the railroad station, about four o'clock, Sunday afternoon, was thrown from the animal's back and dragged for a considerable distance. The mustang ran on to the sidewalk in front of the Friends' meeting house, where he came to a stop, and the rider was extricated from his perilous position, but little injured.

The Death Record.

Miss Lizzie Storr, daughter of the late Joseph Storr, died at her home in North Plainfield early on morning of April 29, of heart disease, aged 26 years.

The sad announcement is made of the death of Mary E., the young wife of Mr. Jay Snyder of Grove street, which occurred Sunday, April 28. The deceased was but 21 years of age. The funeral took place from the Mt. Bethel church on Wednesday of last week, at noon.

A Club House in Plainfield, at Last.

At the meeting of the Plainfield Bowling Club, Monday, a committee was empowered to go ahead and secure a most desirable piece of property that was offered in the very centre of the city, for the purpose of a club house.

We are not at liberty today to state where this property is, as a premature disclosing of its location might interfere with its purchase. Suffice it to say, it could not be better situated nor better adapted for the uses to be made of it.

The commodious double house now standing can easily be altered in its interior to suit the comforts and conveniences of a gentlemen's club house. Billiard, reading and smoking rooms will be furnished, and bowling alleys added.

Board of Education Meeting.

A regular meeting of the Board of Education was held Monday, all the members being present. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. Mr. Babcock reported the purchase of six new clocks at a cost of $34; and the Board decided upon five cents per name as the compensation for taking the school census. Mr. Murray was appointed a Committee of one on fences and Dr. Hurlbut was instructed to consider the matter of a cesspool at the Bryant building.

The matter of naming the new school was deferred until a future meeting. Miss Wilson was appointed Superintendent of the new school in place of Miss Gilbert, who has been transferred to another school.

The Clerk was requested to petition the Council to appoint all the public school janitors as special policemen, and the meeting adjourned.

THEIR FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

The ladies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Dunellen, celebrated their fifth anniversary in the Presbyterian church at that place Sunday evening, and the occasion drew together an unusually large congregation. All the other churches omitted the evening service and the members united in observing the fifth anniversary. The choirs from the First Baptist, Seventh Day Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist churches furnished the music.

Mrs. R. Humpston presided and formally opened the service, followed by singing by the choir and prayer by Mr. T Thomas. The President read a chapter from the scripture and the choir and congregation joined in singing a hymn, after which Mrs. T. J. Todd read the Secretary's report. The report showed the Union to be in a flourishing condition, with a membership of 19 and a substantial balance in the treasury. Addresses were delivered by Rev. J. W. Seran, Rev. Mr. Livermore and Rev. Mr. Cubberly. A collection was taken up, and after a prayer by Mrs. Sodine, Rev. Mr. Livermore dismissed the audience with the benediction.

A Dangerous and Objectionable Location for a Post Office.

Since the appointment of Mr. A. S. Coriell as Postmaster at New Market, a considerable and very pronounced objection is raised to the removal of the post office out of the village proper to the North side of, and within 50 feet of the Lehigh Valley Railroad track which has neither gates nor flagman, being dangerous to life and limb.

It is against the public wish to so locate it—not more than 25 persons are in receipt of mail matter residing on the North side of the track, and the district for miles South in which about 200 persons reside, consider it unjust to be necessitated to drive across the track. The effect of the removal of the office makes two offices in one polling district, whilst the South poll will have none.

The attention of the Postmaster General has been called to the subject and if his statement that the wishes of a community are to be consulted has any virtue in it, the New Market people will see whether he will require the office to remain where it properly belongs

But maybe individual wishes are more potent than a unanimous expression of opinion without regard to party.

Funeral of Caroline Arens at Grace Church.

The display of flowers at the funeral services in Grace church, Tuesday afternoon, over the remains of Caroline Arens, was the most superb, probably, that has ever been seen in this city. Every variety was present in great quantity and the most costly were the most profuse.

The attendance was large and included numbers of friends from out of town. Many of Mr. Arens' New York business acquaintances arrived on the 4:34 train, and evidenced their esteem and sympathy for the bereaved father and mother, by their presence at the last sad rites over the remains of their beloved daughter.

After an organ selection by Mrs. Freeman, the vested choir entered from the vestry and passing up the aisle, singing as they went, waited at the rear of the church for the arrival of the family and the hearse from the house.

Archdeacon Rodman met the funeral party at the church door, and led the procession to the altar. He was followed by the chanting choir that headed the pall-bearers carrying the elegant casket of white plush with massive silver mountings. It was loaded with beautiful flowers. The family followed.

During the progress of the Episcopal service for the burial of the dead, the choir chanted the anthem and sang other parts and responses. "Abide With Me," and "Hark, Hark My Soul," were also selections that they rendered.

The interment was subsequently made in Hillside Cemetery, where the services were private.

—A new club has been organized in the Borough, called the "Bare-Faced Club." Any one wishing to become a member must relieve his phiz of whiskers and moustache, and "pipe 'em up" as an initiation fee.

ITS THIRD ANNIVERSARY.

An audience composed mostly of ladies that half-filled the Congregational chapel on West Seventh street, was gathered together, Monday, upon the occasion of the third anniversary of the organization of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Plainfield.

The President, Miss Adelaide McGee, presided and was assisted by the Rev. C. L. Goodrich, who opened and closed the meeting with prayer and benediction. The pulpit was decorated with blossoms, buds and plants, including a large "Y" composed entirely of white flowers.

The musical features of the evening were organ selections by Mrs. R. T. Barnes, a baritone solo by Mr. Bigelow accompanied by Mr. W. A. Conger, and a solo by Miss Lilian Dorman; but the gem of all was the singing by Miss Julia Ketcham and Miss Dorman of Shelley's "Hark, My Soul!" accompanied, by Mrs. Barnes.

The Rev. George P. Noble, of Cornwall-on-Hudson, addressed those assembled, with a word to the Y's and a word for the Y's. He spoke a word to them of sympathy and encourgement, and a word for them in the way of presenting the organization and its work to the people for their endorsement and assistance.

Mr. Aaron M. Powell also spoke. He congratulated the Y's upon their work at the hospital, among the colored children and in the sewing class; and he congratulated them on the financial condition of their treasury. He spoke of their power and how it could best be exerted among young men in their parlors.

Miss Bertha M. Taylor read the following reports, and the meeting closed by all singing

"Sow thy seed be never weary,
Let no fears thy soul annoy;
Be the prospect ne'er so dreary,
Thou shalt reap the fruits of joy."

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

To-night closes the third year of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Plainfield. Since May 6, 1888, we have been obliged to accept many resignations from both active and honorary members, but our ranks have been reinforced by earnest workers and when complaining of no definite work for the "Y" in this city of so many societies our enthusiastic and efficient President was always ready with something new in which to get us interested and by which to hold us united. Through her efforts and encouragement we still number to-night 139 pledged members.

During the warm months the regular meetings are suspended but through the Summer of '88 the Hospital Committee of seven young ladies took their turn each week visiting, singing and reading to the sick. Many of our members personally interested send books and pamphlets to make the monotonous days pass more cheerfully if possible to the patients there.

In response to a call from the W. C. T. U. our Union assisted in a carnival of months held in [illegible] Rink Dec 4, 5 and 6th of last December, the proceeds of which enabled us to get all expenses to start and carry on new branches of work, mainly, the sewing class, hospital work and colored juvenile department, besides contributing to poorer Unions.

On February 21, '89, the sewing class was started with one of our most energetic workers at its head. A machine was hired and they began by sewing for Industrial school and Children's Home. The attendance was small but the few who were faithful accomplished good work.

The Colored Juvenile Department was ordered by the Union at a meeting in March. Miss Hattie P. Burnett was made Superintendent. Notices were sent to the Colored church and Mission and on March 12 the Superintendent organized a Temperance Drill Class with 30 enrolled members. The committee in charge have since carried on the work, meeting in the "Y" rooms every Wednesday afternoon, instructing the colored boys and girls in Hygiene, Physiology and temperance. Experiments and temperance songs are used to illustrate the lessons. Interest increases and 33 children now answer to the roll call.

At the same special meeting held March 4, a Superintendent of Y. M. C. A. work was chosen and a plan proposed by Mr. Murray from the Young Men's Christian Association by which we could aid in raising money for their building fund. The young ladies took hold of it with a will and hope to be of good service.

Some of those present no doubt already are familiar with our scheme and we will try not to slight any one, hoping the cards will receive a warm reception by all solicited from.

Early in March a committee from the "Y" took charge of one of the regular Thursday evening entertainments usually given by the Woman's Temperance Aid Society in Reform Hall. Later we took pleasure in contributing to a new piano for the Reform Club.

The "Y" did begin work last October under very discouraging circumstances, but withall kept up the regular meetings, the business meetings being very well attended the third Tuesday in every month.

We are indebted to some of the pastors of the city for occasional help in our Devotional meetings. But we have generally conducted these meetings ourselves and the greatest interest has been manifested in them, realizing that in our prayers lies the main strength of our organization.

Wait on the Lord: be of good courage and he shall strengthen thine heart; wait, I say, on the Lord.

Respectfully submitted.
BERTHA M. TAYLOR, Sec.

The Progress of the Latimer, Lee and DeBaud Will Contests in the Courts.

The ejectment suit of Ezra D. Hetfield et al, vs. John H. Jackson, executor and others, involving the question of the validity of the will of Francis Lee and the title to all the real estate of which he died seized, came up before the Union County Circuit Court, Tuesday. R. V. Lindabury, Esq., represented the plaintiffs, and ex-Chancellor Runyon and Messrs Jackson & Codington, the defendants. The case was postponed until the October term on the ground of the absence of two, and the illness of a third, material witnesses for the defence. It is supposed to be a point gained by the defendants that this case is put off until October as in the meantime a decision on the question of the will may be obtained in the Prerogative Court, from Chancellor McGill (without a jury), which decision would be prima facie proof of the validity of the will.

The Latimer contested will case has been set down for hearing before the Orphans' Court at Elizabeth, on Wednesday, May 29, inst. Ex-Chancellor Runyon, James E. English, Nelson Runyon and John H. VanWinkle represent the proponents, and Messrs Jackson & Codington and Clark & Reed, the caveators.

The DeBaud contested will case was referred to ex-Surrogate Genung. The counsel in the case are Walter L. Hetfield and Nelson Runyon for the will, and Messrs Clark & Reed and Jackson & Codington for the contestant.

—It is stated that if all the freight cars in the United States were in a line they would extend from New York to San Francisco and back again.

Mr. F. S. Dunn, the Society's President, acted in the capacity of master of ceremonies. The programme included vocal and instrumental music, recitations, etc., and all who took part creditably acquitted themselves. The first number was a piano solo by Miss Alice Smith, followed by a song, "Blue Bells," by the "Old folks." Next came a reading by Miss Lilian Force, entitled: "Grandmother Lee's Ride."

The "old folks" sang "Auld Lang Syne," and Mrs. J. C. VanDyke's impersonation of "Mrs. Josiah Allen's proposed visit to Washington" was really an amusing production. Mrs. VanDyke told in original style of the intended change in the National Administration, and selected members of the Society for "Uncle Josiah's Cabinet."

Miss Etta Krymer then favored the audience with a song, "Grandma's Advice," and the "old folks" closed the programme by singing the "Suwanee River," assisted by Messrs. Fred Cottier, S. J. Jamieson, C. D. Wheeler and J. Ras Dunn.

The Committees in their order, when called, reported back the bills presented during the evening, and they were sent to the Auditing Committee for final signature.

Mr. Newhall, from the Water Committee, submitted the following report, which was upon resolution adopted, accepted, and the Committee was authorized to expend not over $300 to carry out the suggestions and recommendations therein contained.

Your committee have carefully considered the various communications and propositions relating to water and sewerage which have been placed in our hands for attention.

We have from the first recognized the necessity of promptly providing a supply of water and a complete system of sewerage.

The law provides that the Common Council may grant a water franchise to a corporation properly organized for the purpose. The law also provides that the Common Council may purchase or construct water works to be owned and operated by the City, provided the citizens shall first give their assent to such purchase or construction at any regular or special election.

Your committee have carefully examined the whole subject and have received a number of propositions varying greatly in their terms.

The conditions upon which the franchise is asked, and the rates fixed for the sale of water for fire and domestic purposes in these various propositions, do not appear to be unreasonable or exorbitant, but it may be that much more favorable rates could be obtained by advertising for positive bids upon specific detailed specifications.

Your committee have also considered the propriety of constructing or purchasing water works to be owned and operated by the City.

In this connection the only question to be decided in our opinion is: can water for fire purposes and for private consumption be furnished to our citizens at a less net cost than it could be obtained from parties holding a franchise?

From the best information your committee have been able to secure, we are of the opinion that if the works are owned and operated by the City, water can be furnished for private consumption at a less rate than the most favorable figures named in the propositions thus far submitted.

We believe also that under such circumstances the annual revenue to the City would be sufficient not only to cover the interest but to gradually liquidate the original outlay.

Under all the circumstances your committee respectfully recommend and request that you authorize them to employ a competent engineer to draw up plans and specifications for the construction of a complete system of water supply and sewerage, and that tenders be solicited from responsible parties, who shall be asked to make bids based upon either of the following conditions:

First—The works to be constructed strictly in accordance with plans and specifications and subject to oversight and approval of inspector to be appointed by the City; the franchise to be granted for a fixed term subject to provisions giving the City the right to purchase under specified conditions; subject during the continuance of franchise, to fixed annual rates for water for fire and other public purposes, and for private consumption.

Second—The works to be constructed strictly in accordance with plans and specifications and subject to oversight and approval of inspector to be appointed by the City, and after completion and satisfactory trial for a proper length of time, to be purchased by the City and paid for at a fixed price and terms.

Plainfield, N. J., May 2, 1889.
HENRY B. NEWHALL,
E. N. ERICKSON,
Committee.

A resolution by Mr. Newhall to the effect that the taxes coming into the City Treasury, be deposited evenly between the First National and City National Banks, was referred to the Finance Committee.

Messrs Sebring and Moore, two delinquents to the North avenue sewer fund, the Corporation Counsel was instructed to notify, that unless they come to "centre" within ten days, their sewer connection will be severed; furthermore the Street Commissioner was empowered to carry out the provisions of the resolution introduced by Mr. Marsh and adopted, and to "sever the connection," in case the notice is not complied with.

Mr. Erickson introduced an ordinance to license, regulate and restrain persons or vehicles from sprinkling streets in the City, under a fine of $100. The ordinance provided for a fee of $5, but it was amended by Mr. Marsh, making the annual fee $10. The ordinance was read twice, ordered engrossed and advertised.

Mr. Marsh presented an ordinance dividing the Fourth Ward into two election districts, which was adopted on its second reading and ordered engrossed and advertised. The two districts are to include the following territories: First—All that section in the Fourth Ward lying North-west of the Central Railroad; Second—All that portion lying South-east of the railroad. This division has become necessary, according to law, inasmuch as there were over 600 votes cast in the Fourth Ward at the last election.

Upon motion of Mr. Marsh $500 was appropriated for street repairs.

The engrossed copy of the ordinance relating to the assessment and collection of taxes was called up and adopted on its final passage.

The ordinance amending the building ordinance which made it optional whether a man erected a hen-coop or a "one-story-flat," was called up for final passage. Messrs Dumont, Erickson, Gallup, Jenkins, Myers, Moffett, Marsh, voting "No." It was lost.

Councilman Myers introduced a proper resolution, providing for borrowing funds to meet the expenses of the poor, fire and general funds, to the extent of $1,500, now due, in anticipation of taxes. The resolution was unanimously adopted.

The Auditing Committee reported on the claims presented, and they were ordered paid.

The Finance Committee was requested to confer with the Mayor, with reference to the appointment of a Deputy Tax Collector.

A GOLDEN WEDDING.

A number of invited friends and neighbors of Dr. and Mrs. George Gidney, gathered at their home on East 5th street Tuesday evening, and overwhelmed them with congratulations upon the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage day. The affair was arranged and most successfully carried out by Mrs. Sarah M. Runyon, the daughter of the aged couple, who resides with them. It was a complete surprise and a most pleasurable occasion throughout.

They received the large party in their parlor, with eyes full of tears and hearts full of joy at the sight of so many kind faces and the sound of so many good wishes. The figures "50" formed in apple blossoms stood on an easel, and there were also baskets and boquets in profusion.

The Rev. Mr. Schenck—Dr. and Mrs. Gidney's pastor—addressed them and those present in a very happy way. A beautiful prayer followed after which all sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." A number of golden presents were received, and there was also given a rich wedding cake. The couple whom the occasion honored, looked as young as some of the much younger guests, and seemed good for many returns of the day.

Dr. and Mrs. George Gidney were married, May 7, 1839, in the city of New York, by the Rev. Mr. Stelle, pastor of the Broome street M. E. church. The bride's name was Miss Sarah Clarkson, and both were then residents of New York. Of the six children born to them, three are now living—Eliza, the eldest, wife of the Rev. J. A. Griffen, living in Kansas; George, Jr., the well known veterinary surgeon at Elizabeth, and Mrs. Sarah M. Runyon. Seven grand children are living.

NORTH PLAINFIELD SCHOOL MEETING.

The legal voters in School District, No. 28, turned out in large numbers Tuesday, P. M., to attend a special school meeting held in the public school building in North Plainfield. The object of the meeting was to vote for or against an extra appropriation of $20,000 to be devoted to the erection and furnishing of a new school building. It is a well established fact that the present school building is inadequate to accommodate the pupils, and some weeks ago the trustees called a special meeting to consider the matter of erecting a new school house.

Dr. H. K. Carroll called the meeting to order, that evening, and Mr. S. St. J. McCutchen was elected Chairman, and Mr. Geo. F. Brown was chosen Secretary. The Secretary read the call and also the minutes of the special meeting of April 22.

Dr. Carroll on behalf of the Board of Trustees, submitted two resolutions, the first authorizing the Board of Trustees to expend $20,000 for school purposes—$16,000 for the erection of a building, outhouses and fences, and $4,000 for heating, furnishing, etc.

The second resolution provided for the issue of bonds of $500 denomination, to draw interest at not more than 4½ per cent. payable half yearly, said bonds to be numbered from one to forty respectively and to mature yearly in sums ranging from $500 to $2500, the last bond to fall due in 1909. The resolution further provided that a tax shall be levied each year to pay the bonds falling due and also the interest on the remaining bonds.

Considerable discussion followed on the matter of the form of ballot to be used in voting for or against the extra appropriation, but the following form prepared by the trustees was adopted: "For the resolution appropriating $20,000," and "Against the resolution appropriating $20,000."

The chair named Messrs H. R. Munger and James K. Arnold as tellers, and the vote resulted as follows:

Total number of votes cast......194
For the appropriation......48
Against the appropriation......146

Thus it will be seen that the resolution was defeated by 98 votes.

Read About Spring Suits.

Before you buy a Spring suit you should inform yourself about the fashionable styles out this season, and the prices at which they can be purchased. Having lately interviewed Mr. Jos. H. Weeks, the business manager of Messrs Geo. Watson & Co., who are the high authority in this city for all matters pertaining to correct dress, we can give you a good idea of what you should wear and how much you should pay for it.

For Dress Suits the Coats and Vests should be cut from wale and dice patterns in fine worsteds, with interwoven birdseye effects in solid colors, or with bright silk threads thrown sparingly through the goods. Four different styles of Sacks will be worn, but the new Cutaway will outsell them all, and some Alberts will be cut, especially for tall men. The pants should be made from both plaids and shaded lines, and all should be finished free from canvass with shrunk silk bound bottoms.

Watson & Co. devote one entire floor to racks filled with these elegant suits, and show a hundred handsome styles complete for $13, $14, $15, $15.50, $16, $17, $17.50, $18, $19, $20, $21, $21.50, $22, $23, $24, $25 and $26 that cannot be told when worn from the most expensive custom-made work, which you should certainly see before you buy if you are particular about your dress appearance.

For stylish Spring Suits nothing can equal their homespun Cheviots in the new colors, but Serges, Meltons, Pin Checks and Cassimeres from light to dark, in mixtures, plaids and shaded stripes, will also be in favor.

Watson & Co. show immense lines of these elegant Suits already to put on for $8, $9, $10, $11, $12, $13, $13.50, $14, $15, $15.50, $16, $17, $18, $19 and $20, finished with all those little custom extras that make their garments so attractive and satisfactory to their wearer. In fine Clothing this firm has certainly outstripped all competitors, and are doing an immense business, but many clothing men say they are not making any money, as their prices are too low, but Mr. Weeks says that a very small percentage on their large sales amounts to a satisfactory sum yearly, and their close and economical way of doing business, with no show or useless expense, enables them to play with the prices of all stores too large for the business done in them. Besides, they never allow any of the usual discounts or commissions, and make no gifts of any kind, except their odd lots of pants, which they distribute by the hundreds of pairs to such customers as their Pantaloon Gift Register shows they will fit correctly, and as soon as their new extension through to 166 and 168 Market street is completed they will increase their cutters and salesmen from 53 to 100 to keep pace with their rapidly growing business, which Mr. Weeks says is due entirely to the merit of their garments, their cut-under prices and the fact that you can go to Watson & Co's and see many new and handsome confined styles not to be found elsewhere, and be sure that you are getting the correct cut on every garment as laid down by the Standard American Fashion Plate, to which their pattern designers are the principal contributors. We recommend this leading firm to all buyers of clothing who want style, durability and low prices combined.—Newark Press.

YOU CAN'T PLEASE EVERYBODY!

Is an old saying. But it's astonishing what a number of people we manage to please with our stock of Spring Clothing. This is especially true of the goods we make up for the little ones. It would take a good deal of space and an eloquent pen to do justice to the many pretty and tasteful garments which we design and make up for the youngsters. All of these styles are our own, and are the result of much patient thought and effort. There may be places where an assortment equal to our own is to be met with, but you'll travel a long way to find it, and when you succeed you'll note that the prices are far above our limit for a similar class of goods. We study to please, and we succeed. Mothers are pleased because they find just what suits their boys without a long hunt for it. The boys are pleased because the clothes fit them so well and look so handsome. The rich and the poor are both pleased because they secure good value, and everybody is pleased with the prices. Our Clothing for larger boys and men has the same artistic and shapely appearance, and as to value for the money, it is simply unapproachable.

TURNING THE TABLES

Fate of the Schoolmaster-Whipping Committee.

"The best laid schemes o' mice and men gang aft agley."—Burns.

Messrs. Tarbox, Tasker and Twiggs were very promising young men between the ages of eighteen and twenty; very violent, very ambitious and very strong. They had never done any thing remarkable except at school, and their [illegible]

[illegible]

"Lord, boys! what's that?" exclaimed Tasker, suddenly, pointing at a bright light that glimmered through one of the upper windows of the house.

"Fire!" replied Tarbox, with a start.

"Fire, by thunder!" added Twiggs.

"It is!" corroborated the first speaker. "Wilkins has set the house afire for vengeance!"

Tarbox, who felt that he had been the cause of the calamity, turned pale with alarm.

"What's to be done?" he cried. "I daren't go and unlock the door, for Wilkins would give me jesse, I know."

"There's a ladder," suggested Tasker.

"We can put that up to the window," added Twiggs, "and you can get up and look in and see if the house is really on fire."

"A good idea," said Tarbox. "I'll do that. Come on, boys, and help me carry the ladder."

The ladder was soon placed against the side of the house, the end just reached to the windows of the school-room.

Tarbox mounted, timidly, while his companions held the foot of the ladder. Arrived at the window, he could see the blazing fire within, and he threw it open hastily. There was but little smoke in the room, for the blaze was occasioned by the burning of some dry hickory sticks piled carefully on the top of the stove.

[illegible]

Tarbox took the required article from his pocket. The schoolmaster thanked him, wished him good-evening, and retired.

Tarbox was soon more locked up in the closet.

Mr. Wilkins then begged of Mr. Twiggs not to make himself uncomfortable by tugging at the cords which confined his hands, but to remain as quiet as possible; and wishing him a pleasant night's rest, disappeared through the window, which he closed after him, and descended to the ground. This done, he considerately removed the ladder, that the prisoners might not put their lives in danger attempting to escape by it, provided they broke loose into the school-room, and proceeded to his boarding place as if nothing of any note had happened.

Mr. Wilkins slept very soundly that night, and got up early next morning to proceed about the duties of the day. It is said that on his arrival at the school-room he found three of his pupils there, who had lodged there, and looked as if they had enjoyed but little sleep.

It is needless to say that the three gentlemen of the schoolmaster-whipping committee did not soon hear the last of taking lodgings in a school-house, nor need the reader be told that they never after made an attempt on the sacred person of Mr. Cyrus Wilkins.—J. T. Trowbridge, in Yankee Blade.

THE LAST JEWISH KING.

Judaea Before Even the Birth of Christ to the Destruction of Jerusalem.

In the year 4 B. C., the year which modern chronologers believe to have been that of the birth of Christ, Herod the Great, the last ruler but two who ever bore the title of King of the Jews, died. Judea had been conquered by Pompey the Great, and made a Roman province, in the year 63 B. C. This conqueror had made Hyrcanus, high priest of Jerusalem, Ethnarch of the province, but, after the overthrow of Pompey, 48 B. C., Julius Caesar made Antipater governor of Judea with the title of Procurator. The son of the latter, Herod, succeeded him, and, through the favor of Mark Antony, was made King of Judea by a decree of the Roman Senate, 40 B. C. When Herod died, his kingdom was divided among his sons, Archelaus, Philip and Herod Antipas, each having the title of tetrarch. Archelaus ruled Judea, and, subsequently, received from the Emperor Augustus the title of Ethnarch, and was promised the royal dignity if he reigned successfully, but he never really had the title of King. In A. D. 6 he was banished the kingdom by Augustus, and Judea was again attached to the Roman province of Syria, and was ruled by Roman procurators. Pontius Pilate was one of these, who was appointed about the year 26, and served ten years. In A. D. 41, Herod Agrippa I., a grandson of Herod the Great, was installed in the kingdom of his grandfather by the Roman Emperor Claudius, and received the title of King. In 44 he died, and a Roman procurator again held rule until 52, when Herod Agrippa II. received a part of the kingdom, including Judea and the kingly title. The condition of the country at that time was deplorable. The Roman Emperors had their statues erected in the temple, demanding divine honors for them, thus continually outraging the religious sentiment of the people. The imperial officers grew rich by taxing the people; the kingly court imitated that of Rome in all its sensualness; and disorder, lawlessness and faction ruled in civil affairs. Death to the Romans became the cry of an insurgent party that daily grew stronger among the people. King Agrippa vainly endeavored to repress the insurrection, and warned the people that to attempt a war against the Romans was only to bring upon themselves certain destruction. When war broke out he sided with the Roman forces. The insurgents seized and fortified Jerusalem, and organized a general uprising. Two armies were sent against them by the Romans. The war lasted several years. In 70 Jerusalem was besieged. Famine and pestilence decimated the inhabitants, but they refused to surrender. In September, 70, the last defense of the city was taken, its surviving inhabitants were all slaughtered, sold into slavery, or carried to Rome to perish in fights with wild beasts. A million of Jews perished in this war, which erased the name of Judea from the list of the kingdoms of the earth. There were no Jewish kings after that time.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

TRAPPING A GORILLA.

The Ferocity and Strength of These Untamable Beasts.

The Astonishing Resemblance of the Big Apes to the Natives—An Encounter with Serious Results—How the Captive Resented His Captor's Advances.

About twenty days from the time we located the gorillas, writes a New York Sun correspondent, we set our traps one in each path. The one in the path leading to the spring was within thirty feet of the water, and carefully concealed just below the surface. A couple of days later a party of ten of us set out, and when within a mile of the spring we had reason to believe that one of the animals had put a foot in the trap. Yells, roars and screams reached our ears, and at the distance of half a mile several small animals passed us in affright.

"We have got the big fellow!" whispered my head hunter to me as we pressed forward. "We must be very careful now, for the sight of us will make him strong to break away, and he will want all our lives to pay for the insult."

The yells now grew louder as we neared the spot, and the cries and wails of the mother and offspring mingled with the snarls, growls, barks and roars of the father. When we finally crept forward to a spot whence we could obtain a view, we found the "old man" fast in the trap by the right hind leg. The trap was a bush-less one, with the faces of the jaws covered with felt, but it was strong enough almost to hold an elephant. We had to bend down the springs with levers, and it was a good load for two men to carry. The chain attached could not have been broken by a horse, and we had securely fastened it to a tree. It was well we had, and it was well that the beast had been caught by a hind leg.

I do not think he had been in the trap long when we first heard him, perhaps not over five minutes. He was doubtless surprised and frightened for a time, but by the time we had reached a point where we could see him his terrible anger was fully aroused. His mate and offspring stood by, wailing and growling, and just as we got located in our places the female lifted up the trap and wrenched at it with all her strength. Then both seized the chain, and tugged, and pulled, and growled, and roared, but it was no use. What I feared was that the old fellow might gnaw his leg off, as [illegible] will do when trapped, but he showed no intention of the sort. Indeed it would have resulted in his death, and he doubtless so figured. For a long hour he refused to give in, biting, leaping and tugging, and another such picture of ferocity would be hard to find. He frothed at the mouth, exhibited his great fangs, and his eyes glittered like diamonds. I should have been willing for the mate and her little one to go, but as they refused to leave the spot, and as the natives said that the mother would not hesitate to attack us in her excitement, I pushed forward my rifle and gave her a bullet, which dropped her dead in her tracks. The young one immediately sprang to the father's shoulder, and was sitting there when we advanced. The natives cried out, as we went forward, to be cautious, but in their enthusiasm they brought about a tragedy.

The resemblance of the big gorilla to a native was so striking that I paused to wonder if a mistake had not been made. [illegible]

By the advice of the natives I decided to let the old fellow alone for awhile and allow hunger and thirst to work on his temper. We made a temporary camp half a mile away, and did not go near him again for two days. [illegible]

[illegible] sent him down the river and around to Zanzibar, and, after months he brought up in Constantinople, so ferocious and dangerous that the utmost precaution had to be taken by those who came near him. He was living during the Russo-Turkish war, and one who saw him informed me that there was no hope of overcoming his temper or subduing his ferocity.

Pessimism and Optimism.

Pessimism may be briefly defined as despair endowed with personality, says a clergyman in the New York Tribune. In the soul of the pessimist no sun of gladness ever arises, and in his life no star of hope is visible. Pure pessimism is not only hostile to religion, but it is the very negation of all that religion stands for. Nor is cynicism much better. A cynic, it seems to me, is a man who tries to make himself out to be much worse than he is, in order to give himself an excuse to think that he is much better than he is. He is the incarnation of that flippant disbelief in goodness which utterly destroys all the enthusiasm and ideals of religion. Optimism, on the other hand, may be defined a sunshine. The optimist regards the ills and evils of existence as temporary episodes, and looks upon sorrow and pain as the minor chords in the majestic diapason of life. All optimists are not necessarily religious, but all religious men are necessarily optimists.

THE COUNTERFEITERS.

THE road was lonely enough, winding around wooded hills and gloomy hollows; the time was dreary enough, a rainy, cheerless night.

Joe Burton seemed in love, however, with the landscape.

"I'm deuced lucky to have an evening like this," he ejaculated, floundering out of one mud-hole into another; "let's see! Ellis said two miles from the river bend I should strike one of the loneliest ravines on the route. In that same miserable place those plaguey counterfeiters were at work.

"Humph! I kinder don't like the business. For a lone man to go spying around in such a country, likely any minute to fall into their clutches, isn't so pleasant; but, then, it smacks of the novel, and I'm in for it."

He climbed out of the bend and took to the side of the road, buttoning his coat up snugly to his chin, and ceased speculating aloud. Sometimes even the woods had ears.

Slip, slide; slide, slip, and he descended another hill. "Blamed if this isn't the blackest, blankedest old road I ever traveled! I've a notion to light the 'bull's-eye' and take a peep around for a path or whatever I can find in this heathenish country."

Feeling for the "waterproofs," he happened to glance up the hill, and saw, beaming through the inky night, something like a star.

"Nary a star," said Joe; "that's a light, and some one is carrying it, too. See it waver! Coming down the hill, by Jove! 'Stead o' me hunting counterfeiters, I believe they're on my tracks. I burn?"

No; it was a boy with a basket. And as he came up he turned off suddenly into the ravine, with a startled look at Joe.

A thought struck Burton. "Here!" he called after the boy. "Are you going to the den; and is your father up there?"

The lad stopped irresolutely. "If I was you or anybody else, I'd have more git up to me than to be inquirin' after them."

"Why? Don't they make money fast enough?"

"It isn't money, it's lies," answered he in a dogged way. "But you've made a big mistake if you think I've a father. It's more 'n likely you take me for Jess Burrell."

"Why! aren't you Burrell's son? Well! I'm going to see Burrell; I presume he is up there?" pointing up the hollow.

"Yes, he's there. I am only an orphan who drudges at Jim Clark's for my board and clothes, and as many lickin's as they feel able to give me."

"Well, I'll go with you, anyway," said Joe. "Let me carry the basket for you part of the way." And they stepped into the dark path leading up the ravine, as Joe took the burden.

"What's in here?" he asked, presently, lifting the cover gingerly.

"O, biscuit and ham, and crullers and coffee."

"Let's see the coffee," ventured Joe, taking a peep at the large can in the center surrounded by the aforesaid articles of diet. "How far are they away from us?"

"A few rods, sir. But if you're hungry, why, I've no objections, and they needn't know."

"That's not it," said Joe, coming to a full stop and putting down the basket. "If I tell you something, will you keep mum? I'll pay you well for it."

The lad looked at him shrewdly. "Be ye spottin' counterfeiters?" he asked. "If ye are, I'm with ye to the death."

"It's a bargain," said Joe; "but mind now, if you give me away," and he flashed a revolver, by the light of the lantern, in the boy's face.

"'Elf I care for you're shootin' iron," blurted the boy. "I'll not go back on any body as is white; but they're up there, the whole ten; now what ye're going to do with 'em?"

"You'll see," answered Joe; "take off the can cover."

The boy did as he was bid, and Joe sifted a powder into the coffee.

"Going to kill the lot?" questioned the lad, evidently delighted at the prospect of a tragedy.

"No; only give them a resting spell, until I can get assistance. D'ye see?"

"You're right, I do."

They went some distance, silently; then the boy, turning to Joe, nodded. "We're here now. I'll go in and give 'em their sleepin' powders, an' when they get to noddin' I'll come out and tell you."

"LET ME CARRY THE BASKET FOR YOU."

"Mind and stir the coffee well."

"Yes."

Joe slipped to one side in the misty darkness, while the lad, taking a key from his pocket, unlocked the narrow, heavy door, which seemed to be set in the hill-side, and disappeared within.

It was an underground room the counterfeiters had prepared in this unfrequented spot. And Joe Burton sat chuckling to himself in the damp darkness. "What do I care for the four days of tramping now? If the drug works well, if that boy didn't betray him, if Haskins at the head could be depended on, why, it would be mere play to bag the whole gang."

After some time the boy appeared, closing the door after him and turning the key in a twinkling. He swung the lantern back and forth by way of signaling "all quiet," and Joe crept cautiously from his cover.

"Well?"

"It's well and 'tisn't well," growled the boy. "Part of 'em are drowsin' off and part on 'em ain't; and Jim Clark's only sick."

"What's he doing?" queried Burton.

"Nothin', I reckon, but stretchin' on the ground; that's all he can do. But he b'lieves the coffee was drugged, and he told me I did it to get even with 'im."

"I've got them, though. You see there are two doors; the key to the second hangs right side of it generally, so I snatched it off the nail. I locked both doors and have the keys." Here he displayed two huge keys totally unlike each other.

"Burrell's got a key to the outside door, but small good it'll do when he can't get to it, I 'magine."

"True," said Joe, "but we've no time to lose. Do you know where Haskins lives?"

"Yes; been there a hundred times."

"Very well. Take this line to him as quick as possible. He'll bring the sheriff and his posse. I'll stay here and watch."

"Good! I'm yer man ag'in. I'll stop at Clarke's an' git Colt, and 'git thar,' eh?"

"Yes."

In a moment more the boy was gone like an avenging angel, down the dark, desolate hollow.

Burton lighted the "bull's-eye" to examine the outer door, see if it was secure, and to get his revolvers in readiness, providing the prisoners tried to break out.

Hark! a grating sound from within. Burton put his ear to the keyhole to listen. Some one had not succumbed to the potion. Clarke likely, and was bent on making his escape.

How long would it take to reach the outer door?

That depended on how fast the man worked, and how thick the inner door.

Joe looked at his watch. The boy had been gone an hour, and must have reached Haskins' long ago. Haskins would ride ten miles to the station, wake up the agent, and telegraph to Lyon. The county seat was, perhaps, ten miles away, and some time would elapse between the receipt of the telegram and the starting of the men. But, nevertheless, he could hold them, unless they got the drop on him, which he didn't calculate on.

There was nothing to do but wait. Once Joe thought he heard low talking inside; that the lock was being cut out he was certain, but how many were awake he didn't know.

Jupiter! they were at the outer door. Joe put his weapon close to the keyhole and cocked it. The click of the revolver was not lost on those inside; there was a pause, a whispering and someone said: "Who's there?"

Joe didn't reply, and for awhile all was still. Then a key was inserted in the lock. Yes, the boy had said one of them carried a key to the outer door. Burton turned off his light, and stepped quietly to one side.

THE DOOR OPENED WIDER.

The door opened cautiously and then a random shot whistled past Joe's head; he only shrugged his shoulders, and raised his weapon.

The door opened wider and a stream of light fell out on the damp night. The next instant three men were visible and Joe fired as many successive shots at the doorway. The door closed quickly. Someone groaned and all was still.

Presently a shot was fired down the hollow. "They're coming," said Joe, but he made no demonstration. It might be friends of the counterfeiters and not his.

There came lanterns dodging about along the bushes. One, faster than the rest, rushed toward him, and the lad, all out of breath, came up.

"Killed any of 'em?" and he nodded toward the door.

"I wouldn't wonder," answered Joe.

Just then the men came up wet, muddy and very much excited; they had heard the firing and expected to find Burton done for.

It took but a few minutes, however, to see how matters stood inside. Two of the men were wounded and were being cared for by the third, the remaining seven were waking, and wondering what it all meant.

"There are conveyances waiting down by the road to carry you all safely to Lyon," explained the sheriff, as the handcuffs were being put on the crestfallen counterfeiters.

"Glad to see ye puttin' on airs," said the boy to a gaunt six-footer who was swearing vengeance on every body. "Ye've done lickin' me for awhile, I reckon!"

"I'll kill you for this!" Clark ground through his teeth.

"Not in a hurry. I'm goin' to leave these plaguey old hills so far behind me that ye won't see my shadder in a hundred years."

And the boy was in earnest. After the counterfeiters were safe in jail, and after he had received his reward, he left the dismal hills for the city.

Burton gave him a recommend to friends of his as a "brave, intelligent lad who had no home or education, and who would appreciate both."

And the boy proved to be all that Burton hoped of him, and dates the beginning of his usefulness back to when he helped corral the counterfeiters that dark, rainy night among the lonely Indiana hills.

MANDA L. CROCKER.

HISTORY CONDENSED.

THE organ was invented by one Ctesibius a barber of Alexandria, about 100 B. C.

THE lyre was invented by Tasuttes, and improved by Orpheus, Linus and Thamyrus. It had eleven strings, and was played on with a stick or the fingers.

THE cotton cloth known as calico, named from Calicut, a city of India, visited by the Portuguese in 1498, was first introduced into England by the East India Company, in 1631.

SHAVING was introduced among the Romans about B. C. 300. According to Pliny, Scipio Africanus was the first Roman who shaved every day. Subsequently the first shaving day was regarded by the Romans as the entrance upon manhood.

ANESELLUS, who died in 709, is mentioned as the first to introduce ballads into England. Minstrels were protected by a charter of Edward IV., but by a statute of Elizabeth they were made punishable among rogues and vagabonds and sturdy beggars.

THE compass was invented in China 1120 B. C.; used in Venice A. D. 1260; improved at Naples 1302. Its variations were first observed in 1500; its dipping in 1576. The dipping needle is the invention of Robert Newman, a compass maker of Ratcliff, Eng., by whom it was devised in 1580.

SPECTACLES unknown to the ancients, are generally supposed to have been invented by Alexander de Spina, a monk of Florence, Italy, about 1285. According to Dr. Plott they were invented by Roger Bacon about 1280. Manni attributes them to Salvino, who died 1317. On his tomb at Florence is the inscription in Italian: "Here lies Salvino degli Armati, inventor of spectacles. May God pardon his sins."

GWENDOLEN.

Her First and Only Romance and How It Ended—A Sentimental Sketch.

THE sunlight slightly touched with golden gleam the tops of the autumn-stricken trees. Mellow tintinnabulations weirdly wended their musical waves through the gloaming, and softly touched the pink and pearly ears of Gwendolen Gabriella Gerster, as she stood listening by the turnpike gate for the return of the meek and loving cows. Nearer came the sound and louder grew the tinkle of the bells. Twilight grew apace into dusk, and the crickets and lightning bugs sang and flashed in the darkening, dewy air. The old cottage was dimly outlined against the mountain side, and the tallow candle flickered through the window pane. Back and forth the form of her mother passed the door and window. Tired Father Gerster sat dozing by the chimney, slowly, unconsciously puffing curling rings of smoke from his briar-wood pipe. Never was nature more beautiful in quiescent perfection than on that July night. The day had been hot and dry [illegible] the valley, and in the cities of the plain. Gwendolen stood immovable as an incomparably sculptured statue of a Venus de Medici. She did not appreciate the loveliness, but thought only of the loneliness of the summer night on the mountain.

Truly it was a lonely life for such a girl-woman to lead, with no confidential friend [illegible]. By day and by night Old Tiger was her constant friend and solace of her hours of utter solitude. His big brown eyes were fixed upon her, and every breath, every heaving of the bosom, each motion of the lips, and her every movement were worshiped by him. She felt that to Tiger, at least, she was an object of love and respect. But a nameless longing, a vague unrest took possession of her that summer evening, and over her sweet features there came a gloom indescribably sad. Who can fathom the bottomless pit of a soul that longs for love. [illegible] stranger away in the night, and in a strange country. Have mercy on my poor animal, if not on me." And as he spoke Captain Knightly stepped into the candle-light by the door-sill, and bowed very low, with hat in hand.

"Why, papa, of course you wouldn't turn a gentleman away under such circumstances," pleaded Gwendolen.

"Silence, child. I never spoke an unkind word to you, but if you plead for such a thing as the admission of a stranger beneath my roof, I shall become harsh and cruel. It is my will that not for a single hour shall a stranger lodge here. Begone, sir." Rudely and gruffly Father Gerster spoke, and touched his ever-ready revolver as he gave his order to begone.

Gwendolen burst into tears. Mother Gerster interceded and pleaded for the handsome stranger, but the old man was resolute, and the stalwart stranger bowed low as he turned and disappeared into the darkness. Presently the sound of the neighing and trampling was again heard, as he galloped down the mountain side, retracing his way to the forks of the road in the valley, or else seeking a more hospitable roof for the night.

Father and Mother Gerster soon forgot the incident and slept soundly. Gwendolen Gabriella was never so wakeful. Her rude pillow was bathed with tears. Think, think, think, until it seemed that she would go mad; but she could not recall where nor under what circumstances she had seen that noble face. Was it in a dream? No, somewhere, and at some time, she had seen him. She felt that he gave her a smile and token of recognition as he departed. Who could he be? What was that! Is there not a sound out there in the gloom? Up, quietly up she raised the curtain. The moon was struggling through the clouds. Yes, there in the garden is a man. He is digging. He stoops, stands up, the light strikes his face. It glitters in the moonbeams. He ties a strap to either end and swings it over his shoulder. There is a sound in the room below. Father Gerster is rising. He is disturbed. Gwendolen raises the window, making considerable noise, and calls out into the air: "Father Gerster, are you up?" The stranger hears, he speeds across to the copse and disappears. The cottage door is opened and Father Gerster steps out into the moonlight. His rifle is in the hollow of his elbow. He scans the yard and peers into the gloom. Gwendolen, from above, calls down: "Father Gerster, is that you down there? I heard a noise, what is it?"

"I, too, heard a noise, Gwendolen. I fear your handsome stranger has not entirely left us. If I might but see him, this good and trusty rifle should speed him to Heaven."

He retires again. All is quiet. An hour passes away. Out into the moonlight again stands the stranger. He beckons and Gwendolen bows. Lightly she drops from the window. Why has she such confidence in that strange man? She knows not. They meet. Together they glide away down the road, until the charger is found, and then they mount. A goodly distance is traversed, and then, dismounting, he shows her, by the light of the pale moon's glance, the papers which show that she is Lady Gwendolen Beauchamp, heiress of the fairest estates in all Britain. Captain Knightly is her cousin. They were playmates. Old Gerster is a pirate, robber and thief. He abducted her and another bears her title. Morning comes. They are married.

SMITH D. FRY.

OLEO VERSUS BUTTER.

An Unparalleled and Inexcusable Case of Masculine Villainy.

Mrs. Blank is a model housewife. She spends a portion of each day in personal supervision of the domestic arrangements of the household. She directs the purchases made for the family larder and only the choicest viands will be accepted. On one point Mrs. Blank is particularly positive. It is, says the Chicago Tribune, the selection of butter.

Nothing but the choicest Orange County product is allowed on the table. She has often said that "if there was one thing she was posted on it was butter."

Her husband was skeptical, and resolved to test his wife's judgment. So he purchased a firkin of the choicest New York butter at $1.60 a pound and had the lid stenciled "oleomargarine." Then the wily man had the word partially erased as if the merchant had sought to conceal the true nature of the tub's contents. The tub was sent home. When he went to dinner he was confronted by Mrs. Blank as soon as he had crossed the threshold.

"John," said she, in a severe tone, "are you out of your head? What do you mean by sending that horrid stuff home?"

"Why, my dear, I am assured that it is clean, and a good deal better than half the butter we get. So I thought we might give it a trial, at least."

This reply nearly took the good lady's breath away. Finally she broke forth:

"And do you think I am going to eat that stuff? Why, the moment I tasted it I felt sick. If you want to eat it you may, but I don't propose to fly in the face of Providence in that way."

Before her husband came down to dinner he let his daughter and son into the secret. At the table some of the "oleo" was set before the master of the house. He ate freely of it and finally induced his children to partake.

"Why, mamma," said the daughter, "it's every bit as good as Orange County butter. Try it."

"No, I thank you," was the freezing reply.

The son joined his sister in praise of the "oleo," and finally Mrs. —— was induced to try a little.

"And you folks call this vile stuff good? Why, it fairly chokes me."

The next day Mr. —— went to his wife and said that he would send the stuff back and return in its place some of the usual good. Then he went down-town, bought a tub of oleomargarine and had it marked "Orange County butter." This was sent home, and at dinner Mrs. —— discoursed at length the virtues of the new "butter." She ate with relish, and it was two days before Mr. —— told of his villainy. Then there was a pretty how d'ye do.

A MONTE-CARLO ROMANCE.

Love and Life with Gold, and, Failing Gold, Love and Death.

A young married man of Lyons fell in love with a young married woman, says George R. Sims in the London Referee. They met secretly, adored each other, and agreed to fly together—to put the seas between themselves and their families. But there was a slight difficulty in the way. They had very little money for a long journey, and they wanted to be far, far away—in America for choice. Then the idea came to the man that they would take their small capital of a few hundred francs and go to Monte Carlo and make it into a fortune—a fortune which would enable them to live in peace and plenty on a far-off shore. So it came that one day, with a small box and a portmanteau the fugitives arrived at Monte Carlo and put up in a little hotel, where for eight francs a day you could have bed and board. They had only a few francs with them. In the letter which they had left behind they explained that from the first their arrangements were complete. They foresaw the possibilities of the situation. They would play until they had won enough to go to America or they would lose all. And if they lost all they would die together and give their friends no further trouble about them.

They were a few days only in Monte Carlo. They risked their louis only a few at a time, and they spent the remainder of the days and evenings in strolling about the romantic glades and quiet pathways of the beautiful gardens, whispering together of love and looking into each other's eyes.

The end came quickly. One evening they went up in the soft moonlight to the fairy land of Monte Carlo. They entered the Casino. They had come to their last few golden coins. One by one the croupier's remorseless rake swept them away and then the lovers went out of the hot, crowded rooms, out from the glare of the chandeliers and swinging lamps into the tender moonlight again. Down "the Staircase of Fortune" arm in arm they went along the glorious marble terraces that look upon the sea, on to where at the foot of the great rock on which Monaco stands there lies the Condamine. It was their last walk together. The lovers were going home to die.

That night in some way which I was unable to ascertain, the guilty and ruined man and woman obtained some charcoal and got it into their bed-room. They then closed the windows and doors and prepared for death. They wrote a letter—a letter which an official assured me was so touching that, as he read it in the room where they lay dead, the tears ran down his cheeks. Then the girl—she was but a girl—dressed herself in snowy white and placed in her breast a sweet bouquet of violets. Then the charcoal was lighted and the lovers laid themselves out for death, side by side, and passed dreamily into sleep, from sleep to death, and from death to judgment.

It is not a moral story; it is not a new story. I have told it simply as it happened.

A Drummer's Last Resort.

"Look out, young feller; what are you about?" said the policeman in a certain Southern town to a traveling man who was toying with his cane with the evident intention of smashing in the glass around a street lamp.

"Ah, there you are," said the traveling man, as the glass gave way with a crash. "Now, if you will be good enough to arrest me, I will be obliged to you."

"You seem mighty anxious to get arrested," said the officer.

"Yes; I was a little bit afraid you wouldn't notice me. I've got to stay here about three days till I hear from my firm on business matters."

"Well, you don't want to spend that time in jail, do you?"

"Yes; I've tried both the hotels here."

BE STILL, AND WAIT.

Be still, and wait,
And bear thy fate—
If thou art poor or desolate—
As patiently
As it may be,
Till better fortune comes to thee.

Though black the night,
No star in sight,
There surely comes the morning light;
So o'er thy sky
Of [illegible] dye
The sun will shine out by and by.

Be still, and wait,
Nor frown at fate,
Be thy misfortune small or great;
For thou shouldst know
That joy and woe
Have, like the tides, their ebb and flow.

The fret and strain
Of heart and brain
Increase the gloom, augment the pain;
But hours of calm—
Like hallowed psalm—
To aching wounds will furnish balm.

Though many a bliss
Thou'rt doomed to miss
In such a changing world as this,
Thy fears abate;
Be still, and wait,
For joy will find thee—soon or late.

UNEQUAL PARTNERSHIP.

What Happened to the Firm of Huntington & Wife.

Never dawned a brighter morning than that which ushered in Ray Huntington's wedding day. Never throbbed a happier heart than that of the fair girl who, forsaking home and friends, vowed to love, honor and obey him, "until death do us part."

"She was the belle of the village, and ought to have had her choice among us all," explained Carl Trenton, who, every body knew, had been refused by the bride at least a dozen times.

"He is so handsome—and rich, too, they say. Really, Nell Alden has done remarkably well," said more than one envious maiden.

Ray Huntington, although he was not a rich man, was advancing rapidly on the road to wealth. As he was a lawyer in a distant city, the wedded pair at once went to the home which he had provided there, a modest cottage in the suburbs, very plainly furnished, but as beautiful as a palace in the eyes of the loving bride.

"We shall be away from the disagreeable noise and bustle, dearest," said Ray, uneasily. "I can lunch at Roger & Allen's, and be home for an early tea, except, perhaps, in very busy seasons. Besides, I get this place at a bargain—it costs dreadfully to rent—and we must really economize in every way possible. We must creep before we can walk, Nellie."

"I am sure every thing is as nice as it can be," said the wife. "It is much better than living right in the city. I am sure that I should be crazy in a week, there."

"I don't doubt it," returned the relieved husband. "But you will not be bothered here at all. I will attend to the marketing each day as I go to town, and we will have a quiet home of our own."

That was the beginning.

Ray Huntington's boasted creed was that marriage was simply a partnership of two congenial souls—a blending of two natures into a perfect whole, whose thoughts, whose aims, whose energies were one. That was all very well, if our legal gentleman had only lived up to his professed belief. But, like many others, he professed one thing and lived another. While he often declared that a man and his wife were one, his daily life added most emphatically: "And the man is that one."

Pretty, loyal Nellie was not long in discovering the fact, and, although grieved that her exalted idol proved to be but common clay, after all, she made the best of life as she found it, and succeeded in eking out the scanty allowance, which was grudgingly given, to an extent which surprised and delighted him.

"It isn't every man has a wife like mine," he often said confidentially to a friend, but never a word of praise to the toiling wife herself.

What wonder that the roses in her cheeks gave place to colorless lilies, and "crow's feet" multiplied in the fair face, as added claims taxed her strength and economy. Tiny feet pattered here and there, baby voices made the sweetest of all music to the mother heart, and added numbers brought added labor to the patient, mother hands.

Ray Huntington was recognized by the world (by his world, in which his care-worn wife had no part) as a successful man. He attended his clubs, and dressed in a manner befitting his station, while his wife wore shabby calico.

"Because I must, my dear, you do not understand," he explained, when she gently chided him for some extravagant outlay. "It is quite necessary that one in my position should do so. I heard it hinted that I was to be run for mayor next year. Think of that, my dear."

And the uncomplaining woman did think of the proposed honor—thought of it with added dread, as she toiled in the kitchen, with no help except an ignorant Swede girl, an emigrant, whose chief recommendation was her patient love for the little ones.

Once she ventured to suggest an allowance for family use, as the busy lawyer often forgot to order the necessary articles, but she was met with indignant surprise.

"Women know nothing about spending money, Nellie, I am surprised! I will attend to it. What! Gretchen wants more money! Wasn't it last week that I gave you two dollars for her?"

"Yes, but she has been here four weeks. We owe her five dollars now," Nellie began with crimson face, and went on desperately: "Mother wrote that she is going to visit us next month. She has never been here—has never seen our children. Charlie must have new shoes and clothes. Baby needs new flannels, and—this is the best dress I have in the world. You wouldn't want me to feel ashamed to welcome my own dear mother, Ray?"

"How much money do you want?" he asked, frigidly.

"Fifty dollars at least to make us comfortable and respectable," she replied, with painful hesitation.

"Fifty dollars! I am not made of money," he exclaimed, even while his faithful conscience reminded him that he had paid more than that sum for a club dinner, the week before, and paid it with a willing smile. "Here, this must do," and he counted four five-dollar bills into her hand.

With one startled, indignant glance, the wife's hand shut convulsively over the money, and she left the room hastily.

"She will make that do," muttered her husband, uneasily, watching her. "Next time I will give her more, and I really think I will call at Blankton's, and order one of those new silks sent up."

The silk came, and Nellie smiled bitterly, as she laid it in the darkest corner of her bureau drawer. Charlie rejoiced in new clothes and real "boy's boots," baby wore new, soft, warm flannels, Gretchen was paid, but there was nothing left to replenish the mother's wardrobe.

Alas! it seemed as if it was never to need it.

One evening Ray Huntington returned to find his well-ordered house in confusion. Baby had cried herself to sleep, and was still sobbing pitifully, while Charlie was crying softly by the chamber door, where Gretchen was vainly trying to quiet the fever-stricken wife and mother.

"Oh, papa, will my boo'ful mamma die? Say, papa, will she die?" wailed Charlie, creeping timidly to his father's side.

Gretchen looked up hopefully as he entered.

"I will do it in a moment, Ray," cried Nellie, with crimson cheeks and strangely bright eyes. "I only stopped to rest for a moment, my—my head feels so queerly, but I will get your tea at once."

"Lie still, dearest," he said, more gently than he had spoken for many months. "Gretchen, take this note to Dr. Davis, and tell as you come back to ask Mrs. Hall if she will run in a few moments."

Dr. Davis came, a gray-haired man, who had read many of this world's lessons aright.

"Overwork, my dear sir. System completely run down. I have noticed it. No help but that raw Swede girl—willing enough, but not capable, sir. Men don't know the value of good wives until they lose them," said the old man, bluntly.

"You don't think—she—my wife—Nellie will not die!" cried the startled lawyer.

"Perhaps not—hope not. But she is worked down, and the worst of it is, she will carry all her worry and trouble with her through her delirium. What is that about partnership, Huntington? I have heard you define marriage, often enough. How have you used this partner of yours? Have you shared the profits honestly? I'd like to have you compare accounts, you will have time enough before your wife gets up again. I suppose she has a mother. Send for her at once. Yes, yes, I'll be round in the morning, but more depends upon loving care than upon me; mind, I said loving care. Good night, sir."

In the weary, almost hopeless time of anxious waiting, Ray Huntington learned a new meaning of his favorite creed. In her delirium Nellie told him many things which she would never have mentioned in her rational moments.

At last there came a day when the little cottage was as silent as death; when the dread angel hovered on the threshold, then passed mercifully by; when a human flower blossomed but to perish, and a tiny life went out with its first glimpse of earth.

"Yes, she will live," said good Dr. Davis, suspiciously wiping his glasses with unusual energy. "You have learned your lesson easier than many men do, Huntington, for you will have your wife again. If you love her, cherish her. That's the word, cherish her, man. Make her happy. She is your partner in life. She has common sense, I suppose! Well, then, allow her her share of the profits. Never let her be ashamed of her husband's meanness. I am a blunt old man, sir, but I mean well. I have seen so much of this one-sided partnership business among married people, that I have no patience left. Your wife has just as much right to her share of your income as you have to yours. I hope you're not offended, but I'm glad I've had the courage to give you something to think about. Keep up the loving care, Huntington, and your wife will be around in a month."

That month was one of pleasure and sorrow to the repentant husband, but he had resolved upon a new course of action, and as they sat at the table on New Year's eve, he said, tenderly: "It was kind of the mother to leave us to begin the new year together, Nellie; it shall be the beginning of a new life for us. Henceforth my 'partner' is an equal with myself. The household is your branch of the business, I will see that you have sufficient funds to cover all the expenses in a creditable way. My wife shall never again feel ashamed because of my stinginess."

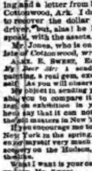
"It was never that," Nellie protested, loyally.

"Perhaps you were not sensible of it, but the feeling was there just the same," replied her husband, firmly. "It shall never happen again. To-morrow the firm of Huntington & Wife begins anew, and on a different basis. I will cherish my family, hereafter."

And happy years have proved the truth of his vow.—Ella H. Stranton, in Woman's Magazine.

A CANDID CRITICISM.

Mr. Sweet Receives a Picture—His Discussion with a Prominent New York Artist on the Same—An Interesting Art Talk.



WEEK before Christmas an express wagon paused in front of my humble palace in Harlem. A man with large red ears, all the tucks in which seemed to have been let out, extricated a box from his wagon and proceeded to deliver it at my door. As it was from Arkansas I supposed it contained ripe persimmons, or some other tribute of respect from some admirer, hence I was very much elated, even after the man reminded me that there was a dollar and a half express charges on the box.

As I am the unfortunate victim of the ripe persimmon habit, I parted with the dollar and a half, and then with wild yelps of joy and a borrowed hatchet, I proceeded to tamper with the upper crust of the box.

Then I recoiled, and I will state, in the interest of science, that my recoil very much exceeded my propulsive velocity. In my anguish I used strong language, for there were no persimmons or other delicacies in the box. It contained an alleged oil painting and a letter from Satterlee V. Jones, of Cottonwood, Ark. I darted out of the house to recover the dollar and a half from the driver, but, alas! he had swum off, so to speak, with the assets.

Mr. Jones, who is one of the leading artists of Cottonwood, writes me as follows:

Alex. E. Sweet, Esq., New York City—My Dear Sir: I send you a beautiful oil painting, a real gem, executed entirely by myself. As you will observe it is a landscape.

My object in sending you this gem is to enable you to compare it with imported paintings on exhibition in your city. My friends here say that it can not be equalled by any of the old masters in New York.

If you encourage me to do so, I shall move to New York in the spring. I am sure I would enjoy myself very much painting little bits of scenery on the Hudson, rocks and trees and the like.

What I want is your candid, not your candied opinion, Mr. Sweet.

Yours truly,
SATTERLEE V. JONES.

I immediately sat down, and seizing my most sarcastic pen by the neck, wrote Mr. Jones as follows:

MY DEAR SIR: Many thanks for your kindness in sending me the work of art, on which there was a dollar and a half unpaid express charges. While I am not an artist, still I am not entirely artless, so to speak. Your little picture is undoubtedly a gem, and I congratulate you on your success as a gemist.

A well-executed picture like the one before me is a perpetual teacher of refinement. A silent influence ever goes forth from a picture of that class. We feel its force and we order our lives accordingly. It grows into one's soul and leaves a dreamlike pleasure which years of hardship and toil can not obliterate. You can send back the dollar and a half by postal note or money order.

Thanking you again for the confidence bestowed on me, and hoping to hear from you soon, I remain, yours truly,
ALEX. E. SWEET.

P. S.—I was just about to mail this letter when I received a visit from my old friend, Prof. Mahlstick, of the National Academy of Design. Besides being one of the greatest of living painters, he is a recognized critic on all matters pertaining to art. Thinking you would like to have my favorable criticism corroborated by such high authority, I submitted your picture to him. He examined it carefully, and turning it over looked on the back and asked:

"Well, what is it?"

After telling him that the unpaid express charges alone were one dollar and a half, I explained that it was a landscape, but he evidently did not believe me.

He insisted that the ecru colored mountain in the background was a dromedary, and he called my attention to its four legs. I maintained that it was a mountain, but the professor said he had heard of the foot of a mountain, but no mountain ever had four legs. He rather got the better of me in the argument. I think you must have inadvertently painted the legs on that mountain. I know it placed me in a very awkward position, and the professor even intimated that I didn't know any more about art than you do, which is rather tough on me. I wish you would be more careful in the future where you put your legs.

We had another dispute about the two trees in the foreground. He could not understand why two men should stand on their heads and wave their legs around. He evidently mistook the limbs of the tree for the legs of men standing on their heads. He wanted to bet, but when I thought of that dollar and a half I hedged.

The professor is not quite satisfied with the cow. She is leaning back on her tail, and no real cow does that, hence he concluded that it must be a kangaroo, although the horns bothered him somewhat. He said that he would compromise and take the supposed cow for a ship, but when he observed the absence of spars he clung to the kangaroo theory, although, seen from one stand-point, it looked like the execution of Charles I.

The professor also expected me to tell him what was the meaning of the big red dog on the roof of the house, and what the mashed raspberry wagon wheel was doing in the sky, that is if the rag carpet in the background is meant for the firmament.

I told him that the red dog was a bird, and the cart wheel was the setting sun. Am I right about it? Let me know about it when you remit the dollar and a half unpaid express charges.

In criticizing the picture, Prof. Mahlstick said something about the superfluity of the inconsistent coloring within the confines of the foliage on the left marring the tout ensemble, while the chiaro oscuro was altogether too a la mode and de trop.

Perhaps you know what he means by these technical terms. I don't. The nearest I ever came to being an artist was when my father proposed to apprentice me to a painter and glazier.

When I spoke to the professor about your coming to New York and painting rocks and bits of scenery on the Hudson, he yawned and said:

"Y-a-a-s, patent medicine ads, I suppose."

I asked the professor if he couldn't give you any hints, and he told me to write you to get treated for color blindness, and to buy cheaper canvas; so you see, Satterlee, he takes considerable interest in you. He also said something about 'painting' your nose, but I forgot what it was. However, he did say that your landscape reminded him of "a busted vermilion factory."

I also questioned professor in regard to your drawing. After examining once more very critically the drawing in your landscape, he said that he had no doubt but that your chances for drawing a turkey at a raffle were as good as anybody else's. In regard to what he called "technique" of your landscape, his criticism was less favorable. He said that you didn't know as much about "technique" as a door-[illegible] [illegible] knew about the refraction of light; and he suggested that you devote your time to painting signs, fences, wagon bodies and the like. He also said that if you worked hard, and improved a great deal, you might become an amateur artist in about ten years.

I hope you will not find it unpleasant to take this advice. Very often advice is like castor oil—easy enough to give, but hard to take. However, console yourself with the idea that possibly the professor is actuated by motives of professional jealousy, and he is merely trying to discourage you from coming to New York.

Before closing this letter I desire to call your attention to the dollar and a half unpaid express charges that were almost wrenched from me by the expressman who delivered your pictures. Shall I draw on you for the amount? Your failure to reimburse me is calculated to set me back about six months in my finances.

It is true that my toes do not protrude through my boots into the atmosphere as copiously as they did when I first started in journalism, and my meals are assimilated with much greater regularity now than formerly; but, nevertheless, I feel the loss of that dollar and a half keenly. I should prefer to feel the dollar and a half itself.

You must remember that we New Yorkers have to be very economical in order to complete the Grant monument during the present century. At present, one of the first things that strikes the eye of the visitor is the atmosphere in which the Grant monument is going to rise—as soon as we have got the money.

All that we need to complete the one million dollar monument is the money. We have any number of designs of the monument, but the design to pay for it is much needed.

You would be surprised, my dear artist friend, and debtor to the tune of a dollar and a half, at the numerousness of people in New York who say Grant needs no monument, that they carry his memory in their hearts. They seem to have a working majority in both houses. They are the same people who never have but one cigar about them when you want to smoke.

Every thing progresses in New York except the Grant monument fund, but if you will promptly remit the dollar and a half unpaid express charges I will give it a boom.

Prof. Mahlstick has examined your landscape again, and requests me to ask you to send him your photograph. He says he wants to see what the man looks like who painted that picture. You can send it when you remit the dollar and a half unpaid express charges. Send it at once. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain, Yours truly,
ALEX. E. SWEET.

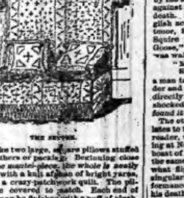
AN INGENIOUS SETTEE.

How to Make It and Where to Put It—A Good Suggestion.

A mantel-piece without a fire-place always gives the appearance that something is wanting. This air of vacancy is practically dispelled in the construction of a settee under the mantel-piece.

For this purpose take an ordinary pine box about four feet long, one and one-half feet high and two feet wide. On the top tack a cushion filled with excelsior packing. Along the wall, which serves as the back fasten a piece of an old comforter or blanket.



THE SETTEE.

Also make two large, square pillows stuffed with feathers or packing. Beginning close under the mantel-piece, the whole is neatly covered with a knit afghan of bright yarns, or with a crazy-patchwork quilt. The pillows are covered to match. Each end of the box may be finished with a puff of plush, fastened in the center with cord and tassels.
ANNA HINRICHS.

Donn Piatt.

"Donn Piatt is a double nature," says one of his old admirers in Washington City. "He has the faculty of sense, common sense, clear brains, highly developed. Then, when he chooses to assume it, he is as complete a specimen of nonsense as ever lived. He seems equally able to assume either faculty and permit it to dominate him in all of his writings and sayings. He is a nervous, excitable man, but that is owing to impaired health and his army experience. But, after all, there is no warmer heart, no truer friend, anywhere on earth."

He Deserved His Fate.

"Old wine and old friends are the best, every time. I want no new people, nor new ways in my business."

He refused to advertise. His old friends died. No new ones came. His old wines were used. He had no money to buy more. His business went to pieces.

Wild Camels in Arizona.

Two wild camels, which run away like deer from mankind, are seen occasionally on the Gila river, near Cottonwood, A. T. They are the last remnant of the band imported by the Government and used on the desert for pack animals some years ago. The scheme did not prove successful and four of them were turned loose. Two have either died or been killed.

Milk Punches.

"Milk is good for dyspepsia, George, dear. Let me pour you a glass of pure Alderney."

"No, thank you, wifey. It is milk that has upset my stomach so. I took too much milk in the form of punches last night."

IRISH FAMILY NAMES.

Changes by Which "Mac's" and "O's" Have Become Lost.

The Transition of Patronymics from Ancient Irish Into the Present English—The Original of Murphy, Connelly and Other Common Names.

Family names or hereditary surnames first became fixed in Ireland in the reign of Brian Boruma, between the years [illegible] and 1014. For a long time, says the Irish Times, it was a popular error that the prefix "O" to a name signified that the bearer was of royal descent, while a Mac had no special significance of high social standing. This error has been exploded by showing that several Kings in Ireland have borne the prefix of Mac to their names, while some of the lowest and most obscure families bore the prefix "O." When surnames first became hereditary some families went back several generations to select an illustrious ancestor from whom to take a name. Mac signifies son, like the Anglo-Norman Fitz, a corruption of the Latin filius, a son. "O" was taken to signify that the name was taken from a grandfather or more remote ancestor.

Appended is a list of some of the popular names to be met with every day, showing the transition of the name from the ancient Irish into the present English. In some instances several different names were made from the same Irish name. Generally the change was made into something bearing a similar sound to that of the original.

Mac and O'Gowan into Smith, MacIntyre into Carpenter, MacSpallane into Spencer, MacCongry into L'Estrange, MacCrossan into Crosby, O'Reilly into Ridley, O'Donnell into Daniels, O'Sullivan into Silvers and Silvan, MacCarthy into Carter, O'Neil into Neil or Neel. MacConava was corrupted into Conover, and Anglicised into Ford. In the same way O'Marcachain was translated into Ryder and Anglicised Markham. MacConry was corrupted into Conroy, and erroneously translated into King. Rogers is an Anglicisation of the Irish name MacRory. Matthews is the English of MacMahon. MacCowan is the original from which has been corrupted Camphill, Cambell, Howell and Caulfield. MacOscar in like manner has been altered into Cosgrove and Costello, MacMurtagh to Mortimer, O'Clery to Clarke and Clerkin, O'Cliodellan to Cunningham. The O'Dorcy's, of Galway, altered their name to D'Arcy and D'Orsay, to give the impression that they were descendants of the Anglo-Norman family of D'Arcy. O'Dulany is the original from which is derived Delany and DeLani.

Many Irish names have been abbreviated, not through any desire on the part of the bearer to hide their origin, but in order to render the names more pronounceable in English. Of these MacEochaidh is only an example and is now known as McKeogh and Keogh; MacGillapatrick, to Fitzpatrick; MacGillaroe, to Gilroy and Kilroy; MacGilla Brigude, to McBride; MacGillafinnen, to Linden and Leonard; MacGennis, to Ennis and Guinness; O'Mulryan, to Ryan; MacMurragh, to Kavanagh.

The original of Murphy is O'Murchadha, it was Anglicised O'Murchoe and latterly Murphy. Connelly and Connolly are derived from O'Conghalaigh; Clancy is MacFlannchadha in Irish, and was Anglicised MacClancy and then Clancy; the family once owned the barony of Rosseclogher, in the county of Leitrim. Tuomy comes from Tuath-da-Mhuighe; it was the name of two baronies in King's County, and was afterwards adopted by the family bearing the Irish name O'Maolchel[illegible]. Scully is derived from O'Scolaighe. Quinn comes from O'Cuinn, a family once numerous and powerful in the County Tyrone. Phelan and Whelan are each corruptions of O'Faolian; O'Toole is Irish is O'Tuathail. Sullivan, with and without the O prefixed, is derived from O'Suilleabhain.

The original Kelly, in Irish O'Ceallaigh, was descended from Aodh-Staine, monarch of Ireland. Its last representative was Congalach O'Kelly, Lord of Bregia, who died in 1292. The family afterwards became scattered, so that there are but few parishes in the country but has some of these Kellys.

It will be a surprise to many to learn that Byron is not an English name, but a corruption of the ancient name of O'Beirne, another corruption of the name being Bruin. O'Brollaghan is the original of Bradley, while in Scotland it is made Brodie. Harrington is an Anglicised form of O'Haraghty and O'Hennessy. O'Hombair was changed to Ivers by the gentry and to Howard by the peasantry. O'Mulligan in the same way has been changed to Molyneaux and Baldwin. O'Honeen to Green, O'Rourke to Rooke, MacFirbis to Forbes, O'Cornain to Corbett, O'Grieghan to Graham, O'Heyne to Hindes, Hynes, Hine and Haynes or Hayne, O'Barran to Barrington and Barron, MacHugh to Hughes, MacGillamire to Gilmore, O'Leyne to Lyons, O'Houlahan to Holland, O'Druman to Drummond.

The Irish in early times also had distinctive Christian names and these have also undergone a change similar to those in the surnames, though frequently there have been no cause for the Anglicisation; thus Cormack has been rendered into Charles, though the latter is not a translation and has little similarity in sound. Mahon was turned into Matthew; Teige, into Timothy; Art, into Arthur; Donal, into Daniel; Gorob, into Jeoffry; Fiughin, into Florence; Feradach, into Frederic; Eoghan, into Owen, and many others have undergone like changes.

STRANGE COINCIDENCES.

Incidents from Which the Superstitious Can Draw a Moral.

Most expressive coincidences have sometimes occurred in the words of actors in their last appearance on the stage, says the New York Epoch. An English actor named Cummins, some twenty years ago, appeared in a play in which it fell to him to deliver these lines:

"Be witness for me, ye celestial hosts,
Such mercy and such pardon as my soul
Accords to thee and begs of heaven to show thee
May such befall me at my last hour."

The last words had scarcely dropped from his lips when he fell dead on the stage.

The following instances may be regarded by the superstitious as a sufficient warning against all jests of such a grim subject as death. It is related by Mr. Bolton, an English actor and author, that the famous tenor, Sims Reeves, was once playing the Squire in the pantomime of "Old Mother Goose," and at the very moment when he was walking off the stage, singing:

"My wife's at rest, there let her lie,
She's at rest, and so am I,"

a man tapped him hurriedly on the shoulder and whispered: "You must come home directly; Mrs. Reeves is dead." Greatly shocked, Mr. Reeves hurried home and found it only too true.

The other instance of which I refer relates to the death of J. W. Coudry, a mind reader, who, a short time ago, while lecturing at New Haven, Conn., took occasion to boast of his entire freedom from fear, at the same time speaking of death in a somewhat flippant and jesting manner. Very singularly, before the conclusion of his performance, he was stricken with apoplexy, his death occurring only two days later.

How Lace Is Washed.

The washers of nice lace form a class of expert labor quite by themselves, and few people have any idea of the amount of labor involved in the cleansing operation, and of the skill and knowledge required. This labor, of course, comes in chiefly in the drying, for the washing is but a simple thing in comparison. A table is cushioned and covered closely with a spotless cloth, and on this the lace is stretched with an intricate care that is amazing; through every mesh a pin is placed to hold it in place, and the whole tracery of the pattern is thus pricked out till every leaf and spray and sprig is firmly fastened so that it can not shrivel or contract. A whole day being sometimes used up in preparing a single yard of the lace, so that when dry it is lifted off soft and perfect and unimpaired in the design.

A Counting Contrivance.

Some genius has just made a most elaborate affair specially designed to facilitate the tallying of tabulated statistics. His method consists essentially in first recording the data relating to each person by punching holes in the sheets or strips of electrically non-conducting material (paper) and then counting or tallying these data, either separately or in combination, by means of mechanical counters operated by electro magnets, the circuits through which are controlled by the perforated cards or strips.

A Morocco Alarm Clock.

Mail carriers in Morocco are said to avoid risk of losing their places by oversleeping by tying a string to one foot and setting the end of it on fire before they go to sleep. The string, they know from experience, will burn so long, and when the fire reaches their foot it is time for them to get up.

TAMING A HUSBAND.

The Sarcastic Advice of a Woman Who Has Had Three of Them.

Certainly—you can't avoid amiss, my dear woman, exclaims a female contributor to the New York Ledger. If he hasn't done "this or that," he has probably done something else. Looking clearly, the domestic atmosphere; you have to keep up a perpetual cannonading, or there will be a revolt. Husbands get terribly unmanageable sometimes unless they are kept up to the mark. Don't lose any time about it either. Once let a man hoist the flag of independence and unless you haul it down for him double quick time you're a lost woman. Once allow him to suppose that he's master of the house, and the first you know it will be: "Minnie, bring me a match for my cigar, that's a dear," or, "Minnie, just look for my cravat, will you?" or even, "Minnie, I've brought Jones and Howard home to dinner; couldn't help asking 'em. You needn't make any extra parade, but just get a few oysters, or a lobster or something!" That's the way you'll be victimized. Once begin waiting on him, and you'll have business for the rest of your life. Put him down, and keep him there.

"How?"

That's a pretty question to ask. The "hows" are as thick as mosquitoes on an August evening. Blame him for every thing he does; make up your mind not to be satisfied under any circumstances whatever. If it rains, blame him because the sun doesn't shine; if he puts his newspaper on one corner of the mantel-piece, scold him because he didn't put it on the other; if he laughs above his breath, put your hands to your ears, and ask him "if he supposes you were made without nerves!" If he frowns, call him an ill-natured brute.

If he brings home tickets for the opera, tell him you had set your heart on going to the theater. If he talks to a lady, turn jealous, go into hysterics; if he joins a knot of gentlemen, tell him "it's very plain that his poor wife's society has no longer any charms for him." If he invites friends to your house, tell him that "you don't keep a hotel;" if he doesn't invite them, tell him he is an unsocial bear, who would like to keep you alone the whole time. If he has a cold in his head, deluge the whole house with soap-and-water and scrub-brushes; if he suffers from toothache, insist on having every window in the room open, on account of "fresh air." If he is fond of roast turkey, see that cold pork is on the table instead; if he likes coffee, discover, all of a sudden, that it is not healthy, and substitute milk and water!

Don't give him his own way in any one particular—contradict him on all occasions—tread on his toes whenever he is going to say any thing, and then fret at him for being "silent and sulky." Never allow him to wear his best coat—put him on a diet of one shirt a week—keep the "change" and deal it out to him by the half dime—growl at his extravagance whenever he buys a new hat, and hunt in all his pockets for strong cigars, champagne corks, peanut shells, or any such silent witnesses to his depravity.

Why, if you didn't keep up this constant system of intimidation, he might actually be impudent enough to chuck you under the chin, or pull your curls, or even kiss you once in awhile. He might keep dinner waiting half a minute; he might steal one of your little handkerchiefs out of the bureau drawer when he couldn't find his own yellow border concerns; he might elevate his feet on the parlor mantel; he might imagine home was a place to enjoy himself in; he might be insane enough to suppose that a wife liked to wait on her husband!

There is no telling what he might not do or say or think if he were not judiciously snubbed.

Just follow up this system, however, and you'll be pretty sure to take the starch out of him. Don't get discouraged if he is a little stiff and "set in his way" at first; two or three months of the above discipline will make him as limp as an old dish-rag. You may be obliged to fight one or two pitched battles, but that's of no consequence. You have always one great resort—if the day is going against you, turn on the tears! He can't go sniveling about the house with red eyes and swelled nose—you can! Tears will subdue a man when the rest of the feminine artillery won't! Try it just once, and see!

That's the way to break them in, girls! No failure and warranted to cure the worst cases—no better receipt in the whole conjugal pharmacopoeia for transforming a high-spirited young fellow into a meek, umbrella-carrying, bill-paying, cradle-rocking machine who knows his "place," and never speaks unless his wife says he may.

ECCENTRIC DISCIPLINE.

How a Boston Pater Familias Punished His Naughty Boy.

"I am writing the scrappy sort of letter which is particularly obnoxious to the soul of the editor, and, therefore, take occasion to tuck in a story with a moral which," writes Arlo Bates in one of his Boston letters, "was told the other day in a discussion on the training of children. A gentleman who is regarded as somewhat eccentric by the more conventional of his acquaintances, and whose management of his small son, a lad of some seven years, is especially amusing to the gossips, returned home the other evening to be met with the news that the boy had cut a hole in the drawing-room sofa.

"Well, my son," the father said, after being informed by the lad that he had done the damage under the pressure of an irresistible desire, such as is usually the plea of children in similar circumstances. "I am very sorry that you should spoil my sofa. I have just paid $75 to have it recovered, and I can not afford to have that done over again. The only thing I can see is for you to sit on that cut place when anybody is here so as to cover it. I know you don't like company very well, but I know your mother would be ashamed to have callers see that hole."

The small boy knew his father too well to protest, and indeed for the moment he was probably only too happy to get off so easily. When, however, he had been summoned to sit on that cut two or three times things wore a different aspect. He heard the door-bell ring with apprehension, and when he was called for to run to the drawing-room he burst into wailing and weeping so violent that his presence had to be dispensed with.

"Now, my son," his father said to him: "I did not make any fuss when you cut my new sofa covering, and I can't allow you to make a fuss about bearing the consequences of what you did to please yourself."

The poor little wretch was reduced to a condition of despair pitiful to behold, when his father said to him:

"Now, Willie, I am going to make a proposition to you. You may do just as you please about it. I promised you a soldier's uniform at Christmas; now, if you had rather I took that money and had the sofa mended, I would put enough in it to get the thing done. But if I do you will get no uniform at Christmas."

The lad chose to have the sofa mended, and at Christmas he bore his disappointment like his father's son. He did have, it is only fair to his father to add, a good deal in the way of alleviations of one sort and another.

Not to be Made by [illegible].

Dr. Lyman reports through the New York Medical Journal some very accurate investigations concerning the use of tobacco. In an observation of thirty-eight boys of all classes of society and of average health, who had been using tobacco for from two months to two years, twenty-seven showed serious injury to the constitution and checked physical development. Thirty-two showed damage done to the heart's action, disordered digestion and a craving for alcohol. Thirteen had intermittency of the pulse and one had consumption. After the abandonment of tobacco, within six months one-half were free from all the above symptoms and the remainder were cured by the end of the year. The Maoris are given as an instance of the evil resulting from tobacco. This race was, when first discovered, the finest developed of any tribe on the Pacific. It is now decimated in numbers and degenerate in type. This is said to be owing to their inordinate fondness for tobacco.

Impracticable People.

We may, with very little inquietude, see a man persist in a project which he has found to be impracticable—live in an inconvenient house because it was contrived by himself, or wear a coat of a particular cut in hopes by perseverance to bring it into fashion. These are indeed follies; but they are only follies, and however wild or ridiculous, can very little affect others. Indeed, the folly of persisting in impracticable ideas is generally visited only on ourselves.

Rarely has a public address attracted such widespread interest as the recent Centennial sermon delivered by Bishop Potter in the historic church of St. Paul, New York.

The comment regarding it is general, and while some criticise the utterances of the Bishop as out of place, the majority applaud as opportune and just his bravery and truthfulness in decreeing condemnation upon partisan degeneracy of the present day.

He performed what to him appeared a timely obligation, and if, by so doing, the political machine as now engineered and run was wrenched, every patriotic citizen should rejoice.

The chief point so well taken and expressed by Bishop Potter was a clear and emphatic comparison between the high and spotless official integrity of George Washington, the first President of the United States, inaugurated in 1789, and the low grade of morality practiced and sanctioned by so many partisan leaders of [illegible].

That was the salient point.

To eulogize the public virtues of Washington was a fitting theme for the occasion, and to deplore any departure therefrom certainly not inappropriate.

To gloss over with honied words or [illegible] apology manifest evils is not the way to prosper the cause of truth and honesty.

The time has fully arrived when pulpit, platform and press ought fearlessly to battle for the supremacy of right over wrong.

No impartial man can deny that had the stern and uncompromising fidelity of President Washington in the discharge of public duty for the public welfare alone, been maintained and faithfully carried out by all his successors, "practical politics," or more properly speaking, political corruption, would not exist as now, a [illegible] [illegible] and danger to free government.

To expose the downward tendency of party politics, the corrupting power of money in elections and public affairs, and to raise a rallying cry on behalf of the noble standard planted by the illustrious Washington, was the aim and labors of Bishop Potter.

He rebuked modern political depravity as a vicious system, not calling in question the acts of any particular party or partisan.

The Bishop did right.

PRINTING THE NEWS NOT A LIBEL.

The libel suit of Charles W. Hodges, of Plainfield, against the Press Publishing Company, on trial for five days before Judge Ingraham in New York, resulted Monday in a verdict for the defendant, with an allowance of $[illegible] for counsel fees. A similar suit on the same complaint is pending against the proprietors of The Constitutionalist of this city, who [illegible] [illegible] of The Eagle.

The suits grew out of the publication in the New Jersey edition of The World and in the Constitutionalist, in July, 188[illegible], of a [illegible] involving Hodges in the sale of a saloon in New York to one Moncrieff, who wrote to a friend named Mackerow, in Plainfield, N. J., that she had been defrauded by Hodges and had lost [illegible] savings of a lifetime. The publication of this letter constituted the libel of which Hodges complained. Evidence showing the facts of the saloon purchase, the behavior of Hodges and Moncrieff's frequent abuse of him for swindling her was produced by the defense, together with the depositions of the Mayor, Judge and Chief of Police of this city, testifying to Hodges' bad character. Hodges denied any desire to swindle Moncrieff, and proclaimed his letter to Mackerow to be false.

DeLancey Nicoll and W. R. Brock appeared for The World. Mr. Nicoll said there was not the slightest pretense of malice. There was no purpose in publishing it except the duty of a correspondent to his newspaper in furnishing it with the current news. The newspaper owes to the public a great duty—that of printing the news—which if not performed faithfully will result in the loss of its reputation and standing. A newspaper that will not retract when it has done wrong to a citizen should not be permitted to exist, but a newspaper that cowardly makes a retraction when it feels it has done its duty in exposing a man who is engaged in dangerous practices, should be blotted out.

In his charge Judge Ingraham said: "The importance of the newspaper in the detection and prevention of crime cannot be overestimated. The [illegible] [illegible] men to obtain dishonestly the savings of a lifetime are numerous, and it is to the newspapers almost entirely that we must look for the detection of these [illegible]. If, in this case, the defendant can satisfy the jury that the published story is true substantially, he has committed no offense and is entitled to a verdict."

The Requests of the New Market People Ignored by Wanamaker.

The removal of the New Market post office was effected on Saturday night.

Notwithstanding the protests sent by at least three-fourths of those using the office, against its being again located North of the railroad track, no notice was taken in any shape, manner or form by the Post Office Department. No objection was raised or made to the [illegible] [illegible].

Probably, when some animal takes fright, runs away, kills or maims somebody, or a passing train at a forty-mile gait hurls some citizen into eternity, the Post Office Department will wake up to the urgent necessity of attention to the people of a small benighted village.

From what is known of "Wanamaker" as a merchant and business man, the people of New Market had hoped of better things; but "Wanamaker" the business man, is now "Wanamaker" the politician, willing to obey the political ring.

New Officers.

At the adjourned regular meeting of the Park Avenue Social Club, held in their rooms on East Front street, last Monday, after the regular routine business was transacted the semi-annual election of officers took place which resulted in the following:

President—Edward C. Bogart.
Vice President—George K. [illegible].
Secretary—Joseph C. [illegible].
Treasurer—Joseph G. [illegible].
Sergeant-at-Arms—Edward R. Martin.

Increase of the Muhlenberg Hospital Facilities.

An addition is being completed to Muhlenberg Hospital that will provide a retired ward for the needs of patients whom it is not convenient to have in the regular wards.

Patients who may be noisy, or afflicted with diseases that might frighten or be offensive to the others, can thus be kept and treated entirely apart. A place for autopsies will also be provided in the new addition.

G. A. R. Meeting.

A regular encampment of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R. of this city, was held in the Post room on East Front street, last Tuesday. Besides the usual routine business of the Post, the Memorial Day detail reported progress. The members of the Post have accepted an invitation to attend divine services in Trinity Reformed church, on Sunday evening, the 26th instant. The comrades will attend church in a body.

Nature Unadorned.

A great display of nature unadorned was exhibited along Cedar Brook in the vicinity of Richmond street, during the humidity of the weather, last week. On Thursday groups of small boys were seen in bathing without the formality of bathing suits which is in direct violation of the City ordinance. While the boys were thus amusing themselves, one of the neighbors appeared, on the spot, and gathering up all the loose wearing apparel, carried it home. The boys were indeed in a sad predicament.

The Rev. Mr. Cleaver's Class Seeking for a Place of Worship.

The Berean Class that has been holding gospel meetings in Cotter's Hall, for the past many months under the leadership of the Rev. J. B. Cleaver, has grown so large that its present quarters will not hold the numbers of its members that assemble.

The class has grown large enough to form a church of its own and have a proper place of worship. Consequently negotiations are now going on for the leasing of Reform Hall to be used on Sundays and certain evenings in the week, by the Rev. Mr. Cleaver and his congregation.

If these arrangements are made, the society will then give itself a name—probably the "Church of Christ."

Rev. Dr. Simonson's Funeral.

The funeral obsequies following the death of the late Rev. Dr. John Simonson, were enacted at the deceased's late home on Park avenue, at 4:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. The funeral was attended by many of the clergymen and representative men of the city. Rev. Cornelius Schenck opened the service with Scripture reading; he also gave a biographical sketch of Dr. Simonson from the latter's childhood up to the time of his death.

Rev. Dr. Yerkes also eulogized the deceased whom he characterized as a man of sterling worth. Rev. W. R. Richards offered prayer, and Rev. Mr. Schenck pronounced the benediction. The floral display consisted of a sheaf of wheat and a bunch of lilies. Wednesday the remains were taken to Newtown, L. I., for interment.

Broke Open the Safe.

A safe was broken open at the residence of Mrs. Wm. L. Jones, corner of Park avenue and Seventh street, Tuesday afternoon, and the contents was transferred to the law office of Messrs. Clark & Reed. The work was not done by professional safe breakers, however, but by a locksmith of this city. The safe was an old fashioned one of the Lilly make, and was made in 1851. It contained papers and other personal effects of the late William L. Jones, and the executors in settling up the large estate, were obliged to get at the papers inside the safe. The key to the combination had been lost, moreover, the lock itself was rusty and useless, having remained silent for the past dozen or fifteen years.

The services of a locksmith were required to open the safe, and this feat was not accomplished until the door was battered in. The contents were found to be in a good state of preservation.

PLAINFIELD'S MILK O. K.

As the different dairymen and drivers who supply the Plainfield families with milk from their wagons, drove into the city Wednesday, they were unexpectedly met by State Inspector McGuire and an assistant.

They were all caught "on the fly" without warning, and required to open their cans then and there for inspection. Between twenty and thirty wagons were thus stopped, and a test made of the supply of milk they contained. Not a sample was condemned, and before leaving Plainfield, the Inspector left the following official report for publication in THE PRESS for the satisfaction of the community:

I have made a thorough inspection of the milk supply of Plainfield, and find all very rich and very fine.

This will not be a race, the average riding time being only about 7 miles an hour. Capt. F. L. C. Martin started at 6:35 A. M. on the 13th inst., and rode over the route as far as Trenton, returning in the afternoon by way of Pennington, Belle Meade and Somerville, and reports the roads as being in very good condition excepting between New Market and New Brunswick, which will probably be good by June 8. All wheelmen are cordially invited to participate in this run, and will be furnished with any further information by application to any of the following Committee who have the run in charge:

The committee in charge is composed of L. A. Clarke, Chairman, Capt. Mercury Wheel Club, Flushing; F. Kerr, Hudson County Wheelmen; W. E. Fuller, Brooklyn Bicycle Club; J. V. L. Pierson, Capt. Bloomfield Cyclers; F. L. C. Martin, Capt. Plainfield Bicycle Club.

THE NETHERWOOD.

The Summer's Prospects, and the "Hotel's New Staff.

After two Summers of unqualified success in every particular, the Hotel Netherwood is opened this season one month earlier than usual, and its May patronage has proved very encouraging. About forty guests have already arrived, some of whom have engaged their rooms until the close of the season.

When Mr. Frank E. Miller, the owner of The Netherwood, purchased it two years ago, he found he must begin at the very bottom and not only build up a new reputation but blot out all bad memories of the past. This he accomplished in one short Summer by his personality, endurance, judgment and liberality.

He has attracted to the hotel purely a class of people that cannot be excelled by any other resort in the country, for wealth, refinement and social position. They fill his house every Summer, because their wide experience has taught them that nowhere do they find more courteous attention, better service in every way, nor such a table.

This season Mr. Miller has aimed to even surpass this reputation in every respect. Each department is in new hands and his staff has been picked from the best and most experienced in their respective professions and lines.

Mr. Frank H. Whiting, of Baltimore, a most affable gentleman, and one with a thorough knowledge of a guest's wants and how they should be provided, is Chief Clerk. Mr. Wm. L. Fearns will be night clerk, and Mr. Norman Dunn retains his position as bookkeeper.

The Netherwood Chef this Summer is Mr. Petro Lang, from The Burlington, New York; the head waiter is Mr. G. Tassani, of Delmonico's, and the Steward, Mr. W. C. White, from the Brighton Beach Hotel. Miss Clark, of the Parker House, Boston, is housekeeper. Surely with such a picked corps, the satisfaction of the Netherwood guests this season will be entire, and the hotel's success and increased reputation will be something unprecedented.

Concluding the Death of a Clergyman.

At a regular meeting of the minister's association of this city, held at the residence of Rev. W. R. Richards on Monday Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes and Archdeacon Rodman were appointed a committee to prepare a paper upon the late Rev. Dr. John Simonson, whose funeral took place yesterday afternoon. Following is a copy of the paper:

REV. JOHN SIMONSON,

As members of the Ministers' Conference of Plainfield of which Mr. Simonson was a member, we would hereby give expression to a sense of the loss we have sustained in his death and to our high appreciation of his character and worth. Brother Simonson was the first pastor of the Reformed church of this city and to his labors is largely due its organization. His pastorate here was marked by great wisdom, rare fidelity and a spirit of true catholicity, and those of us who knew him then can say that he won the respect and confidence of the entire Christian community.

After an absence of some years in other fields of labor, and when compelled to retire from the active duties of the ministry on account of failing health, he returned with his estimable wife to Plainfield. Here they made their home among a people who loved them, until they were called to their better house in the "Father's House" in Heaven.

Some of us knew him only in these years of retirement when he suffered much from the disease which at last proved fatal, and he was on this account prevented from enjoying frequent intercourse or anything like active co-operation with his brethren in Christian work. But we all knew him so as to respect and honor him for solid qualities of mind and heart. He was humble and yet manly, gentle as a child, but as firm as a rock in his adherence to his convictions. He was an earnest, devout, conscientious, faithful servant of God. His knowledge of Bible truth was clear. His grasp on it and its hold on him were so strong that his faith was firmly grounded and his preaching was with the authority of one who knew and believed what he preached.

He was a pre-eminently good man and the memory which he leaves of a noble character, a pure life and an unselfish service for Christ still preaches the gospel he preached while living. "He being dead yet speaketh."

We extend our sincere condolence to the relatives and friends of the deceased.

By order of the Conference,

D. J. YERKES,
E. M. RODMAN.

WHICH OF THE TWO PAPERS IS THE MOST SENSATIONAL?

The false-faced sheet printed in another Ward, and edited in another county, came out Tuesday under the glaring headline of "A Fugitive's Escape" and dared to present to its few readers a sensational, and embellished story concerning what occurred nearly half a year ago. The whole account is sensational in the extreme, and was evidently written for the sole purpose of catering to the one who furnishes the sheet with its little news. The whole truth of the matter is this, as told by one of the parties concerned—the husband of the woman who it is alleged was knocked down and criminally assaulted:

It appears that during last Fall—the exact date we did not record, for reasons hereinafter stated—Thomas Kennedy and his wife, Kate, both of whom worked for a "Mrs. Brown," at the extreme Southern end of Plainfield avenue, spent a Wednesday afternoon drinking and carousing among the saloons in this city. About six o'clock P. M., according to Kennedy's story, his wife and himself left a Park avenue saloon, both more or less under the influence of intoxicants. The wife carried a market basket on her arm in which was a bottle of whiskey and a few other articles.

Kennedy told a PRESS reporter the next day that he noticed two or three men following him all the way from the saloon in Park avenue the night before, but supposed that they lived in that neighborhood, and consequently paid little attention to them. He said that while his wife and himself were passing the strip of woodland known as "Stelle's woods," two or three men (he was unable to state whether it was two or three) approached them from the rear, and grabbed the market basket his wife was carrying evidently knowing that it contained a bottle of rum. He remonstrated with the intruders, or highwaymen, he says, and for his trouble he was knocked down and kicked. Kennedy said, further, that he got home, that night, but his wife failed to materialize; in consequence he thought she might have been assaulted.

The above story was told a PRESS representative, the day after the alleged assault occurred, and the scribe was ready to print about a "stick" referring to the matter, when "our excellent Chief of Police" requested that nothing be said, in the hope that the offenders might be apprehended. The same demand was made on the other paper. THE PRESS, although in full possession of all of the facts, lived up to the agreement, and today for the first time the facts in the case are presented to the public.

Young Daly and another man who were arrested as being accomplices, are, it is said, yet confined in the County Jail, at Elizabeth, but it simply requires the services of a lawyer to have them brought to trial or liberated.

—An extraordinary fallacy is the dread of night air. What air can we breathe at night but night air.

The Four-Day Meeting.

The first noon-day prayer meeting, conducted by Mr. Scott Edsall, was held at the rooms of the W. C. T. U., Monday. The attendance was fairly good. A great deal of interest was manifested by all present and each seemed to receive a special blessing. There will be a different leader for each day in the week. Every body welcome.

Installation of Officers.

At their rooms on North avenue, last Monday, the following recently elected officers of the Emerald Benevolent Association were installed into their respective offices:

President—William White.
Vice President—Edw. Ryan.
Secretary—Thomas Sheehan.
Treasurer—John Sheehan.
Stewards—Chas. Collins, P. O'Keefe.

The Brother Must Make Good the Loan.

In the Union county court, Wednesday May 8, the jury in the case of J. H. Staats vs. Randolph Steele, a suit for the recovery of the balance of a loan of money, gave the plaintiff a verdict, assessing his damages at $390, including interest.

The defendant claimed it was money given him by Staats to be invested in speculation at Staats' risk, and it was lost.

A Plainfield Lady Sings to the Soldiers at Cornwall.

The Cromwell Guards of New York State, attended church in a body at Cornwall-on-Hudson, Sunday. The Newburgh Journal, in speaking of the service says:

"A special musical programme was excellently rendered by the choir, a marked feature of which was the singing of Paul Rodney's "Calvary" by Miss Julia J. Ketcham, of Plainfield, N. J., who was present by invitation of the pastor and chorister of the church. Miss Ketcham is a fine musician and her voice seemed wonderfully adapted to the pathetic sweetness of the piece she rendered. The thanks of the Guards and of the congregation are due her and those whose thoughtfulness secured her services."

A Sad Event.

Isaac Sebring, who died at his home in Bloodfield, near Somerville, April 25, at the age of 84 years and 5 months, left about $60,000 to be divided according to the provisions of his will among the seven children who survive him. Mr. Sebring was a native of Greenbrook, but had occupied his late home over 50 years.

The deceased was a brother of Mrs. Lettie Eggleston, a widow, living on West Fourth street, this city. Mrs. Eggleston did not know of her brother's illness and subsequent death, a telegram sent to Plainfield announcing the fact, having never reached her. About ten days ago she set out to visit her brother, and on the way to the deceased's late home, she first learned of his death. Mrs. Eggleston was indeed very much surprised; she was also overcome with sorrow.

Memorial Day Exercises.

The city officials and various organizations in this city have been invited by the Memorial Day detail from Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., to join with the Post in the Decoration Day celebration. The members of the detail will meet again on Tuesday evening, the 21st inst., to hear from the several organizations and societies which may decide to take part in the exercises.

In the morning the Post will go to Westfield in a body, accompanied by the Plainfield Cornet Band, and take part in the dedication ceremonies of the new soldiers' monument in Fairview cemetery. In the afternoon at three o'clock the usual exercises will take place in Music Hall, and will include singing by the children, Post exercises and an oration by Rev. Dr. Yerkes.

Capt. DeHart, in command of Co. C., Third Regiment, of Elizabeth, may perhaps stop over with his Company in this city on their return from Somerville, where the regiment will be inspected on Memorial Day.

The Memorial Day detail will leave nothing undone that will interfere with the successful carrying out of their plans, and the public in general should give the veterans their hearty support and co-operation for so worthy an undertaking.

A $15,000 COLLECTION.

At the close of a sermon that dwelt upon the righteousness of erecting and devoting to God and his service, the best houses that money could buy, the pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, the Rev. Wm. R. Richards, yesterday morning, told his congregation that the sum of $15,000 was necessary to make the alterations and extensions to church and chapel that had been decided on.

"A little while ago," he said, "I asked you for $4,000 for a similar purpose, but with so little faith that if you had subscribed three-quarters of the amount, I would have given out the doxology with satisfaction." This time he asked for almost four times that amount.

The trustees first distributed subscription cards through the pews on which those who had not the amount then and there, could write what they would give and the date payable. The plates were subsequently passed to gather in these cards, and it was found that without counting the subscriptions of some who were not present, but had stated their desire to give, $12,330 had been collected.

The pastor then confessed that again had he been lacking in faith. Besides the amount collected, it is now known that Messrs Chas. Hyde, Lawrence Myers and James Closson had offered to make up any deficiency in the sum needed.

Below is the report of the church for the year, giving its contributions to religious and charitable work abroad and at home:

Will Go on a Strawride.

On Friday evening the members of Olive Branch Lodge, 76, Knights of Pythias, of Elizabeth, will enjoy a strawride to Scotch Plains. They will visit Goodwill Lodge of that village.

Twenty-five Years a Priest.

On Thursday of this week Rev. Father Smyth, pastor of St. Mary's church in this city, will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of his Priesthood. In the morning Father Smyth will celebrate solemn high mass in honor of the event.

A Birthday Tea.

Miss Beatrice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Soris F. Craig, and grand-daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. O. Doane, gave a tea to fifteen of her young friends, last Tuesday, at her home corner of Church and Fourth streets, upon the occasion of her 13th birthday anniversary.

Bunches of lilies of the valley, tied with white ribbon, were laid at each plate. The presents included a lawn-tennis racket, baskets and bouquets of flowers, potted plants and books. The young hostess entertained her guests in a most cordial and pleasing way, and they overwhelmed her with good wishes for her future.

FAREWELL TO THEIR PASTOR.

On May 8, the members of the 7th Day church and Sabbath school tendered a farewell reception to Rev. Dr. and Mrs. A. H. Lewis, previous to their departure for Europe next day. The lecture room of the church was densely filled with the Dr. and Mrs. Lewis' friends, who were present to wish them God speed on their journey, a pleasant trip and a safe return.

During the evening Mr. Gorton contributed some vocal selections, Miss Lewis read, and some of the Sunday school scholars enacted a piece called "Spring Flowers." On the whole the reception was a very enjoyable affair.

A Merited Expression of Loss.

At a special meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, held April 27, the following resolutions, were adopted and subsequently handsomely engrossed and framed, and presented to the family of the dead comrade:

WHEREAS, We have learned with sincere sorrow of the death of our fellow member, Francis P. VanBuren,

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Van Buren the Club has lost one who by his genial disposition and kindly manners endeared himself to every member of the Club, and who by his active participation in all Club events renders his loss a heartfelt one, and leaves a void in our ranks that will be difficult indeed to fill.

Resolved, That we tender to the family of the deceased our sincere sympathy in this their great affliction.

E. A. FAIRBAIRN,
F. W. WARD, } Committee.
H. W. BEEBE,

A Reception by the Daughters of the King.

The "Kings Daughters" met afternoon *May 8, at the residence of Mrs. Ed*ward J. Waring in Washington Park, and re-organized. Mrs. W. De. F. Curtis having resigned, Mrs. Samuel St. John McCutchen was chosen President, Mrs. Morgan S. Taylor, Vice President, Miss Ida Musgrave, Treasurer, and Mrs. Foster, Secretary.

This organization is a charitable one, and is engaged in a most noble work, helping the poor in many directions. In order to raise funds for their work a reception will be given at the residence of Miss Musgrave on Mercer avenue, Washington Park, North Plainfield.

The last reception was held at the residence of Mrs. Geo. DuPuy of Rock View avenue, at which a handsome sum was realized.

Not the "Stuff of Which Plainfield Men are Composed."

A newly born sheet called "The Commuter," which plainly shows it has not yet had its eyes open, seems intent in its current issue to cast a slur upon Plainfield people by the ironical statement that "the evening news amply shows the stuff of which Plainfield men are composed."

The men of this city will appreciate the insolence of such remarks, when they remember that the news has twice been presented before the grand juries of Union county for outrageous slander and criminal libel, and twice for atrocious assault, and that its proprietor has been arrested by the police, prosecuted by the city and fined $50 by the Court for being a street rowdy.

"The Commuter" must learn to tell a gentleman from an insect, and to judge a city by its good works rather than its disgraces, before it can hope to make its way into the approval of the people or win their patronage.

The Crescent Y. M. C. A.'s Defeat Threefold.

Twenty-two errors by the Crescents as shown in the detailed score below—most of which were made in the first two innings of the game—tell the reason of the shameful defeat that was administered to the local nine by the Rutgers College team, on Saturday afternoon.

Every man on the Plainfield team who had a chance, made an error; and, in fact, not one missed the chance except Nearing who ran no risk himself because he let Demarest cover all the field. "Bill-lee-Lee," and "Dave" Condon, the pets of the crowd, even, made the worst kind of errors and the most costly. Everybody was off, and the big attendance that crowded both grand stands and the fences was the most disgusted and disappointed lot that ever assembled at a ball game in Plainfield. Dilts took Nearing's place in the ninth inning.

If any credit is due any one, it is due Cornwell for his plucky playing in spite of hard luck. After the life had been knocked out of him by a Rutgers base-stealer, and he had been hit in the eye by a ball from his own bat, he assisted the whole three men out in one inning and made a home run off a foul ball.

All were to blame for Saturday's defeat, but it is probable it will never occur again. The Plainfield Y. M. C. A's have a strong team this year, although the loss *of Dilts and McCutchen is not yet repair*ed. It has been proven, however, that Nearing is not a necessity. Demarest is just as effective a pitcher without practice, and Condon went in the box himself, Saturday, and struck out three men in one inning.

The manager's attention should be given to strengthening his field and not so much to the battery. Under this year's rules there will be more batting no matter who the pitcher is. Consequently a hundred-dollar-pitcher with a four-dollar nine won't win a game.

Royal Arch Masons.

The Grand Convocation of the Grand Chapter of the Royal Arch Masons of New Jersey was in session in Elizabeth on May 8. L. T. Greer of Passaic, was the presiding officer. About 125 Masons from various parts of the State were present. The sessions were held with closed doors, and during the afternoon the officers were elected. Mr. William H. Sebring of this city was elected to the office of G. S.

Election of Officers.

The annual election of officers to serve the Firemen's Relief Association, was held in Firemen's Hall, on May 8, and resulted as follows:

President—T. O. Doane.
Vice President—H. M. Sherman.
Secretary—Edw. Mosher.
Treasurer—J. A. Hubbard.

The report of the treasurer showed the Association to be in a sound financial condition.

A Girl Spoils the Flush.

Many of THE PRESS readers still remember with pleasurable feelings, Mr. and Mrs. S. O. A. Murphy, for many years residents and property owners in Plainfield. The Republican of Haverstraw, N. Y., near where they now live, had this to say of Mr. Murphy, last Saturday:

"Samuel O. A. Murphy has had a misfortune. His highest aim was to have a base ball nine in his own family. He had seven lively boys, and last week another acquisition was added to the family, but it was a little queen. Murphy is proud of it, even though for the time the completion of the nine had to be deferred."

Grace Church.

On Sunday May 5, Archdeacon Rodman read to the congregation of Grace church a statement of the year's work, being his report to the Convention of the Diocese:

No. of families	129
Baptisms, infants, 17; adults, 4; total	21
Confirmed	17
Marriages solemnized	14
Burials	12
Communicants	369
Public services in church	198
S. S. teachers and officers	28
Scholars	190

The receipts of the Parish were reported to have been $9,348.05. There is now in the Building Fund for the new church, $3,100.

Dunellen Notes.

President John H. Handren of the Dunellen Borough Commissioners, has disposed of his Dunellen property and will this week remove with his family to Brooklyn, where his business is now located. Mr. Handren, during his residence at Dunellen, has been one of the foremost of its citizens, and has expended large sums of money in improving and beautifying the place. As a public benefactor he has but few equals, and the loss sustained by his removal from the village will be severely felt by the residents.

Postmaster Harrold will assume the management of the Dunellen post office on June 1.

At present there are no vacant houses within the borough limits. This speaks well for Dunellen.

Song Bird Killers.

Last week Mr. Percy C. Ohl, who resides just inside the city limits on Central avenue, arrested four young men, at two different times, for shooting song and insectivorous birds in the swamp adjoining his residence. The parties all claimed they did not know they were violating any law as they were shooting birds for scientific purposes. Mr. Ohl allowed them to go after administering a rebuking lesson to them.

One of the parties is an amateur taxidermist, who sells his specimens after mounting them. It is said that other parties, young sons of prominent citizens of this city, are in the habit of killing song birds with the deadly Flobert rifle and shot gun. It may be well for the parents of these youngsters to know that the laws of New Jersey impose a fine of fifty dollars on any person caught killing a song or insectivorous bird, and that no person can give another the privilege to kill these birds for scientific purposes.

The New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society have placed detectives in various parts of the territory where mob depredations as above mentioned have occurred and propose to arrest and fine every violator of Chapter CCVII, Laws of New Jersey, passed April 30, 1885. The names of the parties arrested by Mr. Ohl, who is President of the Game Society, are withheld for the present. A repetition of their acts will bring them before a court of justice.

MISS STEERS DENIES IT ALL.

Miss Susie Steers, who had been miss*ing from the knowledge of her acquaint*ances in this city for the past four years, is back again in Plainfield and wishes THE PRESS to emphatically deny all the tales that have been told and published about her goings-on and her fate.

She says she is not married nor never was, and that she has not committed suicide. Below we print from THE CONSTITUTIONALIST of May 21, 1885, the rumors that were then prevalent in this city about Miss Steers. The letter mentioned, Susie says, she never wrote, and she also intimates that her sister Maggie "made it all up herself."

The gentleman Susie is accused of marrying, has been a married man with a wife and children for some years, and Susie says she can produce him from Harlem at any time to prove that she did not marry him. Miss Steers, who is still a young maiden woman, is very indignant that the rumor should have spread that she is married to any one. She says she has "too level a head."

This is the story of four years ago:

WHERE IS SHE?

Susie Steers, a domestic, has been missing from her friends in this city for some days. For several months she was in the employ of Mr. Ellis A. Campbell on Park avenue. Recently she went to New York city. Shortly after going there her sister, Maggie, who is a domestic in the employ of ex-Councilman John B. Brown of this city, received a letter from Susie stating that she was married. The letter in question was from New York and told of meeting her husband, who does not receive her kindly. The writer refers to him in uncomplimentary terms and concludes as follows:

When you receive this I will be dead. You will find my body at 141 West 13th street, and my trunk at Abingdon Square. I pray you will forgive me for thus taking my life, but I cannot live.

Inclosed in the letter was a receipt from the express company and the trunk was found at the office. On Tuesday Mr. Campbell visited the morgue in New York city, where the body of a young woman was lying, who had committed suicide at the Grand Union Hotel by shooting herself through the heart. He at once asserted that the corpse was that of Susie Steers. The next day in company with the missing girl's sister and brother, Mr. Campbell again visited the morgue, only to find that the body had been recognized as that of Miss Hattie Bedient of Hornby, N. Y., and was then on its way to that place in charge of the dead girl's father. From photographs, however, the sister Maggie, and Mr. Campbell were quite positive that the suicide was Susie Steers until they were shown the clothing worn by the deceased, when they were reluctantly compelled to admit the identity of Miss Bedient. Since then nothing has been learned of Susie Steers, and her parents and relatives are wild with grief over her sudden disappearance. Miss Steers states that her sister had given evidence of being unsettled in her mind for some time, and thinks it possible that the whole scheme was an invention of her fevered brain.

An Honest and a Dishonest Way.

The honest Elizabeth Journal says: "It is denied by the Plainfield Press that ex-Gov. Abbett and lawyer Winfield advised the liquor dealers of that city to apply once again for licenses and open their saloons if they did not get them. They are certainly entitled to the denial if they did not give such advice."

The dishonest Plainfield news, which started the false report, tries to get out of it with another batch that is just as false, and says: "The news' obtained its information direct from one of the liquor-dealers, indirect from another, and direct from two leading city officials; and had reasons to believe that it was correct."

Sweet Music, and a Sermon by Robert Collyer.

Camp stools in the side aisles were necessary to accomodate the congregation of all sects that assembled in the Seventh Day Baptist church, Sunday evening, to hear the Rev. Robert Collyer, pastor of the Church of the Messiah, New York city.

He gave an interesting and entertaining discourse that in a very tempting way placed before his hearers the broadness of the Unitarian church. The need of such a church in every community was explained, and the speaker finally stated that it was the intention of members of the sect in Plainfield to establish such a society.

The music was particularly pleasing. Mr. W. J. McClymont, organist of the Church of the Holy Cross, and Mr. Eli Long, Jr., violinist, were the instrumental performers.

ANNUAL ELECTION OF MUSIC HALL MANAGERS.

The annual election of a Board of Managers of the Music Hall Association, takes place on the second Monday in May of each year, and results in the re-election of the Board of the past. There is no interest taken in the election, and the stockholders' annual meeting which is called for the same time and place, has never been held because the necessary attendance of a *majority of the stock*holders in person, has never occurred.

The election of Directors last Monday, was held in the Music Hall parlors. The polls were open from 5 to 6 P. M., and from 7:45 to 8:45 P. M. The tellers were Messrs Robert H. Coon, B. Frank Coriell and Wm. H. Voorhees. Last year the total number of shares voted on, was 210 out of 800. This year the total was 283. Such seeming increase of interest, was probably brought about by a change in the Board. The name of Mr. Wm. J. Roome was substituted for that of Mr. George A. Chapman. Otherwise last year's Board was re-elected as follows:

W. R. Pottle,	L. V. F. Randolph,
W. J. Roome,	J. B. Dumont,
W. E. Lowe,	A. Gilbert,

—Supposing Mayor [illegible] should issue—as he is empowered by law—a proclamation like this: "If owners of dogs don't muzzle them by the first of June, they will be shot."

—At the close of the ball game on Saturday afternoon, the Rutgers College nine was photographed in a group in front of the grand stand by Photographer J. Harvey Doane.

—The members of All Saints church, of Scotch Plains have organized a Guild which promises to add greatly to the pleasure and benefit of the residents of Fanwood and Scotch Plains.

—When the storm was most severe Friday afternoon, a large willow tree standing in the rear of Mr. James Hardy's residence on Duer street, North Plainfield, was blown down and in falling the tree narrowly escaped crashing in an adjoining building.

—As the warm weather has arrived, it may not be out of place to remind the City Council that a few dollars could be judiciously expended in improving and beautifying Plainfield's Central Park. The City Park should be fenced in or some one may carry off the seats.

—Since the season opened, many a score of refreshing "milk-shakes" have been served to their fastidious patrons at Field & Randolph's pharmacy, 21 West Front street. Strawberry-crush, fruit-phosphates and other palatable beverages are dispensed at the same place.

—A reverend gentleman says an exchange thus expressed himself in relation to Sabbath observance that is not always looked upon alike by both sides: "We cannot expect the German to forego his mug of beer while his church-going neighbor sends for his quart of ice cream." Actions sometimes speak louder than words.

Mr. J. Allen Sangston of Field & Randolph's pharmacy, will shortly sever his connection with that establishment and accept a position in the new drug store that is to be opened in the West End Hotel, Asbury Park.

Mr. Oscar Fay Adams, the well-known litterateur, whose parents reside in the Borough, was in Plainfield Thursday. The New York Tribune of this morning describes him as, "slight in frame, near-sighted, gray-haired and absent-minded.

THE PRESS hastens to correct an error. Miss Wilson has not taken Miss Gilbert's place in the new school. She has just been appointed a teacher, and temporarily taken charge of Miss Gilbert's old class. Miss Gilbert is the Vice Principal of the new school.

The death is announced of Mrs. Hannah Bird, wife of Mr. Levi Bird which occurred at her home on Harmony street, North Plainfield, Thursday, after a long illness. The funeral services took place from the house on Sunday at 1:30 P. M.

The grounds about "The Elms," the handsome residence property recently purchased by Mr. Stout of New York, on East Front street, are now illuminated with electric lights. The stables are also lighted in the same way, and the house is being fitted with electric fixtures.

Ex-Councilman Wm. D. Voorhees of this city, is the President of the Protective Life Assurance Society, of New York, that is offering some novel and tempting features. One is a mutual tontine plan wherein those who live are the winners, and a man does not have to die to get his money back.

On Sunday occurred the death of Dr. Frank L. Vincent, brother of Bishop John H. Vincent formerly of this city. Another brother is a minister of the gospel at Akron. Dr. Vincent was one of the physicians in charge at Clifton Springs Sanitarium, New York. He leaves a widow and two sons.

The cover of the programme for the XVIth season of the Chautauqua Assembly, to be held this Summer, is designed by Mr. George Wharton Edwards and is very artistic and original. The sports, temples of oratory, amphitheatres and accoutrements of ancient and modern times, are pictorially compared.

Ex-Director Wm. E. Jones of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders, requests THE PRESS to correct the inaccurate statement about himself in the news. Upon being nominated for Director again Mr. Jones declined in a neat speech and did not run for the office at all. If he had, he would have been elected as usual.

Among the mid-Summer weddings which are being arranged is that of the daughter of a Park avenue physician and surgeon, to a divinity student, who is to graduate from Yale College early in June. The date has not yet been announced, but it is understood that the event will be consummated during the latter part of June.

The following persons constitute the memorial detail appointed from among the members of Major Anderson Post, No. 109, G. A. R., of this city: Adjutant, Edward J. Gibson, Senior Vice Commander, Chas. H. Randolph, Surgeon, Abel S. Titsworth, Serg't Major, John R. Naylor and Comrades Daniel W. Hatfield, Romeo R. Manning, Asa Collier.

Prof. W. D. McClintock, of this city, formerly Registrar of the C. L. S. C., and now Professor of English Literature in the Chautauqua University, has received a call to the pastorate of the Christian church at Walnut Hill, Cincinnati. He has been preaching there recently, but has not yet decided to accept the flattering offer made him to remain.

Capt. George M. Phillips and Mrs. Phillips of this city, sailed Tuesday 3:30 P. M., on the Steamer "Alaska," for Liverpool, where the Captain has extended interests in the shipping business. Before leaving Plainfield, this morning, he and his wife gave a breakfast at eleven o'clock in Force's Hotel, to a select company of their most intimate friends.

Master Willie Pearson of Vine street, North Plainfield, is mourning the loss of a beautiful tame squirrel, and all the neighbors and his friends who knew the little pet, are sympathizing with him. The animal would play around the neighborhood all day and be fed by those living in the vicinity, but it was always at home every night. It has now been missing two weeks.

At her home on Plainfield avenue, about 10 o'clock May 15, occurred the death of Sarah, wife of Mr. James Maynard. The deceased was sixty years of age, and for the past three months she has been confined to the house suffering from dropsy. Besides the husband, one daughter and three sons survive her. At the annual Convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of New Jersey, held at Trenton, Tuesday, Mr. Andrew J. Nolan of this city was elected a Vice President from Union county.

A Warning.

Mayor Cooley says the North Plainfield authorities are prepared to follow up with emphasis those who are guilty of sending a threatening letter, signed "White Caps," to an estimable young woman of the Borough. The half-dozen new Borough marshals are also anxious for something to do, so the offenders had better keep shady and stop where they are.

Their Second Annual Sale.

The members of the Children's Sewing Class of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, held their Second Annual Sale at the residence of the rector, No. 106 Park avenue, Thursday. The affair which was under the personal supervision of Mr. J. P. Taylor, was well attended, and many of the articles made by the children during the year were sold at reasonable prices. Ice-cream and refreshments were also served.

The Oriental's Ball.

The second annual ball of the Oriental Social Club took place in the new Saenger and Turner Hall, on Somerset street, North Plainfield, Thursday. The attendance was large, notwithstanding the fact that the heat was oppressive. Prof. Sanse of New York furnished the music for dancing, which continued until early this morning. Mr. Willet S. Marsh was floor manager, and Mr. J. A. Murphy and Miss Powers led the grand march.

A Defeated Player Tears up the Score.

The Fourth Class High School played a return game of ball with the First Class Grammar School on the Y. M. C. A., field Thursday, and defeated them by the score of 26 to 15. The Fourth Class had everything their own way from the beginning of the game to the end. Langdon of the Fourth Class made the first home run on that field.

At the end of the game one of the members of the defeated team, it is said, was mean enough to tear the score out of the score book that belonged to the Fourth Class. The batteries of the teams were: Lowrie and Langdon for the Fourth Class, and Shepherd and Flagg of the First Class.

Umpires, Ulrich and Drayton.

"A Leading Man in His Line."

Mr. W. H. Brower, of Broadway, this city, and Broadway, New York, has recently returned from the South, and the National Hotel Reporter thus speaks of him and his visit:

"Still another prominent New Yorker who has recently enjoyed a sojourn of two weeks at Hot Springs is Mr. Wm. H. Brower, the well-known florist of 955 Broadway. Mr. Brower has been engaged in this business in New York for thirty-five years, and is favorably known to all hotel keepers in that city. For many years he has furnished all the flowers for the banquets held at Delmonico's, and many hotels in the vicinity of Madison Square, and is recognized as the leading man in his line of business in the metropolis."

A List of the Games Arranged for the Crescents.

Manager Joseph W. Gavett of the Crescent Base Ball Club, is filling out his calendar of the ball games which the Crescents will participate in during the coming Summer. The following is an accurate list, so far as the dates are filled in, and our readers would do well to cut it out and paste it in their hats. Unless otherwise stated the matches will take place in this city:

May 18—Bloomfield Club.
May 22—Fat Men's Club of Plainfield.
May 25—Tenth Ward Athletic Club of Newark.
May 30—In the morning, the Alerts of Elizabeth. No game has yet been arranged for the afternoon.
June 8—West End Club at Somerville.
June 22—Ogden Club of Elizabeth.
June 29—Miller Athletic Club of Newark.
July 4—No game yet arranged for the morning. In the afternoon the Ironsides of Newark.
July 6—Ogden Club of Elizabeth.
July 13—O. N. T. Club of Newark.
July 20—Y. M. C. A's at New Brunswick.
July 27—West Ends of Somerville.
Aug. 24— " at "
Sept. 7— " of "
Sept. 21—Alerts at Elizabeth.

Thus it will be seen that some of the best clubs in the State will play in this city during the coming Summer, and it is to be hoped that the lovers of this favorite sport will show their appreciation of Manager Gavett's efforts to furnish amusement for them, by patronizing the grand stand, and thus contribute toward defraying the Club's expenses.

A Feast of Reason at the Hundredth Gathering.

Invitations to the 100th meeting of the Hurlbut circle of the C. L. S. C. drew together in Vincent chapel, Thursday, a congenial gathering of members of the local circle and graduates of the courses.

It was an informal assemblage, en famille. Miss Kate Kimball, whose guiding hand at the headquarters of the C. L. S. C., in Plainfield, has carried out the wonderful success of the scheme all over the World, was present to help welcome the guests of the evening. In such efforts she was assisted by Miss Georgie Chamberlin and Miss Ida Angleman. Comfortable chairs were scattered about the floor of the auditorium, and those present drew together in irregular groups within sociable proximity to the speakers on the platform.

Mr. Robert Gorton, President of the local circle, opened the meeting by presenting Dr. Hurlbut, the first President of the circle, and requesting him to preside. All joined in singing one of the Chautauqua songs, and the Rev. C. L. Goodrich led in prayer.

Mr. George E. Vincent, the first speaker, gave a talk on Modern Athens, that was thoroughly enjoyed by every person present. He told first of the ancient ruins, and afterwards of the modern aspect, of the Greek city. He had played base ball in the parquette of an old theatre, but found nothing of past Athens about Athens of to-day with its horse cars and electric lights, except the names of the streets in Greek on the corners. His talk was full of amusing anecdote, and replete with a wit that smothered romance under practical good sense.

Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, the well-known author and pulpit orator of Boston, and one of the Counsellors of the C. L. S. C., entertained the assemblage with an explanation of the purposes and results of a Chautauqua course. He related a number of instances of its far-reaching effects and wide spread influence.

Miss Julia Ketcham sang a solo during the evening, accompanied by Miss Carrie Dewey. Refreshments were served about ten o'clock.

—A crowd of men seated themselves under a shed in the rear of a blacksmith shop on Somerset street late Monday evening, and emptied the contents of a keg of beer.

Noon-Day Prayer Meeting.

The W. C. T. U. will hold daily noon-day prayer meetings, from 12 to 1 o'clock, at their rooms, 73 West Front street, commencing last Monday, May 13. Mr. Seely Edsall conducted the opening meeting. Everybody welcome.

A Disgraceful Scene.

Drunkenness among women is becoming alarmingly frequent in some of the towns of this State, and hardly a week goes by but a member of the female sex is seen under the influence of liquor. A drunken man is bad enough but a drunken woman is a sight that few care to see. There is nothing more demoralizing to the young.

ANOTHER VILLIFIED BY THE "NEWS."

The publication of the recent result of the trial of the above case, which appeared in the news, was evidently the result of the biased imagination of the defeated party rather than a fair and accurate statement of what actually transpired.

The suit, to begin with, was not in the Circuit but in the Common Pleas Court, on appeal. When it is considered that the Circuit Court would have had jurisdiction while the Common Pleas Court would not, more significance is attached to this misstatement than at first blush appears.

Again the allegation that rumors were afloat that Judge Berline had been given to understand if he wished his political influence and affluence (?) in North Plainfield and Somerset county to be continued, he must decide in favor of Mr. Cleaver and the Democratic party, is entirely unfounded and those who know the Judge best are the ones who also know best that no one would dare intimate such a threat in his presence, as is implied in the charge.

As to the statement that at the outset the Judge remarked he was familiar with the case—the same is a gross perversion of what was said by the Court. What he did say was this: "I am familiar with the case"—referring to the Supreme Court case then just cited by Mr. Cleaver's counsel in suport of his motion to nonsuit.

The further statement that Mr. Elliott's counsel presented a "bristling" array of arrangements and legal opinions, may be true in the sense that they were so "bristling" as to prevent the court from seeing the point in them, and may to some extent account for the adverse decision.

The article referred very judiciously omits to specify the exceptions it says Mr. Elliott's counsel frequently took to his Honor's ruling, and, (sad loss to the bar and bench of the State!) altogether abstains from stating the point of law raised by Mr. Elliott's counsel, which it says the Judge admitted had never before been brought up in the Somerset County Courts.

How exceptions could be taken is a conundrum, as no evidence whatever was taken.

ITS EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY.

In spite of unusual attractions at other churches, there was quite a large gathering at Trinity Reformed church, Sunday night, upon the occasion of the eighth anniversary of the Ladies' Christian Work Society.

The pulpit, platform and tables were loaded with flowers and blossoms arranged by Mrs. J. C. VanDyke, Miss Nettie Randall and Miss Annie Miller. The special choir for the evening was composed of Mrs. J. S. Cutter and Mrs. J. C. VanDyke, sopranos, Miss M. Williams, contralto, Mr. H. J. Martin, tenor, and Messrs Robert Gorton and Fred Cutter, bassos.

The pastor, the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, presided. The scripture read was the parable of the talents from the gospel of Matthew. The annual reports of the Secretary and the Treasurer, from May 1888 to May 1889, were read by the pastor as given below.

He then introduced the speaker of the evening, who had been announced in THE PRESS, ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph. His address was inspiring and encouraging. At its close Mr. Schenck thanked him in behalf of the ladies.

THE SECRETARY'S REPORT.

Eight years have passed since first a small band of ladies met to form this society, which now numbers 50 active members.

Although during the year we have had but three new members, yet unusual interest has been shown. We have had an average attendance of twenty-three members at our regular meetings for business which have been held once a month. The social meetings have been held quite frequently and under the direction of the Sewing Committee, much work has been accomplished at these meetings, as was shown by the box of clothing sent to a Western minister's family at Christmas. A barrel of clothing has been sent to a minister in the South. Bedding has been made and sent to the Muhlenberg hospital.

Our different committees show much work accomplished during the year. Three receptions have been given. Flowers have been furnished for all the special services of the church.

The Boards of Foreign and Domestic Missions have each received our annual donations. Reports have been received from the committees in charge, from the Relief Association, the Children's Home, the Muhlenberg Hospital and the temperance organizations, and when help has been asked we have answered the appeal.

The Debt Committee are in active work with the Consistory, and we hope will do much toward liquidating the church debt.

During the year each new member of the congregation has been called upon. The sick have been visited—in one case a nurse was provided, and one patient was sent to the hospital for two weeks.

The poor of the church have been cared for. At Thanksgiving seven families were provided with provisions.

During the year past the angel of death has again been in our midst, we know not where the summons will come to us. May each one of us do the work nearest, then in the end may we hear: "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many, enter thou into the joys of the Lord."

Read THE "PRESS" [illegible]!

The following from the Bound Brook Chronicle evidences that it copies its Plainfield items from the news:

> George Clare, an orphan, of Plainfield, was exploring his grandparents' cellar on Friday last while he found an old tin can half filled with gunpowder, into which he dropped a lighted match to see the fun. He saw the fun but the doctors say he will be unable to do so again as his eyesight is completely destroyed.

Be Careful Which Mongrel You Shoot.

The neighbors have complained that there is some kind of a half-bred mastiff in the yard of a house on Mountain avenue in the Borough, that howls so continuously at night that it is a consummate nuisance.

If something is not done to shut up the brute, those living in the vicinity say they will fill its body full of shot. But the poor dog is hardly to blame—he evidently does not like the company he is in.

Their May Walk.

About forty of the members of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein Society met at Blatz's Hotel, in North Plainfield, early Sunday morning, and at five o'clock started out on their annual May walk. The party walked to Washington Rock, and to a point about a mile West of there, where a halt was made. During the day refreshments were served, and the regular May festival was observed by the society. The return trip was made early in the evening.

A Fraternal Visit.

Alpha Lodge, No. 4, I. O. G. T., of this city, held a regular meeting last Friday, and transacted some routine business. During the evening a delegation from Irving Lodge, No. 744, I. O. G. T., of Brooklyn, came out and paid a fraternal visit to Alpha Lodge. Miss K. Smith of Brooklyn presided at the piano and rendered some very fine music. Recitations were also rendered by members of the visiting lodge, which together with a collation served to make up the evening's enjoyment. The visitors started for home on the 3:29 A. M. train.

Last Friday's Storm.

A young hurricane struck this city about five o'clock Friday evening. Clouds of dust were blown about promiscuously, and for a time the dust was so thick that it was impossible to distinguish objects on the opposite side of the street. The rain storm which followed was a welcome visitor and served to cool off the atmosphere.

The shower while it lasted, was very heavy, but little damage by lightning is reported. During the progress of the storm, a dwelling house on Peace street was struck by a bolt of lightning, and a portion of the roofing was torn away. No one was injured.

A Story With But One Chapter.

Time—9 o'clock last Thursday evening; place—on the back stoop of an East Sixth street residence.

One of the girls employed by a family on East Sixth street, not a mile from Grace church was called upon by her lover on Thursday evening. The young man took a mouth organ with him, and during the evening he made several attempts to massacre on the instrument some of the popular airs of the day. The young woman evidently did not care to be tortured any longer, so she manipulated the mouth organ and wrought out "He's a jolly good fellow," and other new (?) pieces in excellent style. A half-hour later the scene closed when the young woman played "Home, Sweet Home," locked the back door and went to bed, leaving the young man in deep meditation

It's Only Some of the Usual "News."

The Elizabeth Journal has the good sense and honesty to doubt things it hears from irresponsible sources. It said yesterday:

> If reports are true ex-Governor Abbett and Mr. Charles B. Winfield have given very queer advice to the Plainfield liquor dealers. The City Council of Plainfield has refused all licenses, and the advice which these learned counsellors are reported to have given the Plainfield dealers is that they make application once more to the City Council for license, and if they meet with a refusal, to open their bars and take their chances before the courts.

The reports referred to above are falsehoods started by the news of this city for effect upon those who the news is simple enough to consider are vacillating councilmen.

There is absolutely no truth in a single word of it all, and the news knew it when it printed it.

The Last Meeting a Pleasant Entertainment.

Miss Grace W. Luther, a member of Holy Cross church, has charge of the Children's Sewing Class, consisting of 14 members. They meet every Friday afternoon in the school building. Friday was the last day of meeting until next Fall.

Miss Luther conceived the idea that a little entertainment to the children would be proper and might be appreciated. She accordingly requested all the members to be present, as she wished to make their last meeting this season a very pleasant one. All were there at the appointed hour, and Miss Luther, assisted by Mrs. Chas. J. Taggart, entertained them with the donkey game and others, and gave them all the ice-cream and cake that was judicious, which was all the more appreciated owing to the hot weather. The little ones enjoyed that meeting more than any previous one. It was a sorry parting, but when six o'clock arrived all went away delighted with their enjoyment, but wishing for another of those last meetings to come very soon again.

LOCAL OBITUARY.

REV. JOHN SIMONSON.

At his home on Park avenue, this city, at about eleven o'clock on Saturday evening, occurred the death of Rev. John Simonson, at one time pastor of the First Reformed Dutch church here. The deceased was in the 73d year of his age, and his illness dated back for a considerable period. His death resulted from bronchial trouble superinduced by general debility. The deceased's wife died a few years since.

The First Reformed Dutch church (now known as Trinity Reformed) was erected by a denomination of people calling themselves the Union Baptists, in 1861, with Rev. Mr. Mason as the first pastor. A few years later, a split in the First Presbyterian church resulted in one portion of the congregation forming themselves into a body of worshippers known as the Baptists. This body at first held their services in the old Seventh Day Baptist church, and subsequently joined with the Union Baptists and took possession of the First Reformed Dutch church. It was then that Rev. Dr. Simonson was called to the pastorate, and he continued in that capacity for about five years.

At the end of that time, Rev. Dr. Simonson was obliged to give up active work in the pulpit on account of ill health and he has since lived a retired life. At his retirement, a part of the church consistory resigned and organized what subsequently merged into the Congregational church, with Rev. Dr. Smith as the first pastor.

The deceased was a man of considerable means. During his connection with the church he contributed liberally toward charitable and benevolent institutions. Some of his donations to the church being a handsome communion service, the pew racks and chandeliers.

The funeral took place from the deceased's late residence, No. 104 Park avenue, Tuesday at 4:30 P. M. Interment at Newtown, Long Island.

Off Her Base.

An elderly lady, dressed in black, whose mind is evidently wandering, has been going about the city during the past week in search of board. The woman claims to have come from Jersey City, which place, she says she left on account of the impure water and because all the people are Germans. At one place in the Third Ward where the woman applied for board, she told a conflicting story, stating that at one time she lived in Brooklyn, but removed from there simply because all the residents were Irish.

The woman claims to have plenty of means, and says she was personally acquainted with George Washington, in whose army she declares that her husband served.

Reform Hall.

At the meeting in Reform Hall, Sunday evening, the President being absent, Vice President Harper occupied the chair. Prayer was offered by Mr. Angleman, Jr., and all the members of Mr. Vanderbeek's choir were at their posts of duty.

The speaker, as announced, was Samuel A. Haines, Esq., of Netherwood. His text was "What next?" and ably and eloquently did he argue against the evils of liquor, and for that glorious day when the liquor traffic would be entirely suppressed. Mr. Haines wields great platform power. There is no compromise about him, he discards the license system in every shape, and goes straight forward for prohibition. His remarks commanded, as they always do, profound attention.

THE NEW RAILROAD SCHEDULE.

On the last page of this issue will be found the complete new schedule of trains on the Central railroad, that went into effect last Sunday for the Summer.

Reports from scare-crow sources have said the 1:30 P. M., from New York would be taken off, but as usual the news was wrong and THE PRESS was right. Not only does the 1:30 continue to stop but the railroad authorities have added to the schedule another train from New York—and it's a good one—at 11:30 A. M. The changes from Plainfield to New York are many, besides a number of new and most convenient trains have been added.

First—our readers must remember that the 9:27 A. M., now leaves at 9:32, and the 11:25 at 11:09. On Sundays the train that was scheduled for 11:03 but was always late, is now down for 11:30.

The 5:24 and 5:32 evening trains from this city, now leave at 5:39 and 5:47. Afternoon trains will leave Plainfield at 12:08, 1:05, 1:46, 2:15, 2:25, etc.

THE PRESS Finds Annie Keating.

"Micky" McDonald and "Pig" McDermott, the two crooks arrested in New York by Inspector Byrnes' men on suspicion of being guilty of the burglary of the Plainfield post office, had a hearing before Commissioner Shields in New York, Friday. The accused are trying to build up an alibi, and their lawyer agreed to an adjournment for another week which was particularly satisfactory to the prosecution.

Annie Keating, who had been missing for months, is found. THE PRESS of Tuesday advertised for her whereabouts, and at seven o'clock that evening she walked into the office with a paper in her hand and asked what she was wanted for. She is the one to whom was addressed the registered package that the burglars emptied, and it is hoped to prove with her help that the original contents of that package were the set of jewelry found on one of the prisoners.

Conductor Jacob Archer, who run the 3:29 train from this city to New York on the morning of the burglary, again swore positively yesterday that McDonald was one of the men that got on his train at Plainfield that morning.

YOU CAN'T PLEASE EVERYBODY!
Is an old saying. But it's astonishing what a number of people we manage to please with our stock of Spring Clothing. This is especially true of the goods we make up for the little ones. It would take a good deal of space and an eloquent pen to do justice to the many pretty and tasteful garments which we design and make up for the youngsters. All of these styles are our own, and are the result of much patient thought and effort. There may be places where an assortment equal to our own is to be met with, but you'll travel a long way to find it, and when you succeed you'll note that the prices are far above our limit for a similar class of goods. We study to please, and we succeed. Mothers are pleased because they find just what suits their boys without a long hunt for it. The boys are pleased because the clothes fit them so well and look so handsome. The rich and the poor are both pleased because they secure good value, and everybody is pleased with the prices. Our Clothing for larger boys and men has the same artistic and shapely appearance, and as to value for the money, it is simply unapproachable.

He had an exquisite tenor voice, and, although generally the very type of dignity, would occasionally sing pathetic Italian songs for the delectation of a few friends who lingered late over their coffee. SENSIBLE SUGGESTIONS.

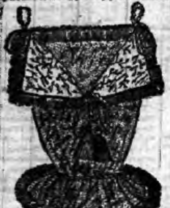
Various Articles for House Adornment—How to Make Them.

Dainty work-baskets are almost indispensable in "my lady's" boudoir as well as in the sewing-room. Charming creations are fashioned of plush, satin and ribbons.

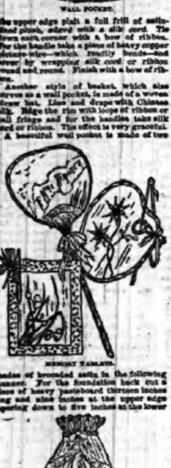
A pretty square basket is made of a pasteboard box, six by six inches. Smoothly cover with plush and line with surah or satin. This is best done by cutting the box apart and covering piece by piece. Around the upper edge plait a full frill of satin-lined plush, edged with a silk cord. Tie down each corner with a bow of ribbon. For the handle take a piece of heavy copper picture-wire—which readily bends—and cover by wrapping silk cord or ribbon round and round. Finish with a bow of ribbon.



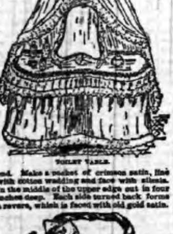
WALL POCKET.

Another style of basket, which also serves as a wall pocket, is made of a woven straw hat. Line and drape with Chinese silk. Edge the rim with loops of ribbon or ball fringe and for the handles take silk cord or ribbon. The effect is very graceful.

A beautiful wall pocket is made of two shades of brocaded satin in the following manner. For the foundation back cut a piece of heavy pasteboard thirteen inches long and nine inches at the upper edge tapering down to five inches at the lower end. Make a pocket of crimson satin, line with cotton wadding and face with silesia. In the middle of the upper edge cut in four inches deep. Each side turned back forms a revere, which is faced with old gold satin.

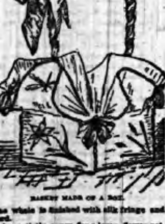


MEMORY TABLETS.



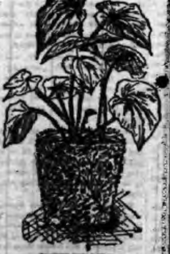
TOILET TABLE.

The whole is finished with silk fringe and cord.



BASKET MADE OF A BOX.

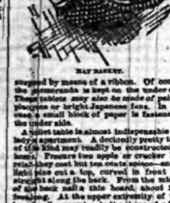
An artistic cover for a large flower-pot, containing a fine foliage or other plant, is made of a peach basket ornamented in rural mosaic. The entire surface of the basket is covered with the many fruits of the forest—cones, pressed ferns, bright berries and nuts. These are glued on, arranged in any fanciful manner, the cone forming an upper and a lower border. Finally it may be brightened here and there—the cone particularly—with metallic paints in copper, bronze, silver and gilt.



FLOWER-POT COVER.

Every housewife should have a tablet of some sort at hand on which to note the numerous items requiring attention from day to day. These "mute reminders" may be ornamental as well as useful and grace the sitting-room wall or any place of convenience.

Take a small child's slate; bronze the frame, and in oil, on the outer side, paint any simple design—a bunch of Black-Eyed Susans or a landscape. Attach a pencil and suspend by means of a ribbon. Of course, the memoranda is kept on the under side. These tablets may also be made of painted placques or bright Japanese fans. In this case a small block of paper is fastened to the under side.



HAT BASKET.

A toilet table is almost indispensable in a lady's apartment. A decidedly pretty table of this kind may readily be constructed at home. Procure two apple or cracker barrels—they cost but ten cents apiece—and of light pine cut a top, curved in front and straight along the back. From the middle of the back nail a thin board, about four feet long. At the upper extremity of this board nail crosswise, in the shape of a T, a light board one and one-half feet long. This frame work has now to be draped. For this purpose may be used dotted Swiss, edged with lace, scrims, or flowered chintz, which does not soil so easily. The drapery when soiled can be taken off and washed, or, at a trifling expense, it may be renewed.

ANNA HINRICHS.

BRAIN REST.

An Interesting Incident—A Man's Brain Needs Rest and Takes It Without His Knowledge.

The suspension of self-consciousness is illustrated by the incident related by Dr. Kempster, the expert who has been so long resident in Washington, as physician in charge of the invalid wife and daughter of Senator Sawyer. Dr. Kempster says: "One of the best authenticated cases of absolute loss of self-consciousness was that of a citizen of Neenah, Wis., a business man, who was lost and not heard from for ten days. He went to a political meeting, heard speeches, and started for home, after having argued with a friend near the hall door concerning the right and wrong of local parties. He did not go home and his family became distracted as the days went by and no tidings came from the missing man. At last a telegram came to his wife, dated Washington City, and stating that he would be home soon. The fact is, that gentleman had gone to Chicago, and thence to Washington, without knowing where he was going or what he was doing, until he regained self-consciousness in the rotunda of the capitol, under the dome, where he stood looking at the immense paintings that adorn the walls. When he realized that he was there the shock was so sudden that he fainted, was carried off in a police ambulance and treated by physicians who thought the man insane. Finally he assured them of his condition and sent the telegram to his wife.

He found in his pockets one hundred and twenty dollars in cash. Yet he knew that when he went to that political meeting in Neenah, he had about forty dollars only on his person. That annoyed him more than all else. He couldn't account for the possession of that money. Well, he returned home and was under my care for a long time and fully recovered. There was nothing the matter with him but over-work. His brain needed rest, and took a rest in spite of him. Three months passed, and a gentleman in Chicago wrote my patient asking him to return the two hundred dollars which he had borrowed and which was long overdue; because he had only expressed a desire to have the money for a few weeks when he borrowed it. Wasn't that singular? There was unconscious but correct cerebration. He was going on a trip, knew he did not have enough money, went to a friend and borrowed it, and yet was not personally conscious of any thing done by him. This is indeed a celebrated case, among medical men, but the gentleman does not like to have his name used in the public prints. He thinks it reflects upon his sanity; but it does not. He was never before, nor has he at any time since, been afflicted in that manner. His brain was tired out and took an enforced rest.

FACES OF CRIMINALS.

Inspector Byrnes Discards the Science of Physiognomy.

What Features Disclose—How to Study the Eyes—Characteristics of the Mouth, Jaws and Ears—The Deceptiveness of Appearances.

It is a wise man who knows his own ignorance, observes Inspector Thomas Byrnes, of New York, in the Philadelphia Times.

I am moved to smile when I hear of men who can not have met one-tenth as many people as I have, or under such various and peculiar circumstances, asserting that they understand human nature. I doubt if even one man is thoroughly understood by any body, least of all by himself. For the purposes of my business, long experience in dealing with men and women is of incalculable value; it enables the detective to judge quickly concerning the individuals and acquaints him with many general characteristics of the human family; but after all this valuable experience teaches one most important lesson—that it will never do to jump to conclusions on appearances. It leads the detective to distrust all generalizations, all rules for discovering a man's tendencies, all that so-called science, physiognomy, and to depend solely upon facts and evidence, meaning by the latter term things that will hold good in a law court.

It is true that the cast of a man's features may be of service, and that no detective will examine a supposed criminal with his eyes shut; but physiognomy is merely a factor in the work, not a guide to it. If all men were savages, if they grew from infancy to manhood and old age with no artificial influences to bend their natures, physiognomy might be reduced to an exact science. I do not assert that it could, but admit that it might. In the complex civilization of to-day it never can be. For education modifies the lines of the face to a remarkable degree. The growth of intelligence imparts not only a new, softened expression to the face, but actually changes its appearance to an extent that will inevitably throw the rules of physiognomy into confusion. Not that a crooked nose may become straight, or a large mouth small; but wise habits and the desire to appear well in the world may erase the ugly, vice-born wrinkles about the eyes and on the forehead, and effect other changes of a similar nature.

While the lines may be modified and the nature refined, the brutal or criminal tendencies are not, unhappily, eradicated. They may lie dormant throughout a lifetime, and they may break out, if the provocation arises, at any moment. If this happens the criminal is a hard case for the detectives. His education has taught him some things that his less fortunate brother in the dives can not make available. It sometimes happens that vicious tendencies remain dormant for generations, during which the lines of a man's face have been subject to constant improvement. In cases, however, when a boy of vicious parentage grows up in vicious surroundings, where his animal nature is given full swing, he grows to manhood a marked criminal, and can be picked out at sight. Just what direction his nature takes, however, whether to burglary, swindling, murder, licentiousness or petty thieving, can not be determined with accuracy at a glance.

I have said that physiognomy may be regarded as a factor in criminal detecting. Even then it must be applied with caution, and never be depended on without evidence. It is a good plan to get evidence first and then back it up, if you like the diversion, with an analysis of the features of the criminal. In dealing with suspects I try to get hints of their character by observing the mouth, the eyes, jaws and ears. From the mouth a fair estimate may be obtained of the subject's character as to determination or weak will power, brute courage or timidity, chastity or licentiousness, generosity or selfishness, cruelty or kindness.

It will be observed that this does not go so far as to make a suspect flatly a criminal or honest man; it simply suggests his tendencies. In seeking to determine whether a person is telling the truth I depend a good deal upon the eyes; not, however, upon their general appearance, for the most evil-eyed person in the world may tell the truth at times, and some of the best of men may prevaricate upon occasions of great temptation. It is rather the action of the eyes that tells the secret. I try to place the person who is in question so that the light shines fully into his face. Then I can see the pupils, and if they waver or contract more than the light would call for I feel pretty confident that I am dealing with a liar. It is practically impossible to control the pupil. One whose eyes do not waver when he is deceiving a detective usually betrays himself by the very effort, which gives to his face an appearance of over-confidence, and the assumption of innocent candor becomes a calm stare.

There is not a great deal to be learned from an inspection of the jaws and ears, but I have noticed that heavy, wide jaws usually go with small ears that lie close to the head. Criminals of this class are generally desperate characters, hard to handle, who are little amenable to reason, and appreciate only the argument of force. On the other hand, men with lantern jaws and flappy ears present little difficulty.

A striking proof of the uncertainty of physiognomy in determining a man's character, to say nothing of the nature of his deeds, may be seen at a glance at the rogue's gallery in this city. Three pictures were placed before a visitor one day. He knew from the circumstances that they were criminals. One he fixed upon unhesitatingly as a brutal murderer, another as a swindler, and the third looked so much like a benevolent clergyman that the visitor disliked to rate him any where, but finally put him down as a thief.

"He might have a mania for stealing books from libraries," said the visitor, apologetically.

Turning to the backs of the photographs the visitor read the summarized records of the three. The "murderer's" worst crime had been the snatching of money from a lady's hand as she was carelessly displaying it in the street; the "swindler" had committed an atrocious murder, and the benevolent-looking "thief" was the keeper of an infamous resort. And the visitor thought he knew something about physiognomy and human nature, too.

UNFAMILIAR GEMS.

Green Garnets, Beryl, Sun-Stones, Chrysolites and Other Precious Stones.

The list of precious stones with which we are familiar is after all a very small one, says a writer in the San Francisco Chronicle, embracing simply the diamond, emerald, sapphire, ruby, opal, topaz, carbuncle, amethyst and pearl. This, however, is a very small part of the actual list. Readers of the Bible will, of course, remember that two lists of precious stones are given in that book. The first is given in the description of the Jewish high priest's breastplate, and is as follows:

"And thou shalt set it (the breastplate) in setting of stones, four rows of stones; a row of sardius, topaz and carbuncle shall be the first row; and the second row an emerald, a sapphire and a diamond; and the third row a jacinth, an agate and an amethyst; and the fourth row a beryl and an onyx and a jasper."

The second list is given in the description of the New Jerusalem:

"The foundations of the walls of the city were adorned with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper, the second sapphire, the third chalcedony, the fourth emerald, the fifth sardonyx, the sixth sardius, the seventh chrysolite, the eighth beryl, the ninth topaz, the tenth chrysoprase, the eleventh jacinth, the twelfth amethyst, and the twelve gates were twelve pearls."

In these two lists there are six stones, the sardius, chalcedony, chrysolite, beryl, chrysoprase and jacinth, that may be called unknown; and two, the jasper and sardonyx, which we are not accustomed to put in lists of gems.

Before going any farther it will be interesting to find out something about the unused half dozen, and this, it will be found, can be comparatively done by first considering the chalcedony, which is the mother stone of a large family. Chalcedony is a semi-transparent kind of quartz, apparently produced by the infiltration of water holding silicious matters in solution. The name is that of the locality, Chalcedon, in Asia Minor, where it is said to have been originally found. Chalcedony, in some of its many varieties, is found in Tuscany, Iceland, the Faroe Islands, Saxony, Hungary, India, Arabia, Surinam, Siberia, Cornwall, Scotland, the Giants' Causeway and in California, near Vallejo. Beautiful chalcedonic pebbles may be picked up on some of the southern English beaches, at Pescadero, in California, and at Lake Tahoe. Chalcedony is usually milk white, but it assumes a number of colors and markings. When it is of a light red or yellow color it is called carnelian, because of its flesh color. Carnelian was formerly much used for beads and seal-stones, but now it is seldom seen as an ornament except in the shape of cheap rings sold at country fairs. When it is of a deep brown it is called sardius, or sard; when it shows alternating parallel bands of different colors without any pronounced contrast it is called onyx; and when these layers are of very dark sard and nearly opaque white chalcedony it is called sardonyx, a stone that was and is still held in great esteem for engraving into cameos.

Lastly, flint, horn-stone and plasma are all baser forms of this same chalcedony.

Though so closely alike in name the beryl and chrysoberyl have little else in common. The beryl is a variety of the emerald, and is found in six-sided prisms of variable dimensions. The colors are generally blue or yellow, but some are colorless. When of clear tints or sea-green or sky-blue they are called by the jewelers aqua-marines. Beryl crystals are found in New Hampshire and Massachusetts, China, Brazil, Siberia, Cornwall, Ireland and Scotland, the Irish specimens being of a fine blue color and sometimes quite transparent.

The chrysoberyl is found in small rounded masses about the size of a pea, which on being cut show various tints of greenish yellow, with clear, translucent and very hard body. Sometimes they show a bluish opalescence internally. The finer chrysoberyls are equal in appearance to the yellow diamond. They are found in Ireland, Brazil and Ceylon.

The chrysolite, like the chalcedony, is a silicate. It is rarely found in crystals, but generally in angular pieces of greenish or golden-yellow color, embedded in basalt or lava. The principal localities are Vesuvius and the Isle of Bourbon, in lava; Real del Monte in Mexico, Upper Egypt, Constantinople, and in pale green transparent crystals among the sand of a stream in Auvergne. Inferior varieties of the chrysolite are called olivines, and are found in the basalt of the Giant's Causeway, the lavas of Unkel, on the Rhine, and those of the Sandwich Islands. It is sometimes found, too, in meteoric stones.

Jacinth is only another name for hyacinth, and the hyacinth is a variety of another silicate called zircon, found in Ceylon, Norway, some of the islands of Scotland and certain Irish streams. Zircon occurs in crystals, generally square, four-sided prisms terminated by four-sided pyramids, and also in grains, sometimes white, but more frequently red, yellow, green or gray. The colorless or slightly smoky kinds are called jargoons; the bright red hyacinth and the grayish or brownish zirconite.

Another precious silicate is the more perfect form of schorl called tourmaline. The red tourmaline or rubellite, which is brought from Brazil, Ceylon, Avar and Siberia, possesses considerable beauty. The transparent colored varieties are sometimes still cut into ring stones, etc., and when reduced to thin slices are much valued for making experiments in the polarization of light.

The list of precious silicates is not yet exhausted. There is, for instance, that known as jasper. It is found in various colors—spotted, banded or variegated. It takes a fine polish, and the variety and richness of its colors render it still useful in the ornamental arts. Allied to this is the bloodstone, a jaspery variety of quartz, of a dark-green color, variegated with red spots, and was once quite a fashionable material for seals and ring stones. When the spots are yellow, instead of red, this stone is called the heliotrope. Still another silicate that takes rank among the precious stones is the lapis lazuli or lazulite. It is of a beautiful color, often speckled with yellow grains, and is still made use of in mosaic and inlaid work, as well as for making vases and other costly ornaments.

Quartz, except where it contains rich gold deposits, is not generally considered a precious stone, but there is a variety called the rose quartz, which certainly comes under that head. It is of a beautiful rose red or pink color, and nearly transparent. It is found in Ceylon and Bavaria, and is often sold for much more precious stones. Adularia, or felspar, likewise is not of much value, but that resplendent variety found in Siberia and Norway of a pale yellowish color and called the sunstone is certainly a jewel among stones. The play of color on a gold sunstone is simply beautiful.

There are scores of other precious stones that are not found in the every-day list, but this article must be brought to a close with the statement that the red garnets so commonly seen are but one of very many varieties, which include the cinnamon stone of an orange-yellow, the water garnet, which is colorless; the grossular, which is olive, and the black.

THE END.

THE old doctor was dying. There was no doubt about that. He himself knew that his life was surging away with the short, quick gasps that seemed to rack his body with pain. Yet he fought sturdily against the approach of death. To the silent attendants at his bedside it seemed as if he was trying to gather strength to say something ere his lips should be sealed forever. He tried to speak, but the words were not audible. Again he strove and this time the nurse, bending over the bed, heard him say:

"Has the doctor come yet?"

The nurse was about to reply when a light, quick step was heard and the doctor came in. The vacant stare left the face of the dying man. By a supreme effort he raised himself up, reached under the pillow, drew forth a neatly-folded manuscript, placed it in the doctor's hands, and fell back exhausted. He did not speak again and in a few minutes he was dead.

It was a strange affair, the eccentric young Doctor Mechlin thought, as he assisted in performing the last offices for the dead man, a very strange affair. His thoughts reverted to the past, to the time when he had first met him whose silent form lay stretched on the rickety bed in the small, plainly-furnished room. He had returned from a visit to a country patient one day about six months previous and upon returning found the old doctor seated on a chair in his office poring over a medical work. His visitor apologized for his intrusion and went away without an explanation, and Dr. Mechlin soon forgot the incident. The next day, upon going to his office (the outer door was never locked) the old man was to be seen as before, studying a medical book and apparently oblivious to his surroundings. Dr. Mechlin demanded an explanation. The old man was very non-committal at first. Finally, when he was told he must leave the office and keep away under penalty of arrest, he looked appealingly at the other and gave the following meager and hardly satisfactory account of his peculiar actions.

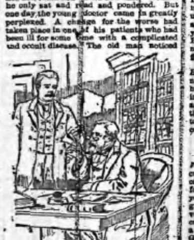
He said that he was a physician by profession; that he had practiced in the large cities both in this country and in Europe. In his old age he had been reduced almost to want by unfortunate investments, and was finally forced to retire. He had come to Ostin because he could live cheaply and quietly.

"This is all I can tell you," the old man said, in an appealing tone, "and I ask that you will place faith in my words. All I desire is that I may be permitted to spend a few hours occasionally in your office where I can be near the profession that in my old age I have been forced to relinquish."

The young doctor looked sharply at the aged stranger and pondered upon the strange request. The visitor had apparently relapsed into unconsciousness of his surroundings, and Dr. Mechlin had an opportunity to carefully scrutinize him. The stranger was attired in conventional, but well-worn garments. He had that indefinable air that marks the physician, that was evident. There was nothing in his appearance to indicate insanity even to the practiced eye of his observer.

"Pshaw!" muttered Dr. Mechlin to himself, "he is nothing but an eccentric. It can certainly do no harm to accede to his request."

And so the young and the old doctor reached an understanding, and every day the old man came to his young friend's office and remained hours at a time. At first he only sat and read and pondered. But one day the young doctor came in greatly perplexed. A change for the worse had taken place in one of his patients who had been ill for some time with a complicated and occult disease. The old man noticed his anxiety and questioned him. The case was explained. The eccentric seized a prescription blank and rapidly wrote out several prescriptions.



"TRY THESE," HE SAID.

"Try these," he said, and turned to his book again. Dr. Mechlin hesitated. The prescriptions followed no ordinary law of medicine. But the case was a desperate one; his patient would die unless he could afford immediate relief. He seized the prescriptions, had them filled and hurried to the house of his patient and administered them. The strange medicine wrought a wonderful change. In an hour an improvement was noticeable, and in three days the sick one was out of danger.

Dr. Mechlin's respect for his eccentric visitor increased greatly after this occurrence, and he allowed him to come and go as he pleased, and many times did the old man's suggestions bring him success and reputation.

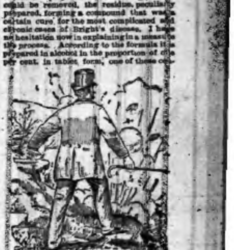
One day the aged doctor was not to be found in his accustomed chair in Dr. Mechlin's office. The latter thought it strange, but the entrance of a visitor banished the subject from his mind. Another day, and again did the eccentric fail to appear. Dr. Mechlin became alarmed and was about to set out in search of him when a ragged little boy brought the news that the stranger was dying, and urgently desired his presence.

The old doctor had been given Christian burial. No friends had appeared to mourn his loss, and Dr. Mechlin sat in his office, the bequest in his hand, hoping that its perusal might cast some light upon the mystery of his life. It was only a package of manuscript, carefully written and neatly folded. The doctor never lifted his eyes until he had read the last line. These were the words of the manuscript:

"I am a physician in good standing. Indeed, there are few of my profession who have been fortunate enough to attain the rank that was mine when I retired from active work a few years ago. I have told you that I have practiced in the leading cities of the New and the Old World. This is true, and the mention of my real name would cause a commotion in medical circles that you, as a physician, can readily understand. Spring smiled on the earth when I withdrew from active practice. My nerves were unstrung, my general health undermined and I felt the need of rest and seclusion. A few years before I had spent a summer in the beautiful little village of St. Johnsbury, in Vermont. Thither I repaired to regain, in a measure, if I could, my impaired physical faculties.

"Soon I began to gain rapidly, and, too restless to remain entirely idle, I pursued the study of my profession into its most intricate branches. Not that I ever expected to practice again, but because I so loved the healing art. I had, in earlier years, brought out several remedial agents that had proved quite successful and my studies were naturally in that direction. I had become much interested in the known and probable properties of nitro-glycerine. I believed that that powerful explosive could be made a power against the inroads of certain kinds of disease, Bright's disease, that dreaded curse of modern times, in particular. Spring lapsed into summer and summer into early winter before I had solved the problem, but finally success was mine.

"I had discovered a process by which the explosive properties of nitro-glycerine could be removed, the residue, peculiarly prepared, forming a compound that was a certain cure for the most complicated and chronic cases of Bright's disease. I have no hesitation now in explaining in a measure the process. According to the formula it is prepared in alcohol in the proportion of one per cent. in tablet form, one of these containing the one hundredth part of a grain. It is called trinitrin, and is nitro-glycerine of a pure quality, possessing at first all the explosive power of that article. The latter is removed by its mixture with alcohol, and the tablet is formed of sugar, milk or other inert substances.



THEN I HEARD AN AWFUL EXPLOSION.

"I had discovered the remedy, but where was the patient? Who would allow himself to be treated with nitro-glycerine, even though I should assure him that its explosive properties had been removed? I had no patients in the little town. One day shortly after I had made my wonderful discovery I was accosted by a tramp, who begged for a coin to purchase a meal. I was about to turn him away when a brilliant thought struck me. I said to him: 'Follow me,' and he went with me to my room. I locked the door.

"He was an ordinary-looking tramp, but the demon of recklessness was plainly shown in his 'devil-may-care' eye. Why had I invited him to my room? He had Bright's disease; my professional eye detected that.

"'My man,' I said to him, 'do you want to earn a hundred dollars and leave here a month hence a well man? You have Bright's disease and I can cure you.'

"The tramp accepted my proposal before I had ceased talking. But I told him just what I wanted of him. He was to take my nitro-glycerine tablets, as I should direct, for thirty days. I would feed him, clothe him, and when the time was up give him one hundred dollars. I warned him that it was but an experiment, of which he was the subject, and that the consequences might be good; if not, he might bid farewell to life; but I knew my medicine was all right. I only wanted to be fair with him.

"The explanation made no difference. If the experiment was successful he was that much better off. If not, why, who cared about a tramp, any way? It was evident that I had gained a prize.

"An hour later the tramp came to me refreshed and rehabilitated. I had made some of the precious tablets in a portable laboratory, and gave him the first dose. The next few hours were anxious ones. But no harm came. Three times a day did the tramp come to my room and swallow one of the tablets. In a few days a wonderful improvement became evident. My discovery was sure to prove the greatest remedial agent of the age.

"The thirty days had passed. I was walking with a gentleman upon a high and steep bluff that overlooks the charming valley of the Passumpsic. It was my tramp! Clothed in the garb of a gentleman, his countenance radiant with the flush of health, none would have recognized him as the miserable creature that besought me to give him a cent but a month ago. He was a living monument of the success of my great remedial discovery.

"It was very slippery upon the bluff. Sleet had fallen the day before and the path was icy and treacherous. My companion stepped too near the edge, and I warned him, but he laughed and continued on his perilous way. Suddenly he slipped and disappeared. The bluff was over a hundred feet high.

"He would be killed.

"One or two awful seconds that seemed like ages followed. I could not move.

"Then I heard an awful explosion that shook the precipice. What had happened? I looked over the bluff, but could see nothing more than a thin smoke curling slowly upward. I ran to the foot of the bluff by a circuitous route available to a man of my years and strength. Where was the tramp? He must have fallen right here. I could see nothing but riven rock. The awful truth flashed upon me. He had exploded.

"I never found so much as a hair of him. He must have become thoroughly impregnated with nitro-glycerine. My formula had failed. I had not succeeded in destroying the explosive property of the deadly agent. The tramp was never missed. No, that is not true. I missed him. I wanted to find out just how the human body received and retained explosive properties."

Ford's Old Theater.

Abraham Lincoln was assassinated in Ford's Theater, and the building is now occupied by a branch of the Surgeon-General's office. Originally the edifice was erected for a church, a Baptist society, and for many years they worshiped there. Since the great tragedy the building has been converted into a Government office and a medical museum. As a Government office it is a travesty upon hygiene. The Surgeon-General is the chief medical officer of the army, and yet that branch of his office is almost a National disgrace. It was the same under former Surgeon-Generals, and will be under the successor of the present incumbent, who will soon be retired on account of age. The building is dark and gloomy. It is without a cellar, and the floor rests upon the ground. The records of the medical officers of the armies are stored in alcoves into which the light of day never comes. Clerks are obliged to search those records by gas-light in mid-day. The custom has prevailed for more than twelve years past. How much longer will the infamy continue.

What Whisky Will Do.

The utter abandonment of judgment by excessive use of whisky and the heavier wines is well illustrated by the following incident.

In the autumn of 1885 there stood at the bar of the National Hotel, in Washington, a distinguished United States Senator. He is a man of great courage, sagacity and prudence. But he had spent the day entertaining a couple of prominent gentlemen from his State, and the trio were well advanced into the hilarious stage of exhilaration. The Senator pulled from his pocket an autograph letter from the President, saying:

"Here is what the old rooster says. Think of it, asking me to prove my offensive partisanship against that old political reprobate, before he will remove him. I'm going to the White House to-morrow morning and if he don't appoint you, or promise to appoint you soon, I'll just let into him and have a row right there. He is a stiff-necked, hard-headed man, but he must learn that Senators have rights which he shall be compelled to respect."

Every man in the bar-room, and there were a score at least, heard the words; many saw the letter and recognized the handwriting of Mr. Cleveland. There were two newspaper men there, too. One of them walked up to the Senator, whispered and warned him to be quiet. Instantly he realized his position and left the room. Neither one of the reporters used the item, which would have been sensational at the time; but they kept themselves, because the Senator was and is "a good fellow" whom everybody likes.

Beating the Theater Manager.

Man at the theater box-office.

"Have you any front seats in the upper gallery?"

"Yes, sir."

"How high is that above the parquet?"

"About seventy feet."

"Do you think I could see over the gallery down stairs?"

"I think so."

"Gimme two."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Giles—Did De Jinks pay you the V he borrowed?

Merritt—He offered to match me to see whether it would be double or quits. I won.

Giles—You're in luck.

Merritt—I can't see it. He now owes me a tenner.

THE ARCHITECTS OF WEALTH.

Who are they?

The question can be readily answered.

They are the farmers, mechanics, artisans, fabricators in the various departments of useful industry, and the laboring classes in general.

They are the artificers of real wealth, and that saying no man can truthfully dispute.

Labor is the creator and custodian of capital.

Without labor capital would be a dead weight, from labor it draws its life-blood, and to labor it ought to return just recompense and genuine protection.

There need not and should not be any antagonism between capital and labor. Naturally they are mutual friends, but to remain such, they must stand upon the broad and sound platform of equal and exact justice, each being willing to give and receive a fair equivalent for services rendered.

EQUAL AND EXACT JUSTICE [illegible] contemplates the care and welfare [illegible] of organized labor throughout this country, and who dares assert that such a claim is not founded upon the immutable principles of right.

The cause of labor is the cause of right.

Wealth is material development and labor is the developing power.

Those many magnificent edifices to be seen in our large cities are from base to dome the result of patient labor. The granite and marble would have lain dormant in quarries, the brick clay in undug pits, the lumber stood in unfelled trees, the iron beams and fastenings remained as ore in the bowels of the earth, but for applied labor.

So, too, the vast system of railroads which now belt the continent owe their being to labor. Engineers planned, and they are to be honored as brain-workers, but it was the sweating brows and brawny hands of the sons of toil that made them practical by grading the sides of the mountains, spanning deep ravines, boring the tunnels for transit through walls of rock, laying the iron rails, and equipping them for use.

Labor builds the chariot and adds the wheels of advancing civilization and wealth.

Without labor, this glorious land of ours would be comparatively a wilderness or a barren waste.

Honor and encourage labor, and that not by steady profession, but by substantial deeds.

It is the architect of wealth.

The Next Governor's Appointments.

The Governor to be elected this year will have many of the most important appointments in the State. These appointments include the Secretary of State, Attorney General, Supreme Court and Chancery Clerks, the Chief Justice and two Associate Justices, three Lay Judges of the Court of Errors, three State [illegible] keepers, eight Law Judges in counties, twenty Lay Judges and nine Prosecutors of the Pleas.

We Know Just Such a Man.

An exchange publishes the following: "WANTED—An editor who can read, write and argue politics, and at the same time be religious, funny, scientific and historical at will; write to displease everybody; know everything without asking or being told, always have something bad to say about somebody else, live on wind, and make more enemies than money. For such a man a good opening will be made—in the graveyard."

When Plainfield Will Begin to Grow Again.

The renting of houses in Plainfield was never so dull as this season. There are more empty houses today than usual, and the real estate business, by comparison with any year for the past five, is stagnated.

Water works, a street railway, and a proper system of sewerage, are all necessary before Plainfield can recover herself and begin to grow again. Let these improvements come as soon as possible—sooner.

Public School Notes.

The high school commencement occurs this year on Thursday, June 27. The graduating class of '89 numbers 13, of which 11 are young ladies and 2 young gentlemen. Gold and white constitute the class colors of the graduating class of '89.

Just at present several of the pupils are selecting their subject for the prize composition, of which quite a list has been announced. From this number each writer chooses the subject that suits the taste of the competitor. The essays are to be submitted for the prize on June 1. The following are the themes from which a selection is to be made: Arctic Explorations and their Effect on Science; Review of Ben Hur; Have we too many National Holidays? Flowers; Scott and Scotland; Should Immigration be Restricted? Butterflies; Home life in the Time of Elizabeth; A Memorable Day in Rome; "Turn, Turn my Wheel;" Railways, and their Effect upon Civilization; Advertisements; A Journey; April 30, 1789.

A CHALLENGE FOR CHARITY'S SAKE.

A notice that the East New Jersey Baptists would meet here in June, was recently circulated among all the papers of the State. The news, having nothing else, put it in at once, while THE PRESS only found room for it some days later.

Saturday the news devoted a quarter column of its valuable space to prove that THE PRESS copied the item from the news. It fairly glowed, because never before in the two years' existence of THE PRESS, had the news a chance to even fake up such a charge.

The robbery of Mr. N. W. Pike's house by the servant of the Washington Rock [illegible], the hotel, the fire at Mr. Sam'l Huntington's residence, the election of Savings Bank officers, the report of Mrs. Patton's [illegible] read before the Plainfield McAll Auxiliary, the death of Mr. Wm. Whitehead, the examination of the Plainfield post office [illegible], and a dozen other items published exclusively in THE PRESS of Saturday, the news was ignorant of. It was trying to persuade the servant girls who read the [illegible] grammar and [illegible], that an official notice of a Baptist convention sent to all papers, originated in the news.

THE PRESS makes this startling offer [illegible] it will donate to the Children's Home or any other charitable institution, one hundred dollars for each item it ever has or ever does copy from the news, if the latter will give just one dollar in the same way for each item the news has ever copied from THE PRESS from hereafter.

—Our sportsmen would do well to remember that the black bass season does not open until May 30—Decoration Day.

Decoration Day at Washingtonville.

Great preparations are being made for the strawberry and ice-cream festival at Washingtonville on Decoration Day. The attendance at the festival last year was very large, but it is hoped that it will be much larger this year.

Preparations are being made to have plenty of room. There will be a stage run from Plainfield to the school house.

The "news" Thief Again.

May 15, the news published a notice of Mr. George H. Babcock's gift of land and money for the new Seventh Day Baptist chapel, which item was stolen from THE PRESS of the day before.

It also contained a blundering account of the extension and alterations that are to be made to the Crescent Avenue church and chapel, which account was given in detail and correctly a month ago in THE PRESS the day immediately following the evening when the plans were decided on.

Plainfield Outside the State in Rain.

Plainfield's temperature and weather for April, as reported to the State Bureau by M. S. Simpson, M. D., shows the following records of interest:

The fall of rain in this city for the month was 7.25 inches, which was greater than at any other place in New Jersey. Average temperature, 49.2; highest on the 19th, 80.0; lowest on the 5th, 27.0. Number of rainy days, 12; cloudy, 16. Last deadly frost, 23d. Last frozen ground, 24th.

Mutual Building Loan Association.

The members of the above Association held their regular monthly meeting in their new rooms in the Manning building on West Front street, Monday. The attendance was large, and the business transacted was of a routine nature. Mr. R. B. Keys, the Vice President, resigned, and Mr. J. W. Jackson was elected in his place.

The Association is in a flourishing condition and bids fair to become one of the foremost of its kind in the State.

A Few Words of Warning.

Two young girls of this city were discovered on Sunday last stealing flowers from the graves of one of the city's cemeteries, and their names are in the possession of THE PRESS. They are respectable girls and, consequently, probably entirely unaware of the enormity of the offense they committed.

It would be a terrible disgrace to them and their families if THE PRESS did not withhold their names, but it is hoped that these few words alone will serve to warn them and everyone else tempted in the same way.

Beware of the Crooks.

The following received through the mail, today, will explain itself:

HADDONFIELD, N. J., May 17, 1889.

MR. EDITOR, DEAR SIR:—There is a gang of men traveling your way, selling tea and giving away soap. Their method of working is they claim that they intend opening a store in town and claim to be advertising. They promise everyone to whom they sell, a present of crockery or silverware. They purchase the tea, which is worthless, from N. Y. houses, at 8c a pound and the sweepings. The crockery, etc., never comes.

Yours, etc.
J. P. SMITH.

Memorial Day at Somerville.

May 30th promises to be a lively day in Somerville. In the morning the Third Regiment, N. G. N. J., will have an inspection and drill, which will be participated in by about five hundred citizen soldiery, and will be a sight worth seeing.

In the afternoon the G. A. R. will hold appropriate services. There will be an oration by General James F. Rusling, of Trenton, music by the Crescent Band of Raritan, and the vocal music will be in charge of A. P. Sutphen, Esq. Afterward the graves will be strewn with flowers, in which the Third Regiment will participate.

Governor Green and staff, and Gen. Bird W. Spencer have accepted invitations to be present.

Next Saturday's Nine.

The Crescent Y. M. C. A., nine of next Saturday, will be the best that can be put up. They will play the celebrated Tenth Ward club of Newark, one of the strongest amateur teams in this State.

The Crescents will have their hands full but are confident of winning. Gately will pitch and Condon will catch, which is the strongest battery, probably, that Plainfield has ever had.

Then, besides, Mr. Duke will play and that will promote confidence all through the nine and help stiffen the backs of the players.

McMurray will cover first, and Lee third; Cornwell will play short stop, and Ashworth, Demarest and McLoughlin will fill the field.

A Careless Servant Almost Destroys the House.

The interior of the kitchen of the residence of Mr. Samuel Huntington, on Franklin place, was badly burned on May 15, and the way the door casings are charred proves that before the fire was put out by the inmates, the house was in great danger of being entirely consumed.

It is said that the cause of it all was a can of turpentine that was to be used on the kitchen floor. It was put on the range to heat, the bottom melted out, and the oil caught fire and flowed off on the floor.

After a hard fight, it is supposed, the flames were quenched without alarming anyone outside of the house. No alarm was telephoned, and THE PRESS alone, besides the family, knew of it.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The City Board of Education held a meeting in the Franklin School building on West Fourth street, Monday evening.

All the members were present. The Board unanimously decided to name the new school "The Irving Building."

Mr. J. W. Murray reported on the matter of fences, and he was also appointed a Committee of one to look after the diplomas for the forthcoming commencement.

The Committee on wells and flagging reported that such work had been completed at the Monroe street school; also that the well at the Bryant building had been examined and found to be all right.

Sundry claims were presented and ordered paid. Among them was a claim from Street Commissioner Angleman of $20 for extra grading around the "Irving Building." This was returned.

Miss Bulkley made a lengthy report on the matter of night schools, which were discontinued a few weeks ago. The report told of the work accomplished while the night school was in session, the attendance, expense, etc. She stated that the scholars were anxious to have the night sessions resumed next season. Miss Bulkley was given a vote of thanks by the Board.

The State Superintendent reported that Plainfield's share of the State school tax this year is $13,762.86.

Mr. Murray was appointed a Committee to secure music for the commencement exercises. The Board also decided to offer the same prizes or awards of merit as in former years.

Judge Wadsworth was appointed to wait upon Governor Green and extend to him an invitation to be present at the graduating exercises.

The teachers in the various schools were requested to send in their applications for reappointment to the Committee on Teachers, after which the meeting adjourned.

Plainfield Bicycle Run.

There will be a Club run on Thursday, May 30, (Decoration Day), starting from Club house at 7 o'clock, A. M. Route—New Market, New Brunswick, Franklin Park, Kingston, to Princeton, (dinner); returning through Blawenburg, Plainville, Belle Meade and Somerville. Distance, 65 miles.

By order,
FRANK L. C. MARTIN, Capt.

THAT QUARTER-OF-A-MILLION HOTEL ON WASHINGTON ROCK.

Mr. James O. Carpenter, a very wealthy Brooklynite, and Mr. Charles W. Davis, one of the largest property owners in that city, were in Plainfield Thursday. They drove to Washington Rock in the morning—taking a luncheon with them—and spent a large part of the day at that most beautiful and healthful mountain spot.

Mr. Carpenter is the owner of Washington Rock, having given $4,000 for it and all the ground about the summit. The purchase was made only a short time ago, comparatively, and THE PRESS readers will remember the exclusive detailed account given them at the time of Mr. Carpenter's intentions regarding the future disposition he would make of the place.

Subsequently costly plans were prepared by one of the most celebrated architects of New York, for a mammoth and elegant hotel, 400 feet in length, that was to crown the mountain top above the rock. A photograph of this hotel now hangs in THE PRESS office for the inspection of the public.

As the presence of Mr. Carpenter in town the other day with Mr. Davis, betokened something of public interest, and their visit to the Rock assured it, they were immediately interviewed by a PRESS reporter. Mr. Carpenter said that Mr. Davis and other wealthy capitalists had become interested in his project of a quarter-of-a-million dollar hotel on the Rock, and possibly a move in the matter might be made at any time.

He would not say that the digging for the foundation would be begun this Summer, and he would not deny that work might commence within a month. In the reporter's presence, however, Mr. Carpenter asked a contractor what a road up the face of the mountain from Somerset street, could be built for. Upon being told "$5,000," Mr. Carpenter asked if it would not be better to pay $10,000.

OH! FOR A Y. M. C. A. BUILDING.

The following report of the Building Committee of the Y. M. C. A., for the year ending May 9, was read at the annual meeting of the Association held Thursday evening of last week. THE PRESS takes pleasure in finding room for the report in full, as it is creditable to the Committee, a source of pride to the city's best people, and most interesting reading to the community in general.

To the Young Men's Christian Association of Plainfield, N. J.

Your Building Committee respectfully report: On the 2nd day of February 1888 the board of Directors authorized the president to appoint a Building Committee, and a few weeks later the following were appointed to act with the president as such committee: Charles W. McCutchen, H. O. Newman, Henry A. McGee, E. St. John, D. E. Titsworth, and Charles T. Kissam. The State Convention was held in our City on April 19-21, 1888. The delegates were placed so that they could instruct our people in the building question, and the closing business session was devoted to the subject of buildings.

On May 8, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Potter entertained the friends of the association and the different phases of the question were presented by Mr. Richard C. Morse, Secretary of the International Committee, Mr. D. F. More, State Secretary, Rev. W. R. Richards, Mr. C. W. McCutchen and the President of the Association. No subscriptions were asked for at this conference, but our committee began their canvass immediately after the meeting and easily secured $11,000, before June 15. On that date the campaign was discontinued for the Summer. The work was taken up again at a committee meeting on September 18. A members' tea was held at the rooms on Oct. 16, when about eighty of our younger members subscribed $3,400. On the 18th day of October, a second parlor conference was held at the residence of James W. Jackson, when the fund was increased to $18,000.

Canvassers having been selected and a list of names compiled from poll lists, church rolls and other sources, certain men were assigned to each canvasser and regular meetings were held at which reports were rendered. Such meetings were held as follows: Nov. 17, 1888, at the residence of W. D. Murray; Nov. 27, 1888, at the residence of H. A. McGee; Dec. 11, 1888, at the residence of George G. Martin; Dec. 22, 1888, at the residence of H. R. Munger; Jan. 15, 1889, at the residence of A. B. Beers; Jan. 29, 1889, at the residence of G. W. Rockfellow; April 23, 1889, at the residence of S. F. Kimball, Oct. 18, and Feb. 8, at the Association rooms.

We now have $27,921 subscribed, by 251 persons, of which sum $4,767 have been paid in, and $1,014.60 expended, leaving a balance in a bank of 3,752.40.

After careful investigation, your committee decided to purchase the lot known as Nos. 55 and 57 East Front street, nearly opposite Peace street. This lot measures eighty-one feet front by two hundred and fifty feet in depth. The price agreed upon is $7,000, of which $1,000 have been paid. $3,000 are to be paid on or before July 1st, 1889. The remainder, $3,000 is to be paid by taking the property subject to a mortgage for that amount. This mortgage will be paid off at once, so that our property may be free and clear. Your committee desire to express publicly their appreciation of the kindness of Mr. Wm. M. Stillman, who has searched the title of the premises for us, and has undertaken to attend to all legal matters connected with the building, free of charge.

A letter has been prepared to be sent to those who have promised to subscribe but who refuse to say how much they will give. This letter will be followed by a visit from the committee, and we hope in this way to secure sufficient by July 1st, to enable us to break ground during the Summer.

Sometime ago by invitation of the young ladies, the president met with the Y. W. C. T. U. and suggested to them a plan by which they could assist us in securing a home. The plan was adopted and we understand that substantial progress is being made by them. We wish to thank them for their help.

While the results so far are considered fair by us, and are regarded as very good by association men, we still feel that our canvassers have not done their duty towards the association. A few have been faithful; most have been negligent. We are convinced that the money can be raised; and we are equally sure that the only method is personal, individual solicitation. If we can only appreciate that ground must be broken in the Summer or another year allowed to go by, we can see how important it is for each one of us to work hard during the next month.

While we are thus telling of our success and congratulating ourselves on the bright prospect of soon having a permanent abiding place, we do not forget to render thanks to Him from whom cometh "every good and every perfect gift," and we urge our members to continue their daily supplication to Him that it may be His will for our city to have a building in which the young men of Plainfield shall glorify and honor His Son, Our Savior, Jesus Christ.

Respectfully submitted,
BY THE COMMITTEE.
Plainfield, N. J., May 16, 1889.

Across the Continent.

State Senator James L. Miller of Westfield, started May 15, for a two months' trip to Portland, Ore. Senator Miller goes purely on a pleasure tour, and expects to have a good time hunting in the far West.

Friends and Temperance.

A meeting of the Friends' Temperance and Literary Society, was held in the Friends' Meeting house, corner of Peace and Third streets, May 15, with Vice President Col. John Deitrich in the chair. The warm weather probably interfered to some extent with the attendance, which was smaller than usual. Papers on temperance, were read by several of the members, after which the meeting adjourned.

Can Anything Be Done to Save Music Hall?

Music Hall stock, in small blocks, has been offered for the past two years at fifty cents on the dollar. The stockholders have never been paid in the past a cent of interest or dividend, but now it seems that possibly in future seasons in the face of the competition of the new Opera House on Second street, the stockholders of Music Hall may be assessed to keep their building cleaned, lighted and warmed.

In Place of Sewers.

Mayor Dale thinks that before the city's streets are torn up and sewers laid that are liable to back up their deadly gases in the houses, an investigation should be made of the "Engle Furnace" that is being used in other places for the consumption of all refuse and sewage matter.

The newspapers record that one of these furnaces recently consumed in one hour and 30 minutes, with one-half cord of wood, 60 dead dogs, 1 horse, 5 barrels of night soil, 5 barrels bad eggs, 30 spoiled cheeses, 40 barrels decayed vegetables, 2 loads of refuse and 15 barrels of mixed street gatherings.

300 Baptists to Meet.

The East New Jersey Baptist Association will hold its annual meeting in this city, Tuesday and Wednesday, June 4 and 5, at the Park Avenue Baptist church.

It is expected that 200 delegates will be present. Most of them will arrive on Tuesday morning. Delegates will be entertained at private homes, but lunch and supper will be served Tuesday and lunch will be served Wednesday in the church, and all provisions required will be furnished by the ladies of the church.

A committee has been appointed by the First church of Elizabeth to co-operate with the Park Avenue Baptist church.

The Rev. and Mrs. Mitchell's Tour.

The Rev. Charles B. Mitchell of the M. E. church, and Mrs. Mitchell, left this city on Friday morning for New York, where they met the five others who made up their European traveling party. They sailed Saturday morning at 8 o'clock on the Servia, of the Cunard Line, and will return the first of September on the Etruria of the same line.

The following places will be visited in the order named: Cork, Killarney Lakes, Dublin, Giant's Causeway, Belfast, Glasgow, Trossachs, Edinboro, London, Rotterdam, Hague, Amsterdam, Hanover, Berlin, Leipsic, Dresden, Vienna, Venice, Bologna, Florence, Naples, Rome, Pisa, Genoa, Milan, Italian Lakes, over Simplon Pass to Brieg, Martigny, Chamouni, Geneva, Lausanne, Berne, Thun, Interlachen, Lucerne, Righi, Basle, Strassburg, Heidelberg, Wiesbaden, down the Rhine to Cologne, Brussels, Paris, Canterbury Warwick, Stratford on Avon, Shrewsbury, Chester, Liverpool.

ANOTHER CLOSE CALL.

Thanks to kind Providence that a serious and perhaps fatal railroad accident in this city was averted, Monday evening, May 13, through the heroic efforts of one engineer on the Central Railroad, and the presence of mind of another.

The 9:13 P. M. passenger train from New York drew up at the station on time that evening, and its cargo of living freight was being deposited on the platform, when the shrill whistle of a locomotive told of approaching danger. The passengers were, of course, dumbfounded, but the more collected of the railroad employes, took in the situation at a glance. The Baltimore and Ohio fast freight was following closely behind the passenger train, and the engineer was unable to control his train. The proper signals were displayed, but onward thundered the fast freight. By-standers notified the engineer on the passenger train of the danger, and with presence of mind he opened the throttle and his train moved. It was too late, however, and just west of the Park avenue railroad crossing a collision occurred, which resulted in shattering the lamps and globes in the rear car of the passenger train, knocking a brakeman "off his pins," and damaging the coach to a considerable extent.

Fortunately there were but a few passengers on the train when it left the station here, or the accident might have proved more disastrous. So far as can be ascertained, no one is directly responsible for the collision. The engineer of each train displayed both nerve and courage, and stuck like a leech to his post of duty.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE MINISTRY.

St. Mary's church, this city, was Thursday the scene of a silver wedding, so to speak, the occasion being the twenty-fifth anniversary of Rev. P. E. Smyth's ordination to the ministry. At 10 o'clock, Rev. Father Smyth was the celebrant of a solemn high mass, assisted by Rev. Father Glennon of Asbury Park, as deacon, Rev. Father O'Connor, a professor in Seton Hall College, as sub-deacon, and Rev. Father O'Connell of Bound Brook, as master of ceremonies. Rev. Father O'Connor followed with an eloquent sermon on the Priesthood, in which he alluded in touching terms to Father Smyth's labors here.

During the service Rev. Father Stafford sang "Ave Maria" at the offertory, and the boy choir rendered special music, under the leadership of Mr. David Lyon, the organist.

After the service in the church a banquet was held at the pastor's residence, at which there were present a number of invited guests including the following: Messrs James, Benjamin and Michael Coleman of New York, Dr. Brown and wife of Yonkers, Miss Fannie Reilly and the Misses Farrelly of Morristown, Miss Rose Tighe and Miss Annie Coleman of New York, Rev. Father Freeman of North Plainfield, and several others from this city. Father Smyth was the recipient of many elegant and costly gifts.

Twenty-five years ago, or in 1864, Rev. P. E. Smyth was ordained in Maynooth College, Ireland. Several years later he came to this country and was adopted by the Bishop of Newark. At one time he was on the mission in Washington, N. J., where he was instrumental in erecting two churches. Later he was pastor of St. Bridget's church in Jersey City.

He came to Plainfield about six years ago, and the result of his labors here is apparent to almost every one. During his pastorate here the church debt has been reduced at the rate of $4,000 annually, the membership has increased to 2,000 with a total of about 375 in the Sunday school. Father Smyth has also erected the new parochial school in this city, which has been forever dedicated to the dissemination and spread of knowledge. Surely he has labored faithfully since he came to Plainfield.

Election of Officers.

At the annual meeting of the managers of the Dime Savings Institution, held on Tuesday last week, the following officers were elected:

President—John W. Murray.
Vice Presidents—William White, Nathan Harper.

Plainfield Represented at the I. O. G. T. District Convention.

A large delegation from Alpha Lodge, No. 4, of this city, Independent Order of Good Templars, was present at the meeting of the district lodge in Newark, May 14, and Mr. J. B. Naylor of the Plainfield lodge, Asst. State Deputy, made one of the addresses.

The convention was held in the W. C. T. U. rooms, and attended by representatives from eight lodges of Union and Essex counties. Addresses were also delivered by Chief Templar H. C. Humphrey of Lakewood, and State Deputy, W. A. Riley of Newark.

An Everyday Record.

Counting a column of stuff in Thursday night's news about who wrote that hoary chestnut song, "Ben Bolt"—THE PRESS of yesterday had thirty-four inches more of space devoted to local matter than the news.

Among the exclusive news THE PRESS contained, were accounts of: The railroad collision near the Park avenue bridge;

The route of the Rev. Mr. Mitchell's tour in Europe;

Plainfield's new Opera House;

Opening of The Netherwood, and its staff;

Plainfield's representation at the I. O. G. T. Convention;

Mr. Noah W. Pike Robbed by a Clever Sneak Thief.

Learning that the house of Mr. N. W. Pike on East Front street, had been robbed, a PRESS reporter interviewed Mr. Pike and received the following story:

During the early Spring a stranger ingratiated himself in the confidence of the officers of the Y. M. C. A., through prayer and exhortation and a zealous intent to live a strictly religious life.

Armed with a recommendation from the Secretary he applied for employment with Street Commissioner Geo. Angleman, and he sent him to work for Mr. N. W. Pike.

The man attentively did his task the first day, and the following morning Mr. Pike paid him and directed him to do certain work in his absence, and handed him a key to be given to the house cleaners when they came. Mr. Pike went to New York, and his family being absent for recreation and health, the man entered the house, dressed himself in a suit of fine clothes, took an extra pair of pants, Mr. Pike's watch, and in all about one hundred and twenty dollars worth of clothing and jewelry and a new derby hat, leaving his own in the cellar where he made the change.

Mr. Pike returned and found the house locked on the inside and having his suspicions aroused, entered by the lower door and discovered the above facts and informed the police.

Items of Interest to the Methodists Especially.

We clip the items below from last week's Visitor—the farewell number published by the Rev. C. B. Mitchell of the M. E. church, previous to his departure for Europe.

This will be the last VISITOR until the pastor's return.

Mr. John Weir and wife sail next week for Scotland. They will visit the Paris Exhibition before their return.

Mr. Charles E. Cokefair, wife and son Frank, have been visiting friends here. They will return permanently in the Autumn.

Mr. Harry French will take charge of Mrs. Chas. B. Mitchell's Sunday school class during the Summer.

Rev. J. B. VanMeter, D. D., is very happy in his college work, and his host of friends in this city rejoice to learn of his eminent success in Baltimore.

Dr. Hurlbut will soon be gone for the Summer, attending the various Chautauquas with which he is prominently connected.

Rev. G. T. Reynolds, of the Pittsburgh Conference, stationed at Wellsburg, W. Va., will fill the pulpit during July and August. He and wife will occupy the parsonage. Mr. Reynolds will conduct the prayer meetings, and make pastoral calls on the sick when so requested. He is a young minister of high standing in his Conference, and his ministry has been unusually successful. The pastor rejoices in securing so good a supply during his absence. Mr. Reynolds is expecting a pleasant and useful Summer in Plainfield, and he will not be disappointed.

Mr. George Angleman, Jr., was licensed to preach at our last Quarterly Conference. He will leave soon to take charge of a circuit in Kansas. Many wishes and prayers for his success in the ministry will follow him to his next field in the West.

Next Sunday morning and evening Dr. Butts will preach. June 2, Dr. Hurlbut, and June 9, Dr. Brice. It is expected that Dr. Payne and Bishop Andrews will also preach in June. The other supplies up to the first Sunday in July will be duly announced.

The Sunday school last Sunday with waving handkerchiefs tendered Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell a beautiful farewell. The kind faces and "white lilies" of that Sunday afternoon will follow them in memory through their long pilgrimage.

Rev. A. H. Tuttle, D. D., has made a fine impression at Mt. Vernon Place M. E. church, Baltimore. The large church is crowded, and he is attracting the leading thinkers of that city. This will be no surprise to his many friends and admirers in Plainfield.

Take Your Choice.

Wiggins has broken off with the prediction of a dry, hot Summer, and what little rain comes is to come from a northerly direction. On the contrary DeVoe predicts a wet Summer, with plenty of rain until August. Take your choice.

Plainfield Browning Club.

The members of the Plainfield Browning club will discuss "The Statue and the Bust," at the Chautauqua rooms, on Tuesday, June 11, at 8 P. M. Among those who will take part are the following: Miss Stout, Miss Sutphen, Mr. Larrabee, Mrs. Scribner, Miss French, Mrs. Goddard, Miss Bulkley, Mr. Goodrich and Mr. Joy.

A Chance for the "Crescent" Bowlers.

The team that has been selected by Capt. James Davis of the Plainfield Bowling Club, to roll the return match with the Crescent Bowling Club, Thursday evening, is as follows—subject, however, to changes:

Carey, Haven, Thiers, Huntsman, D. Adams, C. VanWinkle, M. Day, S. Smith, Andrews and Davis.

At Warren Mission Chapel.

The inclement weather did not materially decrease the attendance at the evening service in Warren Mission chapel on Sunday evening. Councilman Dunham's choristers opened the meeting with a short service of song, after which Mr. Winifred S. Powell, who recently took up his residence in North Plainfield, conducted the devotional exercises.

A Warning to the "news."

The grand jury finished their labors Tuesday, and were discharged. Thirty-four bills of indictment were found including one against the Netherwood Hotel servant girl thief.

Editor Drake of the Elizabeth Leader was also indicted, and it will go hard with him. THE PRESS trusts this will serve as a warning to the Plainfield news.

A Gift to St. Mary's Church.

Members of the Vandon family in North Plainfield have generously donated a handsome black walnut pulpit, which is to be located in St. Mary's church, this city. On Sunday afternoon next at three o'clock, Bishop O'Farrell of Trenton, will bless the new pulpit and preach an appropriate sermon. This latest donation to St. Mary's church is a valuable addition to the pulpit furniture.

Most Deserved Appreciation.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted at the annual meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association, Thursday evening last:

Resolved, That this Association hereby publicly expresses its sincere and hearty appreciation of the faithful labors of our beloved General Secretary, J. H. Manning, to whom to so great a degree, under God's blessing, the success of our Association during the past year has depended, and to whom we extend our fraternal greeting and Christian encouragement.

J. A. ROBINSON, Secretary.

That New Pitcher.

Gately, the new pitcher of the Y. M. C. A. Crescents, is a rising one and gives promise of being one day famous. He is steadily improving, and already possesses some of the most marvelous curves. In one original curve of his own, the ball after leaving his hand takes a shoot out towards the batter and appears about to strike him in the side, but as it reaches him and he dodges, the ball turns in and cuts a straight line directly over the plate.

Gately is only 20 years of age, and is now attending school at Washington Heights, in the upper part of New York city. He is practicing pitching every day and hopes to be skillful enough when he is graduated to secure a position in the box of a league club. He is a batter, also, which is unusual in a pitcher.

Mr. Wilson's Opera.

"The Oolah" at the Broadway theatre has developed into three hours of delightfully uproarious laughter, and Francis Wilson has permanently resumed his position as the principal fun-manufacturer of the Metropolis. The opera may be set down as occupying a very enviable position on the border line between opera-bouffe and comic opera proper, and in this field it will prove more than welcome wherever and whenever it may be seen. It is generally conceded that no operatic production has ever been so magnificently mounted and costumed, and the stage pictures are a constant glow of Persian splendor and sumptuousness. Mr. Wilson is seen at his best as the Oolah, and the support he receives from Miss Marie Jansen, Laura Moore, Elma Delaro, and Hubert Wilke is of the most acceptable character. "The Oolah" is filling the big Broadway theatre nightly, and will continue to do so all Summer.

PLAINFIELD'S NEW OPERA HOUSE.

Plans and specifications are completed for a new Opera House to be erected on Second street, West of Park avenue, as soon as the contracts are signed.

It will occupy the large lot at the corner of Pruden's alley, where the house formerly occupied by the Rev. N. E. Smith, has just been torn down.

The building, 65 by 100 feet, of which Mr. James Oakley is the architect, is to have two stores facing on Second street, with apartments directly over them, and lodge rooms above of which two are already leased.

The Opera House will be back of the stores on the ground level, and will have three exits into Pruden's alley. The main entrance will be on Second street through a spacious hall between the stores.

A commodious stage will be built. The auditorium will seat about 700. The chairs will be movable so that the room can be cleared and rented for fairs, festivals, balls and many other entertainments. Mr. Charles H. Hand is the owner and builder.

HEALTH SUGGESTIONS.

The Plainfield Board Offer the Following, That Everybody Should Read.

The rapid advance of warm weather should lead every person to put the house and premises in good sanitary condition without delay.

1. Ashes and rubbish should immediately be removed from the premises, especially the cellar.

2. Whitewash and ventilate thoroughly; do not have dampness or dirt anywhere around the house.

3. Be sure the cesspool and the vault are in order and properly ventilated.

4. Do not have any defective plumbing; see that water pipes, sewer pipes and traps are in good order. A bucket of boiling water, with two or three tablespoons full of potash is excellent for cleaning waste pipes from basins, baths and closets.

5. Open wells should be cleaned by a proper person, and driven wells should be sunk deeper if the water is the least objectionable.

6. Sheds, stables and out buildings should be cleaned and whitewashed when practicable. Accumulations of manure should not remain near any dwellings.

7. Cesspools and all vaults must be cleaned when necessary; never cover up an old one and dig another.

8. Stagnant water and rotting vegetable matter must not exist on the premises.

The Inspector of the Board of Health will give advice and assistance freely in all cases of nuisance, and where assistance is wanted.

—The examination by Miss Bulkley of the classes of the public schools, is now going on.

—The Tenth Ward club of Newark that is to play the Crescents, Saturday, won 19 of the 24 games it played last season with some of the best nines.

—Dog-catcher Babbitt, Wednesday, accidentally gathered in an unmuzzled dog belonging to one of the special police. This was a mistake, and the dog-catcher should be more careful in the future.

—The Unitarian services will hereafter be held in Mr. Henry Shepherd's music rooms, 17 East Front street. Next Sunday's meeting will be at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The Rev. Mr. Morehouse may be the speaker again.
